to the children—none whatever; and their power to postpone was not, to my mind, couched in such terms as to give them that right. De facto there never was a time when they professed or thought that they would exercise their power to postpone. De jure, it cannot be assumed that they did exercise their power in this unequal manner, because unequal it would be, between the tenant for life and the remaindermen. In the case referred to of Johnstone v. Moore, Wood, V.C., came to a conclusion which was inevitable from the will. There I think the portion of the personal estate outstanding consisted of an interest in a business. There had been a partnership and the trustees de facto allowed that portion to remain outstanding. Now, unless they were grossly ignorant of the law (and we must attribute to them knowledge of it) they must have known that they had no power primâ facie to leave it outstanding; but in the will is contained a power to postpone the realization, and it was assumed, and as I think rightly and necessarily assumed, that they had done so in the exercise of their power, and the rights of the tenant for life and remaindermen were adjusted upon that basis. I have no doubt of that. But it does not prove (and I do not think it is the law) that if it turns out in a matter in which the trustees were really ignorant that what has been done might have been done under a power in the will it should be deemed to have been so done. I think great injustice would often be done by that result, and although I have already explained my opinion that it could not properly have been done at all, yet I do not think it ought to be assumed that that did take place which we know on the evidence did not take place. I will not say more about the case. I think I have dealt with all the points that are really of importance. I will only say this, that if I had to deal simply with the question of construction I should have hesitated a good deal before I came to the conclusion that Stirling, J., was wrong in treating Mackie v. Mackie as a decision covering this case. It is not necessary to say anything from my point of view about that, and I must be held not to express any opinion about it. But upon the facts which are before us, and which were not before Stirling, J., I have no hesitation in saying that I cannot consider there was any thing which would entitle the residuary legatees to say, "Oh, we must be deemed to have exercised our power and to have exercised it equitably, and the result follows that we have not got to pay anything out of the proceeds in court of the £5,666." On all the facts of the case I think that such a conclusion would be absolutely wrong. However, again the trustees have behaved very properly and fairly. They say: "We will put the facts before you." I do not mean to say they would have done anything else, but they have acted in a very fair spirit. They say: "We will put before you such statements as may be in our favour, but the court will judge of them"; and as far as I can see, they have done that very fairly. In an ingenious argument it was suggested that upon the state of facts so appearing they were entitled to hold this money. I have said nothing about what would really be the case if they were actually asserting a right adversely. I do not consider it to be an adverse assertion. They very fairly have told us what has taken place; but from their position as trustees and solicitors I think they would have many difficulties to get over, which at present do not seem to arise.

COLLINS, L.J.—I agree, and I have nothing to add to the reasons already given by the other members of the court.

Solicitors, Hare & Co.; Walters, Deverell, & Co.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. }
Kekewich, J. } June 13, 14.

HALL v. DUKE OF NORFOLK AND OTHERS. (a.)

Mine — Subsidence — Damage — Liability for acts of predecessor in title.

An action for damages done by subsidence caused by working a mine is a personal action, which determines on the death of the owner, and cannot be brought against a trustee or lessee who has not actively caused the subsidence.

This was an action brought by Mr. John Hall, the owner in fee of the Manor House, Overseal, Ashby-de-la-Zouch, against the Duke of Norfolk, as executor and trustee of the late Lord Donington, Messrs. Wilkinson, Newton, & Spalding, and the Moira Colliery Co. (Limited), claiming (1) to have it ascertained what damage the plaintiff's house had suffered by reason of the working out of the main coal seam in the adjoining Moira Colliery of the defendants; (2) a declaration that the defendants were liable to make good such damage; and (3) payment accordingly.

It appeared that in the years 1889, 1890, and 1891 the late Lord Donington worked the seam. On the 2nd of April, 1892, Lord Donington made his will appointing the Duke of Norfolk, Mr. George Edward Lake, and the Hon. G. T. C. Rawdon Hastings executors and trustees thereof.

On the 24th of July, 1895, Lord Donington died, and his will was proved by the Duke of Norfolk and G. E. Lake, the other executor renouncing probate.

The Duke of Norfolk and G. E. Lake carried on the business of the colliery until the 1st of October, 1895, and afterwards as agents for the defendants Wilkinson, Newton, & Spalding, the lessees of the colliery under a lease of the 16th of November, 1895, for twenty-one years, and on the 20th of November, 1895, the Moira Colliery Co. (Limited) was formed, and the lease and the interests under it, were assigned to the defendant company.

There was no covenant on the part of the lessees to prevent damage by subsidence.

In November, 1895, a subsidence occurred, and the plaintiff brought this action, Mr. Lake having in the meantime died.

The defence was that the defendants had not actively caused the damage, and were not therefore liable.

P. O. Lawrence, Q.C., and MacSwinney, for the plaintiff, contended that the decision of Bruce, J., in Greenwell v. Low Beechburn Coal Co., [1897] 2 Q. B. 165, 45 W. R. Dig. 82, was inconsistent with the decision of the House of Lords in Darley Main Colliery Co. v. Mitchell, 11 App. Cas. 127, 34 W. R. Dig. 108, and referred to Rex v. Pedly, 1 A. & E. 822; Todd v. Flight, 9 W. R. 145, 9 C. B. N. S. 377; Gandy v. Jubber, 13 W. R. 1022, 9 B. & S. 15; Pretty v. Bickmore, 21 W. R. 733, L. R. 8 C. P. 401; Attorney-General v. Tod-Heatley, 45 W. R. 394, [1897] 1 Ch. 560.

Warrington, Q.C., and Kenyon Parker, for the trustees, argued that Darley Main Colliery v. Mitchell was only a decision as to the Statute of Limitations, and not as to who was a wrong-doer, and referred to Jordeson v. Sutton, &c., Gas Co., 47 W. R. 222, [1899] 2 Ch. 217.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Renshaw, Q.C., and Ashton Cross, for the lessees, contended that there was no negligence or omission of duty on the part of the lessees which could render them liable.

Lawrence, Q.C., replied.

KEKEWICH, J., said that some years ago, in 1889-1891, Lord Donington worked the coal, which he had a perfect right to do. Some years after, towards the end of 1895, the working of the coal caused a subsidence which injured the plaintiff's house, in respect of which injury he was entitled to recover damages if he could find the person who according to law was liable. It was not proved exactly when the damage first accrued, but it appeared on the evidence that it did not occur until after November, 1895, when the colliery was demised by the Duke of Norfolk and his co-trustee to the other defendants. The plaintiff endeavoured to recover damages against Lord Donington's estate, but that action failed on the ground that it was a personal action which determined with the death of Lord Donington. He now seeks to recover against the trustees and the lessees. The executors and trustees worked the coal themselves for a few months under a power in the will and must for that purpose as between them and the plaintiff be treated as owners. They then demised the colliery to the defendants Wilkinson, Newton, & Spalding. It was not suggested that anything done by the trustees or by the lessees caused the subsidence. That was traceable, though not perhaps by very direct steps, to the working of the seam by Lord Donington himself during the years 1889-1891. The damage did not occur till towards the end of 1895, and according to settled law the right of action did not accrue till then; there was therefore no question of the Statute of Limitations. If the plaintiff had sued the right defendants he was entitled to recover. The question was whether the defendants were liable for allowing the nuisance to continue on their land which had caused damage to the plaintiff. In the case of Greenwell v. Low Beechburn Coal Co. Bruce, J., considered the question which I have here to decide and decided against the plaintiff and in favour of the defendants. It was said that the decision of Bruce, J., was not consistent with that in Darley Main Colliery Co. v. Mitchell, and therefore I think that it is my duty not to treat the point as concluded by authority, but to examine the question for myself. Unless controlled by the decision in Darley Main Colliery Co. v. Mitchell, or by the opinion of Lord Blackburn, I am not at liberty to create a new right of action—that is to say, a right of action which has never yet been recognized in a court of law. Having read the judgment of Bruce, J., I entirely agree with it. Bruce, J., pointed out that there was no reported case bearing upon the point, and, therefore, to allow the plaintiff's claim would be to create a new cause of action. He said ([1897] 2 Q. B., at p. 177): "Unless they are under an obligation to prevent the consequences of an act done by their predecessor in title, they have not been guilty of any omission of duty for which they can be rendered liable. It is suggested that the excavated strata left without artificial support amounted to a nuisance, but I do not think it did. Until the actual subsidence happened there was nothing unlawful in the state in which the land was left. At no moment prior to the subsidence can it be said that there was any duty upon anyone to provide artificial support; and therefore it seems to me that it cannot be said that the defendants are guilty of a default of duty in allowing a state of things to continue which was a perfectly lawful state of things." That passage is fully borne out by the opinion of Lord Bramwell in Darley Main Colliery Co. v. Mitchell, and those were the lines upon which he was bound to decide this case. Bruce, J., was not without authority on the question of duty. [His lordship then referred to Todd v. Flight, Rex v. Pedly, Pretty v. Bickmore, and Rich v. Basterfield, 4 C. B. 783, and said that unless some distinction could be made through Darley Main Colliery Co. v. Mitchell, and it could be shown that Bruce, J., misunderstood that case, this action must fail. In that case the House of Lords decided that there was a new cause of action with each new subsidence. That was the whole of the decision in that case. His lordship then considered the judgment of Lord Blackburn, and came to the conclusion that it was an expression of opinion directly contrary to the present plaintiff and not in his favour.] On the point of law, therefore, I am of opinion that the plaintiff's case fails. That being so, I need not distinguish between the defendants nor go into the question whether they might have done something to prevent the mischief. There was no evidence to show that if the cavity had been filled up the subsidence would not have happened, and therefore I would have decided against the plaintiff on that point also.

Judgment for defendants with costs.

Solicitors, Woodcock, Ryland, & Parker, for Woodcock & Sons, Haslingden; Wordsworth, Blake, & Co.; Kingsford, Dorman, & Co., for Smith, Mammatt, Hale, & Quarrell, Ashby-de-la-Zouch.

---

Chan. Div.
Byrne, J. } March 20.

In re BOOTH.
PICKARD v. BOOTH. (a.)

Will—Construction—Gift of real estate to A., but, should she die without child or children, gift over—Executory limitation—Conveyancing Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 39), s. 10.

A gift of real estate to A. for her absolute use—but, should she die without child or children, then over—vests in A. an absolute interest subject to an executory limitation over in the event of her not having any child who survives her or attains twenty-one years during her life.

Summons.

This was an originating summons to determine a point of construction in the will of William Booth, of Sheffield, who died on the 21st of November, 1897.

The facts were as follows:

By his will testator devised and bequeathed his estate, which was principally freehold, to be divided into three parts, and continued as follows: "One half of the whole estate to Helena Swain for her own absolute use, subject to no control of any husband, but should she die without child or children, then her share to be divided equally between S. H. Booth and W. B. Stather, and should W. B. Stather die without coming into possession, his share shall be equally divided amongst William Booth, Ebenezer Booth, and Lily Owen, my nephews and niece, or their representatives. The remaining half of the estate to be equally divided between S. H. Booth (my brother) and William Booth Stather. Should my brother S. H. Booth die, his share to be divided equally between or amongst his three children, W. Booth,

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Ebenezer Booth, and Lily Owen, or their representatives."

On the 2nd of August, 1898, the court held on an originating summons that Helena Pickard (formerly Helena Swain) was entitled absolutely to one moiety of the testator's estate, subject to the said gift over in the said will contained in the event of her death without child or children. At that time Mrs. Pickard had no child.

On the 23rd of April she had a child born called Leonard Swain Pickard.

This summons, in which Mrs. Pickard was plaintiff and S. H. Booth and W. B. Stather were defendants, asked for the determination of the question: Whether the plaintiff upon the birth of her child became absolutely entitled to one moiety of the testator's residuary real and personal estate?

Rowden, Q.C., and Hatfield Green, for the plaintiff.—The case is not exactly covered by any authority, but it is clear that since a child has been born that the plaintiff will not die without a child. It is indifferent for this purpose whether or not the child survives her. In case of doubt the court always leans to vesting an interest as soon as possible: Bacon v. Cosby, 4 De. G. & Sm. 261.

O. Leigh Clare and G. B. Freeman, for the defendants.—According to the Wills Act (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 29, the expression die without issue means die without issue living at the death, and by analogy this would mean die without having had a child. [They referred to Jeffreys v. Connor, 8 W. R. 572, 28 Beav. 328; In re Hambleton, [1884] W. N. 157; Thicknesse v. Liege, 3 Bro. Parl. Cas. 365; Hughes v. Sayer, 1 P. Wms. 534.] We ask for a declaration under the Conveyancing Act, 1882, s. 10.

Rowden, Q.C., replied.

BYRNE, J.—The question is whether the words "should she die without child or children" mean should she die without having had a child or children, or should she die without a child or children living at death. The words used are ambiguous, and it is said on the one side that the authorities are in favour of construing the words so as to mean without a child or children living at the death. On the other hand it is submitted that the general rule in favour of making estates vest as soon as possible should be followed. The authorities are not of very much use. Jeffreys v. Connor, which is the nearest, is open to the criticism that there occurred in the same will an expression which showed that the testator meant "die without ever having had children." I am therefore thrown back on the words of the will, and I think that the true meaning of the words "die without child or children" is "die without child or children then living," that is, living at the date of death. The words are not free from difficulty, but this seems to be the best construction that I can put on them.

Declare that the plaintiff is now absolutely entitled to one-half of the estate, subject to an executory gift over in favour of the defendants, in the event of her not having any child who shall survive her or attain twenty-one years in her lifetime.

Solicitors. Peacock & Goddard, for Younge, Wilson, & Co., Sheffield.

---

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } March 16.

In re QUEEN'S HOTEL CO., CARDIFF (LIMITED).
In re VERNON TIN PLATE CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Practice—Costs—Debenture-holder's action—Insufficient assets.

Where the assets in a debenture-holder's action were sufficient to pay off the first debenture-holders in full, but not sufficient to pay the second and third debenture-holders in full,

Held, that the plaintiff in the action was only entitled to party and party costs.

These two actions were brought by certain debenture-holders, on behalf of all the holders of debentures of the same class, in order to realize their security.

Both the defendant companies were in liquidation, and the only available assets were the properties comprised in the debentures.

The greater portion of these properties had been already sold, and the money paid into court.

There were two series of debentures in the Queen's Hotel Co.'s case, both secured by covering and trust deeds. The first series was held by the plaintiffs, and the second series by another firm. The greater part of the property had been realized in the action, and the proceeds were more than sufficient to cover the principal, interest, and costs in the first series of debentures, and the principal and interest had been paid.

There was some doubt whether the property not realized would cover the principal and interest of the second series of debentures.

A summons had been taken out by the plaintiffs for the taxation of their costs and the costs of the trustees of the covering deed as between solicitor and client. In the plaintiffs' costs there was also included the charges and expenses properly incurred as mortgagees, and in the trustees' costs any charges properly incurred.

There were three series of debentures in the Vernon Tin Plate Co.'s case, but no covering deed. The property had been realized, and the proceeds were sufficient to cover the principal, interest, and costs in the first series of debentures, but not enough to pay the principal and interest in the second series.

The plaintiffs claimed solicitor and client costs. The two cases came on for hearing together on the summons.

Stewart Smith, for the plaintiffs in the first action.—The position of a debenture-holder suing on behalf of himself and others is analagous with that of a creditor suing on behalf of himself and others in an administration action. In the latter case it is the settled practice that where the estate is deficient the plaintiff gets his costs as between solicitor and client: In re McRea, Norden v. McRea, 32 Ch. D. 613, 34 W. R. Dig. 47.

Counsel also referred to the cases of Thomas v. Jones, 8 W. R. 328, 1 Dr. & Sm. 134, and Wade v. Ward, 7 W. R. 542, 4 Drew. 602.

J. G. Wood, for the plaintiffs in the second action.—In the second action there was no trust deed and the security could only be realized by one debenture-holder bringing an action on the part of all. A foreclosure action could not be brought unless every single debenture-holder was a party: In re Continental Oxygen Co., 45 W. R. 313, [1897] 1 Ch. 511. The analogy was therefore to be drawn with administration proceedings and not with proceedings for foreclosure.

---

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Eustace Smith, for the second debenture-holders in the first action.

G. S. Alexander, for second and third debenture-holders in the second action.

J. S. Green, for trustees.

COZENS-HARDY, J., said that the question really was, what were the rights of a mortgagee plaintiff in dealing with the mortgaged property in a suit. A mortgagee plaintiff was only entitled to party and party costs of action; though he asked for sale and not for foreclosure. Although the mortgaged property would be realized by sale, the plaintiff would only be entitled to principal and interest and party and party costs. It makes no difference that the plaintiff was suing on behalf of all the others of the same rank as himself. In the unreported case of Industrial and General Trust (Limited) v. South American and Mexican Co., which came before Romer, J., in chambers, the same point was discussed. An application was there made for solicitor and client costs, and also for taxation on the higher scale. The following note of the decision was supplied by the master: "I will not depart from the usual practice, which it is admitted before me is this, tax the costs between party and party; and I see no reason for taxing costs on the higher scale. If I made any exception in this case, and gave solicitor and client costs and costs on a higher scale, I should have to do so in every case." This decision was exactly in point. There was said to be an analogy between this action and an action for the administration of the estate of a deceased person, where a plaintiff creditor might be entitled to solicitor and client costs. But the analogy did not apply, and no exception could be made in the present case; therefore, the plaintiffs would only be entitled to party and party costs of action.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs in the first action, Munns & Longden; Bell, Brodrick, & Gray, for Cousins, Botsford, & Phœnix, Cardiff, for the trustees.

Solicitors for defendants, Smiles & Co.

Solicitors in second action, Munns & Longden, for H. P. Charles, Neath, for plaintiffs; Tamplin, Tayler, & Joseph, for defendants.

---

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } Feb. 15, 16, 24.

In re MAUDSLAY, SONS, & FIELD.
MAUDSLAY v. MAUDSLAY, SONS, & FIELD. (a.)

Company—Debenture-holders—Receiver—Debt due from French company—Unsecured creditor—Attachment of French debt—Contempt of court.

Receivers were appointed in three actions by debenture-holders of all the property of an English company, the defendants in the action. Among the assets of the company was a debt due from a French firm. After the date of the appointment of receivers, another English company, P. & Co., holding a dishonoured acceptance of the defendant company, took proceedings in France and according to French law to attach the debt due from the French firm. The plaintiffs in the debenture-holders' action moved to restrain P. & Co. from obtaining payment of this debt.

Held, that, although the debenture-holders had, according to English law, a charge upon all the assets of the company, including the French debt, yet there was no equity in favour of the debenture-holders as against P. & Co., and the debenture-holders could not restrain P. & Co. from asserting and enforcing their rights according to French law.

Held, further, that, though receivers had been appointed, the mere order of the court did not put the receivers in possession of the foreign property; something else had to be done, and until that had been done in accordance with foreign law, any person not a party to the suit who took proceedings in a foreign country was not guilty of contempt.

This was a motion for an order to restrain an English firm, Thomas Piggott & Co., from obtaining payment of a debt due to Maudslay, Sons, & Field (also an English firm) from a French firm, Delaunay, Belleville, & Cie.

The facts were as follows:

By an order made by the Vacation Judge on the 11th of October, 1899, in three actions by debenture-holders, receivers were appointed of the undertaking and of the property whatsoever and wheresoever, both present and future, of the defendant company, comprised in certain securities therein mentioned. The company had not been wound up.

The claimants, Thomas Piggott & Co., were the holders of a dishonoured acceptance of the company. Among the assets of the company was a debt due from a French firm, Delaunay & Cie.

The claimants registered in Paris the dishonoured bill of exchange, and served on Delaunay & Cie., on the 25th of November, 1899, a certain document, the effect of which and of a subsequent document was fully explained by the affidavit of the French advocates, which all parties agreed to accept, in the following terms:

"According to French law a debt can be assigned or charged, but in order to be operative as against third parties (which denomination includes the creditors' own creditors) it is imperative (1) that the assignment or charge should be by instrument in writing; (2) that the ad valorem registration duty should have been paid thereon; and (3) that formal notice in writing of the assignment or charge should after such registration be served upon the debtor by an officer of the French court called or named a huissier. This formal notice can be replaced by the debtor's formal acknowledgment of the assignment or charge in a notarial French deed; when these requirements have been complied with and not before, the transferee acquires a legal title to the debt as against third parties, as from the date of the formal notice. An assignment or charge of a debt not perfected by registration and subsequent notice to the debtor passes no title whatever to the debt, as against third parties, including the assignors' own creditors.

"We are informed that the above-named plaintiffs claim to hold debentures or debenture stock issued by the defendant company in a form purporting to charge all the property of the defendant company whatsoever and wheresoever, present and future, which by English law comprises the money payable or to become payable to the defendant company by Messrs. Delaunay, Belleville, & Cie. under their agreement with the defendant company.

"We say that, in the absence of registration and notice as aforesaid, any debentures or debenture stock have not according to French law passed to the holders thereof, the moneys payable or to become payable to the defendant company from Messrs. Delaunay, Belleville, & Cie. under the agreement, or given to them any charge upon or interest in the same as against third parties as aforesaid.

"We are further informed that receivers or sequestrators of all the property comprised in the said debentures or debenture stock have been appointed by this court on behalf of the said debenture or debenture stock holders. We say that according to French law the said receivers or sequestrators as such have no right whatever to receive the above-mentioned moneys, and could not recover the same, and would receive no recognition whatever in the French court as against attaching creditors. According to French law, any creditor, whether French or foreign, who seeks to enforce his claim on a debt owing in France can only do so in accordance with French law, irrespective of the cause of action and of the place where it arose. According to French law any creditor, whether French or foreign, can, if he holds an acknowledgment of debt signed by his debtor, such as a bill or acceptance, attach in the hands of a third party the sum or bills which may belong to his debtor, and thus prevent the same from being handed over to him. No judge's authority is required, nor is it necessary that the creditor, if foreign, should be entitled to follow the same course in his own country, French law disregarding entirely foreign laws in matters of procedure, which are exclusively governed by the lex fori.

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

"We have perused the document now produced to us and marked 'B,' which is a copy certified by the process server of the proceedings taken at the request of Thomas Piggott & Co. (Limited). These proceedings comprise the attachment (opposition), notice of attachment (dénonciation d'opposition), and counter notice of attachment (contre-dénonciation d'opposition), and have been taken in accordance with French law and constitute an attachment in due form upon which Messrs. Thomas Piggott & Co. (Limited) are entitled to rely to force their claims against the moneys payable or to become payable to the defendant company by Messrs. Delaunay, Belleville, & Cie. The notice of attachment contains a citation for the defendant company to appear before the Tribunal Civil of the Seine, who has alone jurisdiction to declare the attachment valid and order the funds attached to be paid over to the attaching creditors. According to French law when the judgment declaring an attachment valid has become final it operates as an assignment of the funds attached to the attaching creditor, who is entitled to recover the same from the party owing the same, notwithstanding any subsequent attachments. As long as the judgment declaring the attachment valid has not become final any other creditor could follow the same course as the one followed by Messrs. Thomas Piggott & Co. (Limited), if they have an acknowledgment of debt as aforesaid, and in this case all attachments would rank pari passu, the date of the respective attachments giving no cause of preference. When several attachments are notified it is often the practice of the person receiving the attachments to pay the funds he holds into the Caisse des Depots et Consignations subject to the attachments, so as to assure a legal distribution of the same."

The motion now came on for argument on the question whether the claimants were or were not entitled to payment out of the fund in court (the receivers pursuant to an order made by North, J., on the 21st of December, 1899, having paid the sum of £530 into court). It was arranged that, if necessary, the claimants should be treated as applying for liberty to proceed, notwithstanding the appointment of receivers.

Vernon Smith, Q.C., and Romer, for the plaintiffs.—The receiver is the receiver of all the property charged in favour of the debenture-holders, inclusive of this French debt. It is an interference with the receiver if an English creditor goes to France and attempts to get hold of property which the receiver would have in England. The court will not allow it. The charge must be governed by the law of this country: Story on Conflict of Laws (8th ed.), p. 559. A chose in action has no locality: Lee v. Abdy, 34 W. R. 653, 17 Q. B. D. 309. Having a good charge under English law the court will prevent any other creditor interfering with the rights of the plaintiff: In re Queensland Mercantile and Agency Co., 39 W. R. 447, [1891] 1 Ch. 536, [1892] 1 Ch. 219, 40 W. R. Dig. 55; Alcock v. Smith, [1892] 1 Ch. 238, 40 W. R. Dig. 25.

The following cases were also referred to: Liverpool Marine Credit Co. v. Hunter, 15 W. R. 758, L. R. 4 Eq. 62; Mercantile Investment and General Trust Co. v. River Plate Trust, Loan, and Agency Co., [1892] 2 Ch. 303, 40 W. R. Dig. 105; In re Alabama, New Orleans, Texas, and Pacific Junction Railway Co., [1891] 1 Ch. 213, 39 W. R. Dig. 49.

Theobold, Q.C., and Dunham, for Thomas Piggott & Co. (Limited).—The receiver, though appointed receiver of all the assets of the company, is not appointed receiver of the assets in France, which is outside the jurisdiction of the court. There has been no contempt of court, but if there has been a technical contempt we ought to have leave to continue the action in France: Lane v. Capsey, 40 W. R. 87, [1891] 3 Ch. 411.

Counsel also referred to the following cases: Cook v. Gregson, 2 W. R. 401, 2 Drew. 286; Pardo v. Bingham, 17 W. R. 419, L. R. 4 Ch. App. 735; In re Klœbe, 33 W. R. 391, 28 Ch. D. 175; In re Doetsch, 45 W. R. 57, [1896] 2 Ch. 836.

Vernon Smith, Q.C., replied.

COZENS-HARDY, J., stated the facts and said: I must decide this case on the footing that the parties now occupy the same position as they did on the 21st of December. At that date Thomas Piggott & Co. (Limited), whom I will call the claimants, had acquired an inchoate and imperfect title which would undoubtedly have been in due course made absolute by the court in Paris, unless this court thought fit to intervene. It will be convenient to consider the case first without reference to the appointment of receivers, and on the assumption that the debenture-holders have a security which is no longer a floating security but has become enforceable. It is plain that, according to English law, the debenture-holders have by contract with the company a charge upon all the assets of the company, including this French debt, and the first question which arises for consideration is this: Does the existence of this charge, which is undoubtedly valid according to English law, entitle the debenture-holders to prevent the claimants, who are unsecured creditors and not debenture-holders, from asserting and enforcing the rights that are given to them by French law against this French debt? In other words, is there any equity in favour of the debenture-holders as against the claimants? I think this question must be answered in the negative. The very point seems to have been decided by Wood, V.C., and Lord Chelmsford in Liverpool Marine Credit Co. v. Hunter. It was urged before me that this doctrine applies only to immovable property or to movable property having actual locality, and that a chose in action has no locality. But for many purposes a debt is deemed to have a locality: see Commissioner of Stamps v. Hope, [1891] A. C. 476, 40 W. R. Dig. 162, or as it is sometimes stated, a quasi locality. It seems to me that I must treat the debt due from Delaunay & Cie. as being situate in France, and subject to the French law, and I cannot therefore prevent the claimants, at the suit of the debenture-holders, from taking any proceedings the law of France allows for recovering their debt out of this French asset. The next question, or rather the same question in a different aspect, is this: The debenture-holders having according to English law a good assignment of the French debt, but having according to French law no such assignment, and the claimants having according to French law a good inchoate charge or assignment, which ought to prevail? It seems to me that I am bound to hold that that assignment which alone is recognized by the law of France ought to prevail, and that the claimants have a better title than the debenture-holders: see Dicey's Conflict of Laws, r. 141. Apart, therefore, from the appointment of the receivers, I think the claimants ought to succeed.

It remains to consider whether the appointment of receivers makes any difference. It was argued with great force that the receivers were appointed over all the property comprised in the debentures, and that it was contempt of court to intercept the property which ought to come into the hands of the receivers.

On the other hand, it was argued that the order appointing receivers in this general form did not extend to property abroad, and that in any view there had been no interference with the possession of the receivers sufficient to constitute a contempt. It is not altogether easy to ascertain the origin, nature, and extent of the powers of a receiver. A receiver is an officer of the court, and the court does not allow the possession of its officer to be interfered with without its leave. Where the court appoints a receiver it requires the parties to the action to give up possession to the receiver of all property comprised in the order, and treats them as guilty of contempt if they refuse to do so. The court will grant a receiver a writ of possession (ord. 47, r. 2) or a writ of assistance (Wyman v. Knight, 37 W. R. 76, 39 Ch. D. 165) to enable him to recover possession, and it will order tenants to attorn to the receiver. So long as the property is within the territorial jurisdiction of the court there is no difficulty, at least in theory, in putting the receiver in actual possession. And when the receiver is in possession the court does not allow his possession to be interfered with without leave. For example, no judgment creditor of the company would be allowed to levy execution upon the property of the company in England now in the possession of the receivers. It is well settled that the court can appoint receivers over property out of the jurisdiction. This power, I apprehend, is based upon the doctrine that the court acts in personam. The court does not and cannot attempt by its order to put its own officer in possession of foreign property, but it treats as guilty of contempt any party to the action in which the order is made who prevents the necessary steps being taken to enable its officer to take possession according to the laws of the foreign country: Keys v. Keys, 1 Beav. 425; Smith v. Smith, 10 Hare, app. lxxi.; Houlditch v. Marquis of Donegal, 8 Bli. N. S. 301. In other words, the receiver is not put in possession of foreign property by the mere order of the court. Something else has to be done, and until that has been done in accordance with the foreign law, any person not a party to the suit who takes proceedings in the foreign country is not guilty of a contempt either on the ground of interfering with the receiver's possession or otherwise. For this purpose no distinction can be drawn between a foreigner and a British subject. I have not been able to find any authority in which this precise point has been discussed; but on general principles I think I should not be justified in holding that the claimants by taking proceedings in Paris were in any way guilty of a contempt of court. If, however, I am wrong in this view, and there has been a contempt, it seems to me that I ought to allow the claimants to proceed, notwithstanding the appointment of a receiver. It cannot be reasonable that I should deprive English creditors of a right against French assets which French creditors undoubtedly enjoy.

Upon the whole I think the application fails, and I must order payment of the dishonoured bill and the costs of the French proceeding and the costs of this application out of the fund in court, and the plaintiff must also pay the amount, if any, by which the fund in court is insufficient to answer these costs.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Nicholson, Graham, & Graham.

Solicitors for the claimants, Tarry, Sherlock, & King.

---

Chan. Div. } Buckley, J. } May 29, 30.

SANDERS-CLARK v. GROSVENOR MANSIONS CO. AND D'ALESSANDRI. (a.)

Nuisance — Reasonable use of property — Occupiers of flats in one building — Residential occupier and restaurant keeper.

It is relevant in nuisance cases to inquire whether the defendant was making a reasonable use of his premises in doing the acts complained of.

Dictum of Kekewich, J., in Reinhardt v. Mentasti, 38 W. R. 10, 42 Ch. D. 685, at p. 690, dissented from.

Different flats in one building were let to the plaintiff for residential purposes and to A., a restaurant keeper, for the purpose of his business. When the plaintiff took her flat there were only private residences in the building. The plaintiff brought an action against the common landlord and A. to restrain nuisance by heat, smell, and noise arising from A.'s use of his premises. The action was discontinued as against the landlord on his making certain structural alterations to abate the nuisance by heat, but A. denied liability, and contested the whole action.

Held, that the defendant A. was entitled to make a reasonable use of his premises for the purpose of his business, but not to make an unreasonable use of them, and, on the facts, that he had made an unreasonable use of his premises, which substantially interfered with the plaintiff's enjoyment of her flat; and therefore that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction.

Rule in Ball v. Ray, 21 W. R. 282, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 467, at p. 469, applied.

Action.

The plaintiff was the tenant of a flat on the first floor of a building which was erected for the purpose of private residential flats some time ago. She held under a lease from the defendant company for fourteen years from 1892, and when she took the flat there were only private residences in the building.

The defendant D'Alessandri occupied premises in the same building which were used until 1898 as a private residence, when they were altered for and let to him by the defendant company as a restaurant. They consisted of a kitchen in the basement, restaurant on the ground-floor, and dining-room on the mezzanine floor immediately beneath the plaintiff's flat. The kitchen was at the back, immediately under the plaintiff's bedroom, and faced a closed courtyard or well.

The action was to restrain D'Alessandri from using his premises so as to cause a nuisance to the plaintiff, and on motion for an interlocutory injunction, he undertaking to do his best to prevent any nuisance from smell or noise, a person was appointed by the court to report how the nuisance by heat could be abated. He made his report, and his suggestions were carried out at the expense of the landlords, the defendant company, as against whom the plaintiff subsequently discontinued the action. The alleged nuisance from smell and noise remaining unabated, the plaintiff suggested how it might be remedied at an expense of £10 to £20, and offered to discontinue the action against D'Alessandri if he did this at his own expense and paid her costs, but he replied that he did not consider himself in any way liable for the heat, and declined to make any attempt to diminish the noise and smell, or to pay such costs.

(a.) Reported by J. F. WALEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It appeared that the heat complained of was in effect due to the large cooking range used by D'Alessandri for his business opening into a flue built to carry the heat of a range of smaller size, and the smell made its escape from the kitchen through an open grating which filled the window space and could not be closed.

It was not contended that the plaintiff was entitled to any injunction against the carrying on of a business as such, in the building.

Astbury, Q.C., and Bryan Farrer, for plaintiff.—The defendant's user of his premises causes a nuisance to the plaintiff, and it is no defence to say that the user is reasonable: Reinhardt v. Mentasti, 38 W. R. 10, 42 Ch. D. 685, at p. 690.

They also cited Robinson v. Kilvert, 37 W. R. 545, 41 Ch. D. 88, at p. 94; and Broder v. Saillard, 24 W. R. 1011, 2 Ch. D. 692. [BUCKLEY, J., referred to Garrett on Nuisances (2nd ed.), p. 161, and Gaunt v. Fynney, 21 W. R. 129, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 8, at p. 12.]

Ingpen, Q.C., and Atlwater, for the defendant D'Alessandri.—The construction of the building is responsible for the heat, and it is not this defendant, but the defendant company, on whom any liability for the heat must fall. The smell and noise do not amount to a nuisance: Ball v. Ray, 21 W. R. 282, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 467. The question is, Are this defendant's premises being applied to a proper purpose? Christie v. Davey, [1893] 1 Ch. 316, 41 W. R. Dig. 153.

They also cited Sanderson v. Berwick-upon-Tweed Corporation, 33 W. R. 67, 13 Q. B. D. 547, and Blake v. Woolf, 47 W. R. 8, [1898] 2 Q. B. 426.

Astbury replied.

BUCKLEY, J.—The plaintiff complains of three things—first, heat; secondly, smell; and thirdly, noise. Now there is some evidence of noise made by clattering of plates and by the saucepans being taken off and put on the hotplate, and I apply Lord Selborne's test in Gaunt v. Fynney, 21 W. R. 129, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 3, at p. 12—viz.: "A nuisance by noise (supposing malice to be out of the question) is emphatically a question of degree. If my neighbour builds a house against a party-wall, next to my own, and I hear through the wall more than is agreeable to me of the sounds from his nursery or his music-room, it does not follow (even if I am nervously sensitive or in infirm health) that I can . . . obtain an injunction. Such things, to offend against the law, must be done in a manner which, beyond fair controversy, ought to be regarded as exceptive and unreasonable." That the noise here is not. It may be an annoyance but it is not a legal nuisance. The defendant is entitled to carry on the business of a restaurant on his premises, and the evidence is that it is carried on in a quiet and orderly manner. The plaintiff's case, therefore, fails as to noise.

Then as to heat the defendant D'Alessandri says this has nothing to do with him. But this defendant obtained the alterations of the premises which led to his neighbour being exposed to excessive heat. There was evidence of danger of fire, and there was the interference with the plaintiff's enjoyable occupation of her premises. The defendant was entitled to carry on his business, but were the alterations made by him in the premises such as to expose the plaintiff to annoyance that she ought not to bear? The law is laid down by Lord Selborne in Ball v. Ray, 21 W. R. 282, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 467, at p. 469—viz.: "If the houses adjoining each other are so built that from the commencement of their existence it is manifest that each adjoining inhabitant was intended to enjoy his own property for the ordinary purposes for which it and all different parts of it were constructed, then so long as the house is so used there is nothing that can be regarded in law as a nuisance. . . . But, on the other hand, if either party turns his house, or any portion of it, to unusual purposes in such a manner as to produce a substantial injury to his neighbour, it appears to me that that is not according to principle or authority a reasonable use of his own property; and his neighbour, showing substantial injury, is entitled to protection," and Mellish, L.J., "entirely agreed with what had been said by the Lord Chancellor." I prefer this case to Reinhardt v. Mentasti, 38 W. R. 10, 42 Ch. D. 685, at p. 690, where Kekewich, J., said that the principle did not depend on the question whether the defendant's user was reasonable or otherwise. Here a restaurant keeper goes into the premises where the flue is not big enough, and exposes it to undue use. That is not reasonable. It is an unreasonable use of his premises, and he is liable.

As to smell, has the plaintiff been caused discomfort, and if so, has it been by the defendant's act? I think there has been a sensible and substantial interference with the plaintiff's enjoyment due to the defendant's unreasonable use of his premises. The plaintiff therefore succeeds in the action. The defendant was wrong in regard to the heat and smell, and I cannot discriminate as to the costs of the noise part of the case, which depends on the same evidence.

Judgment for plaintiff.

Solicitors, Nicholson, Graham, & Graham; J. Rawes Baron.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Ridley and Darling, JJ.) April 10.

ROBERTSON (Appellant) v. HARRIS AND ANOTHER (Respondents). (a.)

Adulteration — Food — Warranty — Contract to supply milk over an extended period—Necessity of written warranty with each particular delivery—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 25.

On informations by a medical officer of health, H., a dairyman, and his servant were respectively charged with unlawfully causing to be sold and selling milk as "new milk" which was not new milk, contrary to section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875. At the hearing an agreement in writing was put in as an answer to the complaints under section 25 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, and section 20 (4) of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, and it was proved that the milk had been purchased as new milk, and that it was sold in the same state as when it was purchased; and is what the statute means; and if it were necessary to decide it I might very possibly decide it in that sense. Before I leave this point I should like to call attention to one other case—the case of Beattie v. Lord Ebury, 20 W. R. 994, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 777, at p. 804, where Mellish, L.J., says that: "There is a clear difference between a misrepresentation in point of fact, a representation that something exists at that moment which does not exist, and a representation that something will be done in the future. Of course, a representation that something will be done in the future cannot either be true or false at the moment it is made, and although you may call it a representation if it is anything, it is a contract or promise." Here, as Mellish, L.J., says, one may call this contract that the milk shall be pure a representation in one sense; one may, if he pleases, call it a warranty, and if one likes to rely on what Lord Mansfield says, that a warranty may be of a future event and still be a warranty, he is justified; but as Mellish, L.J., says, although one may call it a representation, yet if it is anything it is a contract or promise. I should myself have great hesitation in holding, if it were absolutely necessary to the decision of this case, that this contract dealing with what shall be the case in the future with regard to milk not in existence at the time the contract was made was a warranty at all within the meaning of section 25 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875. It is not, however, necessary to give any definite opinion upon the point. It would be merely an obiter dictum. I might decide the case on that ground, and on that ground alone, but it is not necessary to do so, as I agree with the judgment given, that this decision must be reversed on other grounds.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal allowed. Case remitted to the magistrate.

Solicitors for the appellant, Richard Smith & Sons, for Sayer, Sheffield.

Solicitors for the respondents, Geare & Pease, for Robert Fairburn, Sheffield.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Ridley and Darling, JJ.) April 9.

SIMMONDS BROTHERS (LIMITED) v. FULHAM VESTRY. (a.)

Metropolis management—Street—New street—Buildings on one side only—Vacant land opposite—Repairs to road—Right of authority to claim apportionment—Lapse of reasonable time—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 105—Metropolis Management Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), s. 77.

The appellants were the owners of certain houses in the Fulham Palace-road, which, on the expiration of a Turnpike Act, became a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, and was repaired from time to time by the respondents' predecessors. In 1864 it was not a street, but by 1883 it was built with houses along one side, the other side remaining vacant building land. Between 1879 and 1898 it was altered and repaired at various times by the respondents and others. In 1897 the respondents resolved that the road was not paved to their satisfaction, and that it should be accordingly paved, and the expenses apportioned upon the owners.

Held, that the magistrate was justified in holding that the Fulham Palace-road became a new street in 1883.

Held, further, that where, in the metropolis, a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large becomes a new street by reason of the erection of houses along it, a vestry is not precluded from causing it to be paved at the cost of the frontagers by lapse of time, however long, after it became a new street, even though it was in fact already paved at the time it became a new street.

Case stated by a metropolitan police magistrate on a complaint to recover apportioned expenses of paving.

The appellants were the owners, within the meaning of the Metropolis Management Acts, of twenty-two houses in the Fulham Palace-road in the respondent's parish. Two of these houses, Nos. 79 and 81, Fulham Palace-road were erected before the passing of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and originally formed part of a mansion called Claybrook House.

The Fulham Palace-road was, at the date of the passing of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, a turnpike road. On the expiration of the Turnpike Act in the year 1864 it became a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, and was repaired as such from time to time by the Fulham District Board, in whose district it then was, and by the respondents after the dissolution of the board.

One section of the road was not, at the time of the expiration of the Turnpike Act, sufficiently built upon to be a street in the ordinary sense of the term, the only building standing thereon being the above-mentioned Claybrook House, with the exception of which the road ran entirely between market gardens. The width of that section at that time varied from 20 to 28 feet.

By the end of 1883 the east side of the section had been covered with houses along its entire length, which, with a few exceptions, were all erected about the same time. The whole of the land adjoining the west side of the section is vacant building land without any building thereon except a temporary iron Board school.

In 1879 a portion of the footpath on the east side of the section was paved by the Fulham District Board at the cost of their district.

In or about the year 1880 another portion of the east side of the section was widened to the extent of 20ft. from the centre by the setting back, on rebuilding, of the Greyhound public-house, which fronted the section, and the footpath was paved and kerbed by the owners.

In or before the year 1883 the remainder of the section, to the south of the appellants' houses was widened on the east side to 20ft. from the centre, and the footpath was kerbed and paved by the owners, except for a distance of about 110 yards from the southern end, where it was partly paved with a narrow strip of flagstones, and partly gravelled by the adjoining owners, and about the same time the northern end of the section for a distance of about 44 yards was widened on the east side to the same extent, and the paving and kerbing of the footpath was relaid by the Fulham District Board at the cost of their district. The evidence showed that with the exception of the work referred to above as done by the board at the expense of the ratepayers, and of the portion referred to as having been partially paved, the whole east side of the footpath was paved by the adjoining owners not later than the year 1883. The footpath has ever since been kept up by the board and vestry respectively in the same condition as put by the owners. The whole of the footpath on the west side of the section was gravelled and stone-dotted by the Fulham District Board at the cost of the district.

From and after the 25th of March, 1886, the Fulham District Board was dissolved by virtue of the merely to show that a general agreement like the one now in question has been arrived at, unless it can be shown further that the particular article in question has been bought with it. For that purpose it is necessary to produce some further evidence. There was no such evidence in this case as there was in Harris v. May, which otherwise was very like this case; for the agreement there did not contain the words "the milk to be pure new milk," which are the words in this case, but simply the description—that is to say, "pure milk," "eighty-six gallons of good and pure milk." Although these words which are present in this case were not present in the case of Harris v. May, I think it is clear that the court in that case found that the words in the contract itself did amount to a warranty. Lord Coleridge, C.J., there says: "It is true that an action for breach of warranty could be brought upon that contract." That means that it was a warranty, and the observations made upon those words by Charles, J., in the subsequent case of Laidlaw v. Wilson, show clearly what he understood was intended by the court in Harris v. May. Charles, J., speaking of Harris v. May, says ([1894] 1 Q. B., at p. 78): "There, no doubt, Lord Coleridge, at the commencement of his judgment, said that, in his opinion, the contract relied on by the defendant was not a written warranty within the meaning of the Act. But, on looking on his judgment as a whole, I think that what he really meant was that it was not such a warranty as would cover the specific delivery of milk on the 12th of April, in the absence of some written evidence that that specific delivery was made under the contract." That is to say, that there may be a warranty under the general agreement to deliver the milk, but there must be something more. It must be shown that the purchase of this particular article was made with that warranty. There ought to be something in writing to show that the warranty which is contained in the general agreement is extended to and includes this specific article. I can imagine, if this point had been free from decisions, that that was well capable of argument, but it is certainly too late for us, even if we felt any doubt in the matter, to say the contrary to this; and therefore in a case like the present there must be some evidence to show that that particular article has been bought with that warranty. In the case of Laidlaw v. Wilson, which is a fair instance of this particular subject, there was some written evidence to show that the specific delivery was made under the contract, thus connecting the written warranty with the article which was the subject of the purchase. It is quite true that it was more easily done in that case because there was not the difficulty that arises as to the date, as in the present case. The purchase was made, and the sale was completed at or about the same time; but if there had been something in this case to show that the written warranty contained in the general agreement for the delivery of the milk, extended to and dated to the article in question—that is to say, the daily delivery or supply of milk, then there would have been enough to satisfy the statute. In the absence of that evidence it appears to me that the magistrate came to the wrong conclusion when he said that the defendant, who was charged with the offence under this statute, had brought himself under the provisions of section 25. For these reasons I think that the conclusion arrived at was not a correct one, and that the case should be sent back with direction that the defendant ought to be convicted.

(a.) Reported by P. B. DURNFORD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

DARLING, J.—This case raises questions of some difficulty, and, speaking for myself, I do not think that all the cases can be entirely reconciled. In fact I find it difficult to come to the conclusion that there is not a difference of opinion between the judges who decided Laidlaw v. Wilson and the judges who decided the case of Harris v. May. What happened in the present case was this: A retailer sold milk which was not pure milk, and he was summoned for that. Then he sought to show that he was excused—and the magistrates held that he was—by virtue of section 25 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875. In this case what the defendant had done was that long before the time in question he had entered into a contract for the supply of milk. He was supplied with this milk in small quantities, but he had entered into a contract for the supply of milk for a considerable period, and the contract was this: "I, Sarah Sheldon, agree to sell to William Harris 1,000 gallons of milk weekly in such quantities as arranged, the milk to be pure new milk, delivered, &c." He had entered into a contract to buy in future 1,000 gallons of milk a week, the milk to be pure. That is the same as if the person contracting to supply the milk had said the milk is to be "pure new milk," but there is no statement that it is pure milk; it does not exist at the time. To my mind this statute, as Lord Coleridge has said, has to be construed strictly, especially as it relates to the food of the people, and I have very great doubt, although it is said for the first time, as to whether such a contract, which says what is to be the state of things in future, can be called a warranty at all—a written warranty within this section 25 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875. I have great doubt about that and when the question is distinctly raised in some future case I think it will be interesting to have it decided. It might have been raised in Harris v. May, but there counsel on one side only was called upon, and the question was not raised. Blackstone in his Commentaries (3rd vol., p. 180, 20th edition) says: "Also if he that selleth any thing doth upon the sale warrant it to be good, the law annexes a tacit contract to this warranty, that if it be not so he shall make compensation to the buyer; else it is an injury to good faith, for which an action on the case will lie to recover damages. The warranty must be upon the sale; for if it be made after, and not at the time of the sale, it is a void warranty; for it is then made without any consideration; neither does the buyer then take the goods upon the credit of the vendor. Also the warranty can only reach to things in being at the time of the warranty made, and not to things in future; as, that a horse is sound at the buying of him, not that he will be sound two years hence." I know it has been said by Lord Mansfield in a later case in which that same passage was cited to him, namely—the case of Eden v. Parkinson, 2 Doug. 732: "Many points have been gone into on both sides which are not necessary for the decision of this case. For instance, there is no doubt but you may warrant a future event." It is perfectly clear from Lord Mansfield's own statement in that case that it was not necessary for the decision of the case that the point should be considered, and his own observation upon the point therefore is only an obiter dictum; but at all events take it to be good law that you may warrant a future event, yet I do not think it is at all clear that this statute, which Lord Coleridge, C.J., has said in Harris v. May is to be construed strictly for the benefit of the health of the people, did not mean a warranty in the strict sense in which warranty of goods was used by Blackstone—a warranty that a thing in being was of a certain quality. I do not affect to decide that it is so; I only say that it seems to me there is the gravest reason to suppose that that

The question for the opinion of the court was whether this determination was right in law: (a) Whether the erection of buildings on one side only of a road is, when the land on the other side consists of vacant land, sufficient to render such road a new street within the meaning of section 105 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and section 77 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862; (b) whether a vestry or district board can put in force the powers of those enactments with respect to a new street which has been, previously to its becoming a new street, paved to their satisfaction; and if not (c) whether the lapse of more than a reasonable time since the street became a new street, subsequently to its having been so paved, is conclusive evidence that they were satisfied with such paving?

A. Glen, for the appellants.

Asquith, Q.C., and Macaskie, for the respondents.

The following cases were referred to in the course of the arguments: Robinson v. Barton Local Board, 32 W. R. 249, 8 App. Cas. 798; St. Giles, Camberwell, v. Crystal Palace Co., 40 W. R. 648, [1892] 2 Q. B. 33; Richards v. Kessick, 59 L. T. Rep. 318, 37 W. R. Dig. 113; St. Mary, Battersea v. Palmer, 45 W. R. 110, [1897] 1 Q. B. 220; Arter v. Vestry of Hammersmith, 45 W. R. 398, [1897] 1 Q. B. 646; St. Giles, Camberwell v. Hunt. 56 L. J. M. C. 65; Bonella v. Twickenham Local Board, 36 W. R. 50, 20 Q. B. D. 63; White v. Fulham Vestry, 74 L. T. Rep. 425, 44 W. R. Dig. 108; Chelsea Vestry v. Evans, 35 J. P. 23.

RIDLEY, J.—We have neither of us any doubt upon this case. With regard to the first point raised, perhaps it is sufficient to say that the magistrate having found as a fact in a case like the present that this became a new street in 1883, it should not be interfered with. However, I think it was a new street within the ordinary acceptation of the term, and I do not accept the idea, speaking personally, that because the houses which have become continuous are on one side of the road, and one side only, that therefore in such a case as the present it is not a street. I think the argument of Mr. Glen is sound so far, that there is a difference between a place like Hyde Park, or the Green Park, or public grounds of that kind, which cannot be built upon, and ground which might be built upon because it is in the hands of private owners; but, although that is true, I do not think his argument goes so far as to prove, and it does not convince me, that a road may not become a street although it has houses on one side only. I think it may. In a district like the present it is certainly far more convenient to hold it does, because at one end of the road there is a street, and at the other end there is a street, and it is a street which is being built upon, unevenly, no doubt, more, on this occasion, on one side of the road than on the other, yet I think it is a new street and properly so found by the magistrate.

As to the second point, which is much more arguable, I think the case is distinguishable from the case of Bonella v. Twickenham Local Board of Health, which has been quoted in order to show that because the local authority in this case did not act within a reasonable time after they got power to do so under section 105, therefore when they now wish to act and get the street paved, this paving and this repair must be done at the cost of the district and not at the cost of the owners under section 105. In the Bonella case, which was decided under the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 150, the state of things was very different from what it is here. There is a resemblance of course between the two sections, between section 150 of the Public Health Act and section 105 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855. There is this, that the new street has been vested by virtue of the provisions of section 96 of the Metropolis Management Act of 1855 in the authority in a similar way to that in which the sewers were vested by the Public Health Act in the authority which has to deal with them in that case. There are resemblances so far, no doubt, and then there is the power given in each Act under which the vestry or local authority may act, either in the case of the sewers or in the case of the new street, if they do not find it to their satisfaction, but the resemblance seems to stop there. In the Bonella case the owners in point of fact had made the sewer which had been found to be satisfactory and sufficient for that street until the general system of sewerage was altered, and it became necessary to make a new one, which really was laid with its levels the other way, and was part of the new system of sewerage. Upon that the authority took proceedings against the owners and called on them under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to pay the expenses of the new sewer upon the ground that that street was not sewered to their satisfaction. The court decided that it could not be done. Why? Because the local authority had accepted the sewer as satisfactory to them at the time when it in fact vested in them, and had dealt with it as satisfactory for what the court held to have been more than a reasonable time after it had so vested. Therefore the court said, "You can do no more. You have lost your power to proceed under this section, and you cannot call upon the owners to pay again." That is a decision which one would be very loth to quarrel with, even if one had the power to do so. It is almost precisely the same reasoning which governed the decision of the court in the case of the Fulham District Board v. Godwin which is in 1 Ex. D. 400, 25 W. R. Dig. 156. In that case also the sewer had been made by the owners, and the court held that they could not be called on to make another one, and a different one, because other circumstances had arisen since which made the first sewer unsatisfactory. But here the owners have done nothing. The facts as found by the magistrate show that he finds in the 23rd paragraph of the case "that all the works done to the carriage-way of the said section by the respondents, previous to the paving thereof in 1899, and also all the works done on the west side footway by the respondents up to the present time, were temporary repairs done by them from time to time as surveyors of highways." True, that is a power which is quite different from the exercise of this power, which is now called in question, under the 105th section. Then he finds "that with the exception of the above-mentioned 250 yards of paving, all the works done by the respondents up to the present time (other than those done by them on behalf of the adjoining owners as aforesaid) on the east side footway were temporary repairs done by them as surveyors of highways." He further finds that none of the works so done were intended by them as an exercise of, nor did they thereby exercise, their powers under the 105th section of the Metropolis Management Act. Under those findings it is clear that they have done nothing, nor did they receive anything from the owners. They received the roadway as it was before, and they did not deal with it. Now, are we to say, under those circumstances, which are quite different from the ones which arose in the Bonella case, that by reason of the fact that sixteen years have elapsed after the street became vested in them, they have lost the right to call upon the owners to make the street and to do the paving under section 105? The street is still a new street under the meaning of that word as used in the Act of Parliament. Why should sixteen years' lapse or the lapse of any time in such an instance, have the same effect which it does when the sewer actually made by the owners has been accepted and held satisfactory for a space of time like that? I cannot see how the argument applies. If we were to say that it did, it would come to this—that because there was no traffic there at one time so that the road was found satisfactory, the increase of traffic is not to make any difference. The provisions of the Act were intended for this: that if at any time, as I read it, they should find that this new street which has become vested in them, which has never been paved or made by the owners at all, is not sufficient for the traffic, they are to have the power to call upon the owners to make it so once and for all. I do not for a moment suggest that they can do it twice, but they have the power to do it once. To hold otherwise would be to say that the man who holds back and will not have anything done to the road will escape having it done at his expense. The result is that those who live in a district which is becoming populous, and calling traffic into the district, ought to pay in the first instance for the necessary making of the road which will be sufficient; after that they cannot be called upon to pay again. If we held otherwise I think it would be a mischievous reading of the Act of Parliament, and I am quite clear in my own opinion that the case is outside the decision in Bonella v. The Twickenham Local Board of Health. I accept the reasoning of the learned magistrate and I think his conclusion is a correct one.

DARLING, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Watson, Sons, & Room.

Solicitors for the respondents, T. Blanco White.

---

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) May 30.

EVANS v. JUSTICES OF CONWAY. (a.)

Licensing law—Licence—Refusal to renew—Appeal to quarter sessions—Power of quarter sessions to refuse renewal in absence of evidence—Alehouse Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), s. 27—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 42.

Where the holder of a licence appeals to quarter sessions from the refusal of a general annual licensing meeting to renew his licence, the quarter sessions have no power to refuse to grant a renewal in the absence of evidence in opposition to the renewal.

Appeal from the judgment of a Divisional Court (Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) on a special case stated for the opinion of the High Court by the justices of Carnarvonshire.

The appellant, William Evans, appealed to the Carnarvonshire Quarter Sessions against a decision of licensing justices, sitting at the general annual licensing meeting held at Conway, in the county of Carnarvon, on the 25th of September, 1899, refusing to renew the licence of the Royal Oak Inn, Conway.

The appellant appeared by counsel in support of the appeal and to apply for the renewal of the licence. It was admitted that the appellant was the holder of a licence for the sale of intoxicating liquors in respect of a house known as the Royal Oak Inn, Conway. No one appeared on behalf of the justices who sat at the general annual licensing meeting. A solicitor appeared for the Rev. T. Gwynedd-Roberts, who had objected to the renewal of the licence at the general annual licensing meeting.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that the solicitor for the Rev. T. Gwynedd-Roberts had no locus standi and that, as no one appeared on behalf of the justices, the appellant was entitled to have his appeal allowed and his licence renewed.

The court of quarter sessions overruled these contentions, and decided to hear the appeal. Thereupon counsel for the appellant, having formally proved that due notice of the appeal had been served upon all the justices who sat at the general annual licensing meeting, and that the appellant, together with two sureties, had duly entered into the required recognizances, applied for the renewal of the licence. The court of quarter sessions, without hearing any evidence on behalf of the respondents or in opposition to the renewal of the said licence, dismissed the appeal and refused to renew the said licence.

The question for the opinion of the High Court was whether the court of quarter sessions were right.

The Divisional Court were of opinion that the court of quarter sessions had dealt with the matter rightly, and affirmed their decision.

The appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal.

Foote, Q.C., and Trevor Lloyd, for the appellant.—The quarter sessions ought to have granted a renewal. They had no power to refuse in the absence of evidence in opposition to the renewal. An appeal to licensing justices to quarter sessions is in the nature of a rehearing: Whiffen v. Justices of Malling, 40 W. R. 293, [1892] 1 Q. B. 362; Ruddick v. Justices of Liverpool, 42 J. P. 406.

Asquith, Q.C., and Ellis Griffith, for the justices.—The quarter sessions had an absolute discretion as to whether they would grant a renewal or not, and they were not bound by the rules as to evidence and onus of proof which are ordinarily binding on courts of law: Sharp v. Wakefield, 39 W. R. 561, [1891] A. C. 173; Boulter v. Justices of Kent, 46 W. R. 114, [1897] A. C. 556; Tynemouth Corporation v. Attorney-General, [1899] A. C. 293, 47 W. R. Dig. 43; Reg. v. Justices of Staffordshire, [1898] 2 Q. B. 231, 46 W. R. Dig. 84.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 30.—A. L. SMITH, L.J., read the following judgment of the court: The Queen's Bench Division in this case has held, with very great doubt and inviting an appeal to this court, that when a publican appeals to a court of quarter sessions, which he is clearly entitled to do under section 27 of the Alehouse Act of 1828, against the refusal of a licensing meeting to grant him a renewal of his licence, the court of quarter sessions can refuse to grant him such renewal without any evidence whatever being given as to why such renewal should not be granted. It was argued by counsel on behalf of the justices that the cases of Sharp v. Wakefield, Boulter v. Justices of Kent, and Tynemouth Corporation v. Attorney-General show that the court of quarter sessions can do so. We will deal with these cases hereafter. It seems to us that, apart from these cases, a court of quarter sessions cannot do so. The facts are these: Evans, the publican, applied to the general annual licensing meeting for the renewal of the licence which he then held for the sale of intoxicating liquors in respect of a house known as the Royal Oak Inn, Conway, and the Rev. Mr. Roberts then appeared and objected to the renewal of the licence. It is not stated in the case submitted to the court upon what grounds he objected, but the justices at the licensing meeting refused to grant the renewal; nor is it stated upon what ground the licensing justices refused. But it was said at the bar that he objected upon the ground, first, that the house was not necessary for the requirements of the neighbourhood; and, secondly, upon the ground that the premises were incapable of effective police supervision; and it was also stated that it was thought that it was upon the latter ground that the licensing justices refused the renewal. The publican then appealed to quarter sessions against this refusal. It was there proved on his behalf that due notice of appeal had been given and that he had entered into the required recognizances. The licensing justices did not appear at quarter sessions to oppose, nor was any evidence given in support of any objection to the renewal, and thereupon the court of quarter sessions, without hearing any evidence, refused to renew the licence. Now, unless the provisions of section 42 of the Licensing Act, 1872, both as to the notice of objection which must be given and as to evidence which must be forthcoming, are complied with, it cannot, we think, be doubted that a renewal of a licence cannot be refused by licensing justices at a licensing meeting (see the observations upon this section by Blackburn, J., in Reg. v. Farquhar, L. R. 9 Q. B. 258, 22 W. R. Dig. 38); and it has been held by Hannen and Quain, JJ., that the requirements of this section apply equally to the court of quarter sessions when a publican appeals thereto against the refusal of the licensing justices to renew his license as to a licensing meeting: Ruddick v. Justices of Liverpool. Apart, therefore, from the cases cited by counsel for the justices, the court of quarter sessions could not, in our judgment, without hearing some evidence, have done what they have done and refused offhand the renewal of the publican's licence. It was held in the case of Whiffen v. Justices of Malling that an appeal to the court of quarter sessions against the refusal of licensing justices to renew a licence amounts to a rehearing, and not to a simple appeal; and, as was stated by Lord Bramwell in Sharp v. Wakefield, "when there is an appeal againt a refusal of a first licence, the appellant (at quarter sessions) begins, the burden of proof is on him, he has to make out that he ought to have a licence. Where, on the other hand, the appeal is against a refusal to renew a licence, the respondents begin, the burden of proof is on them, they have to make out that he ought not to have a licence; practically that his licence should be taken from him." And it is admitted that it is the practice of the Carnarvonshire quarter sessions, in an appeal against the refusal of the licensing justices to renew a licence, for respondents to begin. If no one is at quarter sessions to give evidence upon an appeal against the refusal of the licensing justices to renew a licence, how is the burden of proof satisfied? It appears to us that it is not. My brother Channell says that a man who has a licence has a primâ facie right to have it renewed. In this we agree. But he says that the court of quarter sessions may take away this right if they know that the licensing justices have refused to renew the licence. In this we cannot agree, for, if so, what is the use of the appeal which is clearly given to the publican by section 27 of the Act of 1828? Apart from the cases relied on by the justices, in our judgment some evidence must be forthcoming to justify the court of quarter sessions in refusing the appellant a renewal of his licence. Now Sharp v. Wakefield, the first case relied upon by the justices, no doubt decided that justices had a discretion to refuse the renewal of a licence, though that discretion was to be exercised judicially (not according to private opinion); and Lord Herschell points out that the procedure provided by section 42 of the Licensing Act, 1872, is still in force, and, subject to its provisions being complied with, the justices may exercise the discretion which the House of Lords held that they had. When the case of Boulter v. Justices of Kent is carefully read it will be seen that it decided two things, and two things only—first, that a licensing meeting was not a court of summary jurisdiction, so that a court of quarter sessions, upon appeal by a publican thereto against the refusal of a licensing meeting to grant him a renewal of his licence, could not mulct an objector in costs, because it was only in cases of appeals from a court of "summary jurisdiction" that the court of quarter sessions had this jurisdiction, and a licensing meeting was not such a court; and, secondly, that an objector to the renewal of a licence was not a party to the proceedings. It is a mistake to say that this decision in any way decided that a court of quarter sessions was not a court with all the incidents of a court both as regards evidence and onus of proof. It did not touch this question at all; it left it just where it was before. What it did decide, as before stated, was that a licensing meeting was not a court of summary jurisdiction, and therefore the court of quarter sessions could not condemn an objector in costs, and that an objector was not a party to the proceedings. The third case cited by counsel for the justices was that of Tynemouth Corporation v. Attorney-General, which decided that a borough fund with no surplus could not be charged with the costs incurred by the chief constable in opposing an appeal to quarter sessions by a publican against the refusal of licensing justices to renew his licence. The decision, in our judgment, has no application to the present case; but there are two passages, one in the judgment of Lord Morris, and the other in Lord Davey's judgment, which are pointed to by counsel for the justices. Lord Morris says that Boulter's case decided that the chief constable had no right to appear as a party, and Lord Davey says that an objector does not become a party to the proceedings, and has no right to appear and be heard on the appeal to quarter sessions; the only proper respondents are the licensing justices themselves, and if the objector be heard it is as amicus curiæ. How does this show that a court of quarter sessions can refuse the renewal of a licence, or, as Lord Bramwell puts it, that the publican's licence could be taken from him, except upon evidence? In our judgment neither Sharp v. Wakefield nor Boulter's case nor the Tynemouth case applies to the present case; and Lord Davey in the Tynemouth case certainly was not dealing with the question we have now to decide—viz., whether the court of quarter sessions can refuse the renewal of a licence without hearing any evidence at all. In our opinion it cannot do so. It follows, therefore, that the question which is left to us must be answered thus—that the court of quarter sessions was wrong, and that the licence must be renewed. For the reasons above given this appeal must be allowed.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Belfrage & Co., for Chamberlain & Johnson, Llandudno.

Solicitors for the respondents, Edwards & Cohen, for D. Owen & Griffith, Bangor.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) May 3, 4, 7, 8, 9.

BARRON v. WILLIS. (a.)

Solicitor and client—Confidential relation—Benefit to solicitor's son—Independent advice—Confirmation.

A person who enters into a transaction which has the effect of benefiting the solicitor employed or members of his family cannot be bound by such transaction unless he or she has had independent advice.

By a deed executed in 1890 property was settled on trusts in favour of a husband for life, then for his wife for life, then as the husband and wife should jointly appoint, and, in default of such joint appointment, as the survivor should appoint, with an ultimate remainder as to one moiety for one of the trustees of the deed, and as to the other moiety for the son of another trustee.

In 1891, by a subsequent deed, the wife's life interest was cut down to an interest during widowhood, and the funds were settled to go on trust as the husband alone should appoint, and in default (excluding the power of appointment in the wife if she survived her husband) upon the trusts of the deed of 1890.

By a third deed in 1894 (made after the death of the husband, who never exercised his power of appointment) the wife's life interest was restored to her, and in all other respects the deed of 1891 was confirmed.

All three deeds were prepared by the solicitor of the husband, who was one of the trustees of the deed of 1890, and whose son benefited under that deed. He explained the effect of the deeds to the wife, but she had no independent advice, and it was never pointed out to her, either by the solicitor or by anyone else, that she ought to have independent advice.

Held, that, under the circumstances, the rule of law laid down in Huguenin v. Baseley, 14 Ves. 273, applied, and the transaction must be set aside.

Decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. (ante, p. 26, [1899] 2 Ch. 578), reversed.

This was an appeal from a decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. (reported ante, p. 26, [1899] 2 Ch. 578).

For the purposes of the present report the facts may be shortly stated as follow:

The plaintiff Mrs. Annie Butler Barron, the wife of William Barron, and formerly the wife of Joseph Willis, sought to set aside a deed executed in 1891 to which she was a party, and also to obtain a declaration that the defendant Frederick Herbert Skinner could not take any benefit under the said deed inasmuch as his father, the defendant William Moore Skinner, had acted as her solicitor in the preparation of the deed.

The defendant was married to Joseph Willis in October, 1889.

On the 29th of December, 1890, a deed was executed, which was made between Ann Willis, the mother of Joseph Willis, of the first part, Joseph Willis of the second part, the plaintiff of the third part, and the defendants Nicholas Willis, Isaac Dunn, and William Moore Skinner of the fourth part. By this deed certain property was settled by way of family arrangement. The trusts were during the joint lives of Ann Willis and Joseph Willis to pay him £100 a year, and subject thereto to pay the income to Ann Willis during her life, and subject thereto a protected life interest was given to Joseph Willis, and after his death a life interest was given to the widow of Joseph Willis, with subsequent trusts in favour of the children or issue of Joseph Willis, and in default of issue a general power of appointment by deed was given to Joseph Willis and the plaintiff jointly, and subject thereto a general power of appointment by deed was given to the survivor, and subject thereto the property was settled in trust as to one-half for the defendant Nicholas Willis, and as to the other half for the defendant Frederick Herbert Skinner, the son of William Moore Skinner, absolutely.

Differences arose between Joseph Willis and the plaintiff mainly by reason of his intemperate habits.

On the 3rd of October, 1891, a deed was executed by Joseph Willis, the plaintiff, and Ann Willis, which, after reciting that the present deed had been executed to vary the trusts of the deed of 1890, provided that the provision for the widow of Joseph Willis during her life should be read and construed as a provision for the benefit of such widow only so long as she should remain the widow of the said Joseph Willis, and that the words "after the decease of the survivor" should be read and construed as "after the decease of the survivor or the marriage of the widow"; and by the same deed Joseph Willis and the plaintiff, in exercise of the joint power of appointment vested in them in case of failure of issue, appointed that the trust funds should be held in trust for such person and in such manner as Joseph Willis alone should by deed appoint, and in default of appointment and so far as no such appointment should extend then (excluding the power of appointment by a widow of Joseph Willis) upon the trusts declared by the principal deed of 1890.

Joseph Willis died intestate and without issue in September, 1893.

By a deed dated the 2nd of August, 1894, and made between the plaintiff of the first part, Ann Willis of the second part, Frederick Herbert Skinner of the third part, and Nicholas Willis, Isaac Dunn, and William Moore Skinner of the fourth part, after reciting accurately the effect of the deeds of 1890 and 1891, and that it had been agreed by way of family arrangement that such further modification of the trusts as was thereinafter contained should be executed, it was provided that the direction contained in the settlement of 1890 for payment or application of the income of the trust funds to or for the benefit of the widow of Joseph Willis during her life should have full force and effect, and that such income should be paid to the plaintiff during her life in the same manner as if clause 1 of the modification deed of 1891 had not been inserted therein, and in all other respects the deeds of 1890 and 1891 should be and were thereby confirmed.

All the three deeds of 1890, 1891, and 1894 were prepared by William Moore Skinner as solicitor, with the assistance of counsel. William Moore Skinner was the solicitor of Joseph Willis and he admittedly acted as solicitor for the plaintiff in the deed of 1894. The other deeds were read over and explained by him to the plaintiff, but she had no independent legal advice on these deeds, and William Moore Skinner did not point out to her that she ought to have such separate legal advice.

As will be seen by the judgments of the Court of Appeal, the court were of opinion that William Moore Skinner, though he was not solicitor for the plaintiff in the earlier deeds, was in a confidential relation towards the plaintiff, and that it was his duty to point out to her the necessity of having independent advice.

Mrs. Ann Willis died in April, 1897.

In November, 1897, the plaintiff married again, and this action was commenced in February, 1898.

William Moore Skinner had purchased the reversionary interest of his son in one moiety, but, as was pointed out, he had full notice of all the facts and could not be in any better position than his son.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Cozens-Hardy, J., dismissed the action. His lordship held that the deed of 1891 was a good deed so far as it gave effect to the arrangement between husband and wife. It was prepared by the husband's solicitor and could only be impeached on the ground of William Moore Skinner's relationship towards the plaintiff. In his lordship's view this was not material, the transaction being between the husband and wife. He was, however, of opinion that the relationship of solicitor and client did not exist between William Moore Skinner and the plaintiff.

The plaintiff appealed.

Hughes, Q.C., and Ashton Cross, for the appeal.—Even though the plaintiff did not actually employ William M. Skinner as her solicitor, a highly confidential relationship existed between them. Whether William M. Skinner explained the deeds to the plaintiff or not, he never advised her on them, and she was entitled not only to advice, but to independent advice. There is no question here of retainer, or of the authority of a solicitor. It is a case of personal relationships. William Moore Skinner was a trustee of the deed of 1890, and he was also solicitor for the trustees and for the family. The case, therefore, is within the rule in Huguenin v. Baseley, 14 Ves. 273, that the court will not allow a person standing in a fiduciary relation to another to take a benefit from that other person unless the other has independent advice.

They also referred to Nedby v. Nedby, 5 De G. & Sm. 377; Liles v. Terry, 44 W. R. 116, [1895] 2 Q. B. 679; Proctor v. Robinson, 14 W. R. 381, 35 Beav. 329; Moxon v. Payne, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 881, 22 W. R. Dig. 110; Kempson v. Ashbee, 23 W. R. 38, L. R. 10 Ch. App. 15; Allcard v. Skinner, 36 W. R. 251, 36 Ch. D. 145.

Astbury, Q.C., and Stokes, for N. Willis.—The plaintiff had no animus donandi towards N. Willis. The only question is whether in 1891 the plaintiff knew that the effect of what she was doing was to deprive her of her rights in her husband's property. There was no reason why Skinner should prevent her exercising the joint power of appointment given to her and her husband. There is no case which makes a trustee's like a solicitor's position in the case of a relative taking a benefit.

Eve, Q.C., and Austen Cartmell, for the defendants W. M. Skinner and F. H. Skinner.

F. A. Milne, for the defendant Dunn.

Hughes, Q.C., in reply, referred to Goddard v. Carlisle, 9 Price 169.

LINDLEY, M.R.—This case is an important one and a difficult one, and although it has taken a considerable time, I do not think we can say the time has been unnecessarily consumed. It is a very important case, because it is very near the line, and although the principles applicable to the case are fixed and well settled, their application, I think, to this particular case is unquestionably difficult. The difficulty turns upon this, whether it was Mr. Skinner's duty to take care that this lady, the plaintiff, had independent advice in the transactions which are impeached? That depends mainly upon whether he was in such a confidential position towards her as to render it his duty to do so. I do not propose to make any reflection upon Mr. Skinner beyond this, that he certainly did not consider it his duty to do that, and if he failed in that respect then the observations made by Turner, L.J., in Rhodes v. Bate, 14 W. R. 292, L. R. 1 Ch. App. 252, would apply to him although he may have acted with perfect honesty, and that if he did disregard his duty the consequence must follow. Now, it appears to me that when the facts of the case are grasped it is impossible to deny the existence of a confidential relation between Mr. Skinner and the plaintiff in 1891 and 1894. Let us consider his position in 1891, when that first supplemental deed was executed. [His lordship stated the effect of the deed of 1890, and continued:] So that Mr. Skinner's position under the deed of 1890 was that he and Mr. Nicholas Willis and Mr. Dunn were trustees as well for the plaintiff as for anybody else; they had a discretion as to the application of Mr. Joseph Willis's income during his life, and the reversion of the beneficial interest in the settled property was half in one trustee and half in the son of another. That is a position of difficulty and delicacy for Mr. William Moore Skinner, who was the friend of the Willis family, and unquestionably a very intimate friend, and their legal adviser. He was trusted by them all, and he was in a position of delicacy because not only was he the trustee under the deed, but his son took a beneficial interest under it. Now that was his position under the deed of 1890, and under that deed alone. In consequence of the intemperate habits of Mr. Joseph Willis unhappy differences arose between him and his wife, and before the deed of 1891 was executed the plaintiff consulted Mr. Skinner, sen., as solicitor—that is, she went to him for advice. It was quite natural that she should, and I allude to it for the purpose of explaining the fact that in October, 1891, when this first supplemental deed was executed, she had been consulting Mr. Skinner about her position with reference to her settled property and her husband, and about a possible separation. There is some allusion in the deed of 1890 to a possible separation which looks as if even at that time it was considered quite possible that owing to her husband's habits of drink difficulties might arise, and difficulties unfortunately did arise. That was her position in 1891. In the late summer of 1891 there seems to have been unpleasantness between herself and her husband, and there was a family dispute. Mrs. Willis, the mother, and her son appear to have desired to have the deed of 1890 altered. I will not go through the details of the arrangement or the negotiations which led up to it; but the husband and mother naturally went to Mr. Skinner in regard to it. The wife was told that there was a mistake, and that the mother and the husband desired to have it put right or rectified. I do not attach much importance to the word "rectified," but they desired to have alterations made, and I am satisfied now, after the examination and cross-examination of the plaintiff Mrs. Barron, that she did know a great deal more than she at first admitted when she was examined. She knew, I think, that it was intended to cut down her life interest to an interest for the duration of her widowhood only, and she knew—though here, perhaps, there is a little obscurity—that the power of disposition was to be materially altered. The exact method of doing it the evidence shows, I think, that she did not know, but she certainly knew and understood that her husband was to have some power of disposition which he had not got before. That is obvious and certain. Whether she also realized that she was to have no power of disposition is a little more obscure, but Mr. Skinner says she understood that. Perhaps she did. Now, what was done? Mr. Skinner was instructed to carry out this alteration.

He did not like it; he did not like the way in which it was put before him, because it was put before him by the mother and the husband in the shape of a blunder of his own, that he had failed to carry out his instructions. They talked about rectifying a mistake, but he did not admit that there was any mistake at all. However, it was left to him to prepare a deed to carry into effect the wishes of the parties. That is all common ground. There were various modes of doing it, and he laid instructions before counsel to prepare the deed, and counsel did prepare a draft deed, but in consequence of the obscurity of the instructions counsel suggested two modes of doing it, one of which was a good deal more beneficial to the plaintiff than the other, and the other of which was less beneficial to the plaintiff, and was also most beneficial to the reversioners. Now the question, I think, arises, what was his duty to Mrs. Joseph Willis with reference to that matter? She says that she trusted him. She looked upon him as her confidential adviser and her solicitor. She did not employ him; of course she did not. He was employed by the other members of the family, but she did look to him to carry that matter out in a proper way and give her such assistance as occasion might require. He does to a certain extent. He suggests that she should go to some other solicitor, but he does not point out to her her real position. He said he explained the deed to her. I assume that he did to the full extent to which he says, but unquestionably he never gave her any advice showing that this alteration could not be made either without a lawsuit or without her consent. He never explained to her that it was so adverse to her interests that it would be inadvisable for her to execute it or concur in it without further consideration. He did not consider it his duty to do that. He said he did not consider that, and he thought all his duty was to explain the deed to her. There, it appears to me, he formed too low an opinion, too low a standard of his duty in the position in which he was placed, and considering the extent to which he knew he was trusted by all parties in the preparation of that deed. We are invited to take the view adopted by the learned judge, that he was a man of indifference, a solicitor merely carrying out a bargain already made between the parties, and it was no particular business of his to consider that bargain or to consider the interests of those who made it. Considering his relation to this lady it is impossible to accept that view of his position, and that is the key to the whole of this case. I cannot think that he performed his duty to her in merely explaining to her the effect of the deed without pointing out to her the various modes by which the desire of the parties could be carried out, and the extreme importance to her of the method of doing it in one way rather than another. In that sense it was not necessary that she should have independent advice, but it was necessary that she should have a fuller explanation than she had, and if she was entitled to receive that fuller explanation she did not get it, not because Mr. Skinner was scheming for personal advantages for himself or his son—I exonerate him from any feeling of that kind—but because he did not rise to the occasion, he did not see the delicacy of the position he was in, and he did not advise that lady to get independent advice so that she could realize what she was doing.

I cannot bring myself to think that if shortly after that deed had been executed Mrs. Joseph Willis had obtained independent advice and had sought to have it set aside she would have failed. I am convinced that she would have succeeded. Now, if that is so the rest of the case is really comparatively easy. I do not think it necessary to refer to the authorities to show that up to that point the principles to which I have been referring would carry the plaintiff all the way—viz., the doctrines with which we are familiar, and which were laid down in Huguenin v. Baseley, Rhodes v. Bate, and Liles v. Terry, they are all mere illustrations of the great principle which Lord Eldon laid down in Huguenin v. Baseley, which Turner, L.J., and Knight-Bruce, L.J., acted upon in the very difficult case of Rhodes v. Bate, and which we act upon here. But the principle is most important, and I am not the least disposed to adopt the view which is attributed to my learned predecessor, that it is bad. On the contrary, it is a rule based upon a knowledge of human nature, and it is laid down in order to prevent the very mischief that arises in a case like this, in a case on the line, where people may have acted fairly but without advice. Then, again, I accept what Mr. Skinner says when he differs from what the lady says. He says she was told in 1894 that she was in a position to attack that deed in 1891; she says no such thing was brought to her attention at all. On the contrary it was supposed that she could not. She rather got a benefit by the deed of 1894, which was in her favour, and Mr. Skinner is entitled to the merit of having obtained a larger measure of justice than perhaps she would have got without his assistance. It does restore to her a life interest, but he put in a clause at the end confirming the deed of 1891 without any further independent advice or any further illustration of what she was about, and to tell me she understood the effect of that is telling me what I do not believe for a moment. She did not understand it at all. She understood what she was told. She understood it was a confirming deed, but as to whether she understood what her rights and position were it gives us no useful information. It appears again upon principles which have been acted upon and illustrated in Moxon v. Payne amongst other cases that this confirmation cannot assist the defendant. Neither can I adopt the view that by the realeasing of her power which was conferred upon her in the deed of 1890 she was giving up a mere trifling benefit so as to entitle the defendant to an advantage, as Turner, L.J., said in Rhodes v. Bate about small gifts and things of that kind. I followed Mr. Astbury's observation that if you took the reversion into the market and were to calculate her chance of selling it, probably nobody would give her anything for it, but it does not follow at all that the power of appointment which was vested in her in the deed of 1890 was not of the greatest possible value to her. It may have been or may not. It depended on whether the husband exercised his power of appointment. I don't know whether he would or would not, but in the events which have happened I see the enormous importance of the plaintiff not beng deprived of that which she was deprived of without knowing what she was about. Now, the only other point worth mentioning is the position of Mr. Nicholas Willis. Mr. Astbury has argued his case with his usual skill, and he says what is true enough: Mr. Nicholas Willis does not claim under the deed of 1891. He claims under the deed of 1890. So he does. He claims the reversion. But if he claims the benefit of the deed of 1891, what does he claim? He claims the extinction of the plaintiff's power, but so far as he relies upon that, he relies upon those who obtained it, and must take it with its defects. That a volunteer has no equity in setting aside a deed of this kind has been settled again and again, not only in Huguenin v. Baseley, but it was mentioned and discussed by my late brother Fry in Bainbrigge v. Browne, 29 W. R. 782, 18 Ch. D. 188, and it is quite obvious that unless Mr. Nicholas Willis was in possession of some equity of his own to set this deed aside it does not avail him. It appears to me on the whole the learned judge has not attributed importance to the confidential relation which existed certainly between this lady and Mr. Skinner in 1891, that he has rather overrated her admission that she did not employ Mr. Skinner—which I admit to the full, and where we part is that he did not consider it Mr. Skinner's duty to do more than he did. There I cannot agree with him. Therefore I am of opinion that the appeal must be allowed and that a declaration must be made in accordance with the first two paragraphs of the prayer of the claim, and that the defendant must pay the costs both here and below, including the costs of Mr. John Dunn, who has taken no part in the controversy.

RIGBY, L.J.—In my opinion the real relevant question in this case is, was there a confidential relation between Mr. Skinner and the plaintiff at the time of the execution of the deeds of 1891 and 1894, and had the plaintiff independent advice? Certainly she had not independent advice, and I do not think that any advice from Mr. Skinner could avail him in the way of defence. Once or twice he suggested that her husband and herself, and afterwards her mother-in-law and herself, should go to an independent solicitor. For what? There was never a hint that they should get advice as to their rights and so on, but as to the contents of the deed they were to go to the solicitor as a dictionary. Having absolute confidence in Mr. Skinner they did not think fit to do so. The fact is, that is the only advice that Mrs. Joseph Willis got throughout the whole affair. The more difficult question perhaps is as to the nature of the relation between the parties, but I am of opinion that undoubtedly, whether in his own mind he chose to act as though he were not acting as solicitor, the important matter is as to whether the plaintiff did right to place confidence in him as her solicitor. I think the case is proven. She employed him de facto as her solicitor in reference to the trouble that arose between her husband and herself, but even in the matter of the settlement he undertook on the 30th of September to act towards her in a way in which I think is conclusive against him that he was her solicitor. To be sure in his own mind he draws the line. "I went to tell her, to give her information, but not advice." Can a man split his duty in that way and say, "I abstained altogether from advising her, and therefore I was not her solicitor"? I think not, and I think that would be conclusive against him. Now what ought he to have done—for I want to be understood—when this deed of 1891 was agitated or first spoken of? He ought to have said to Mrs. Willis (I do not say that he would not have said so if he had appreciated his position), "Now this is a case in which your interests are very closely and in a very important degree concerned. I am acting for your husband, it is not right that I should act for you; therefore, before I take a step in the matter I insist—not only I recommend, but I insist—upon your going to an independent solicitor." That independent solicitor I cannot think would have had any doubt as to what advice he should give her. He would say, "You have got an important right under the deed of 1891 which must not lightly be given up; you have got a joint power of appointment with your husband, you have got power in the event of your being survivor to appoint the whole of the fund." "Very well," she might have said "I do not care for that at all. I shall do as I please, and what I please is to give up those powers." If that had taken place it might have been quite right that they should be given up; but it cannot be, and in my judgment it is not right at all that the husband's solicitor should act in the matter as if she had no rights of her own and without telling her of what she was doing. However fully he might have explained the deeds, if he did not bring home to her mind the rights which could not be taken away from her—because on this evidence I think it is idle to suppose that the deed could be rectified.—I say nothing about Mrs. Ann Willis, she had strong views, as ladies sometimes will have, about what ought to be done; but the misfortune is that she never at the proper time communicated those views to Mr. Skinner. Now it is suggested that the learned judge appears to a considerable extent to have accepted that suggestion that this was a bargain between husband and wife. I never saw a case which was to my mind more hopeless than that. [His lordship discussed the relations between the parties, and continued:] In my opinion there is no evidence at all of any bargain between the husband and wife. Where is the bargain? The husband sent the plaintiff to Mr. Skinner, and she had to go to Mr. Skinner, in whom she had implicit confidence, and get from him the proposal. [His lordship commented on Mr. Skinner's evidence, and continued:] I will accept his evidence as far as it goes, and I will assume that on the 30th of September, and again on the 3rd of October, he explained to her so that she might fully understand them the terms of the deed. But that is not enough. Mr. Skinner was acting as the solicitor for the husband, and he never pointed out to the plaintiff, as was his duty under the circumstances, that he was acting on behalf of parties whose interests were opposed to hers. But I will assume she knew what she was doing well enough, and that she executed the deeds with the full knowledge of their contents. That is just the case that raises the question on the rule of law. The law is that a person who enters into a transaction which has the result of benefiting the solicitor employed, or members of his family, cannot be bound unless he or she has had independent advice. As to the confirmation, there can be no confirmation as long as the confidential relation continues to exist which is alleged, and in this case proved, to have existed at the time of the transaction of 1891. Then as to the deed of 1894 it is said that was a deed of confirmation, but it would not matter if she confirmed every day or executed a deed of confirmation, because that would only prove the absolute influence that the solicitor had over her in the matter. After the husband's death she escaped from those influences, and only a few months intervened before the action was brought. The question is when did she get information, and it is not until she had consulted an independent solicitor that she got that.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, but as we are differing from the learned judge below, I will add a few words. It seems to me that when the facts of this case are analyzed the point resolves itself into a small and comparatively simple one. I take the crucial fact to be this: Was there or was there not such a relation between the plaintiff and Mr. Skinner as to place the obligation upon him not only to explain to her but to advise her? Now, if that relation subsisted between them, he does not himself contend that he ever advised. His case is that he had no duty beyond explaining, and that he explained. Well, now, did the relation that I have suggested subsist? It is common ground that this lady had, within a short time before the deed of 1891 was contemplated, consulted Mr. Skinner upon a matter of the most extreme delicacy. She had consulted him upon the relations between herself and her husband with a view to a possible separation. In the words of Lord Eldon in Huguenin v. Baseley, it was a demonstration, he says, to Baseley in that case, and to Mr. Skinner it would be here, that she placed confidence in him as high as one individual ever placed in another. That was the relation subsisting between them at the time when she came to him for that advice. That relation must be presumed on the authority of Rhodes v. Bate to have continued up to the time when this deed of 1891 came into contemplation, but it appears to me obvious that he was specially consulted by her with reference to that deed. He had been the family solicitor, he had been not only the family solicitor, but he had been in this exceedingly confidential relation with her, and his own case is that he did communicate with her about this deed, and did in a sense advise her. That is, in a sense to which he thought his obligation was limited —viz., the explaining to her what the effect of the deed was. The situation is complicated further by this, that in this arrangement as to which he has taken up the rôle of a mutual expert explaining the situation he takes for his son a possible benefit. Now how does that affect the relation? Why, it introduces this difficulty into the matter, that being the person bound by virtue of his relation which I have described to advise this lady, he, by so doing, incapacitated himself from doing it, and he was no longer in a position to give her that advice she was entitled to have; and, further, he debarred himself from accepting benefit from her without showing—the burden was upon him of showing—that she got independent advice. He does not suggest on his own evidence that she ever did have independent advice. He does not suggest that he took any steps to procure it for her. He does, as has been pointed out by my learned brother Rigby, suggest that she should get somebody else to explain what in fact the meaning of the deed was—that is, an explanation of her true position in reference to all the circumstances, what she has a right to keep, what she is to give up. That obligation is not satisfied by merely measuring what she has given away or what she has a right to keep. That had to be clearly brought before her, and it never was brought before her at all. Now under those circumstances this deed was executed, and it seems to me by its execution a slight advantage was secured for the younger Skinner, a barrier which might have been insuperable while the old arrangement existed—viz., her joint right of appointment during her husband's lifetime, and her absolute right if she had survived him in herself alone. Those elements were removed out of the way to a possible succession under this reversion deed, and in my judgment that was a slight advantage secured to the son of Skinner, the solicitor, who, on the observations I have already made, was the solicitor placed in a position in which it was obligatory upon him to give her full and impartial advice as to all the circumstances attending the execution of the deed. He had incapacitated himself from giving it, and he finds himself there receiving a benefit which he is incapable of accepting unless she had that independent advice. Therefore, accepting as I do with perfect frankness all the conclusions of the learned judge below on the question of fact, it seems to me on the admitted facts of this case up to this point the plaintiff has an unanswerable claim. Then it is said that by the transaction of 1894 she confirmed this voidable settlement of 1891, but when you look at the facts it is perfectly obvious, whatever that deed is, it cannot be confirmation. Confirmation when she did not know her rights! Confirmation when she accepted a situation which in her judgment she had no power to control, and she accepted it because it was the most she could get, and all that Frank Skinner and Nicholas Willis could be compelled to give her? Is that confirmation? There can be no confirmation unless she knows of her rights and has independent advice upon them. The same observation applies in answer to the suggestion that she slept upon her rights. She slept upon them when she did not know what her rights were? Impossible. She never did know what her rights were, and never got independent advice upon them until after she got married again.

Solicitors, Wynne-Baxter & Keeble, for Beldon & Ackroyd, Bradford; Sismey & Sismey, for Skinner, Son, & Church, Sunderland; Patersons, Snow, Bloxam, & Kinder, for Ransen, Nelson, & Maling, Sunderland.

---

From Q. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) — Feb. 16.

SMITH v. BUTLER. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Contract for sale of lease of public-house — Date of completion — Deposit—Forfeiture—Conditions of sale—Time during which condition imposed on vendor may be performed.

When a lessee of a house, upon which there is a subsisting mortgage, agrees to assign the residue of his lease, and the purchaser agrees to buy it on the condition that the whole of the mortgage loan is transferred to him, and a deposit is paid by him and a time fixed for the completion of the contract, he is not justified in treating a refusal of the mortgagee, prior to the date fixed for completion, to transfer the whole, but only a part, of the loan as entitling him, the purchaser, to at once treat the contract as at an end, for the vendor has until the date fixed for the completion of the contract in which to obtain the consent of the mortgagee.

This was an appeal by the defendant from the judgment of Bucknill, J., at the trial of the cause without a jury.

The action was brought to recover a deposit of £100 paid by the plaintiff to the defendant upon a contract for the purchase of a lease of a public-house.

The house was the property of one Kidd, a brewer, who had advanced the sum of £900, upon mortgage of the house, to the defendant, who was lessee thereof for a term of years.

The money was payable on demand, and it was arranged between the owner and lessee that the latter should repay the loan by an annual payment of £50; only one sum of £50, however, was repaid.

On the 10th of September, 1898, the plaintiff entered into a contract with the defendant whereby the defendant, in consideration of the sum of £100 then paid to him by the plaintiff by way of deposit, and of the further sum of £1,700 to be paid on completion, agreed to assign to the plaintiff the lease of the said house and all his interest therein for the residue of the unexpired term, and the 10th of November, 1898, was fixed as the date for the completion of the purchase. It was further provided that in case of default by the purchaser the deposit of £100 was to be forfeited; and it was stated that the agreement was entered into conditionally that the said Kidd would transfer his then present loan of £850 to the plaintiff.

On the 4th of October the plaintiff, the defendant, and a broker who acted for both parties, had an interview with Kidd, who refused to allow more than £700 to remain on mortgage, this to be repaid by instalments of £50 per annum. The plaintiff thereupon decided to treat his contract with the defendant as at an end. Later on the same day, however, the broker had another interview with Kidd, though not with the authority of the plaintiff, when Kidd agreed to transfer the whole loan of £850 on condition that it was paid off by instalments of £50 per annum. The plaintiff was informed of this fact, but he continued to treat the contract as determined, and on the 11th of November he brought an action to recover the deposit of £100 paid by him to the defendant.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Bucknill, J., before whom the case was tried, gave judgment for the plaintiff.

The defendant now appealed.

Bray, Q.C. (C. L. Attenborough with him), for the appellant.—The plaintiff was not entitled to repudiate the contract when he did, as the defendant had until the date fixed for completion in which to obtain Kidd's consent for the transfer of the whole of the loan. The sale, therefore, went off by the plaintiff's default, and he could not recover the deposit: Day v. Singleton, ante, p. 18, [1899] 2 Ch. 320.

Blake Odgers, Q.C. (F. O. Robinson with him), for the respondent.—The time during which the consent of the mortgagee was to be obtained did not extend to the date fixed for completion; such consent must be obtained within a reasonable time, and the refusal of the mortgagee on the 4th of October was such as to justify the purchaser in treating the contract as at an end: Davis v. Nisbett, 9 W. R. 840, 10 C. B. N. S. 752. It would be unreasonable to expect the purchaser to wait to see if the vendor could later on perform the condition and to incur further expenses when he had good reason to believe the condition would never be performed. The vendor never performed the condition because the mortgagee never consented to transfer the mortgage, except on condition that it was repaid by annual instalments, therefore the vendor could not say that the purchaser was not ready and willing to complete: Weston v. Savage, 27 W. R. 654, 10 Ch D. 736; Forrer v. Nash, 14 W. R. 8, 35 Beav. 167; Lloyd v. Crispe, 5 Taunt. 249.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—This is an appeal from Bucknill, J., and in my opinion his judgment cannot be supported. The facts of the case are that a lease of a public-house for a term of years was granted to the defendant. The lessor, who was the owner of the house, had lent £900 to the defendant upon mortgage, the money being repayable on demand, there being an understanding that the loan should be paid off by annual instalments of £50, but as a matter of fact only one such instalment was ever paid, so that there remained on mortgage the sum of £850. The plaintiff desired to purchase the residue of the defendant's lease provided that the owner would allow the money then due on the mortgage to remain outstanding, and on the 10th of September, 1898, he entered into an agreement with the defendant for the sale, the purchase to be completed on the 10th of November, 1898. A deposit was to be paid by the plaintiff on signing the contract, which deposit was to be forfeited in case of any default on his part. The agreement contained a clause which provided that it was subject to the condition that the owner would transfer the loan to the plaintiff. It seems clear to me that if the owner was willing to transfer the loan, the defendant had until the date fixed for completion in which to obtain the consent of the owner to the transfer, and if he obtained such consent by that date he would have performed his part of the agreement in that respect. On the 4th of October the plaintiff and the defendant, accompanied by a broker, had an interview with the owner, who refused to allow more than £700 to remain on mortgage. The plaintiff thereupon at once said that he would have nothing more to do with the purchase, and that the contract was off. Subsequently on the same day the broker, on behalf of the defendant, had another interview with the owner, when the latter agreed that he would consent to the transfer of the loan of £850, provided that it was paid off by annual instalments of £50, according to the existing condition. The question for us is whether the plaintiff, after the interview of the 4th of October, was justified in treating the contract as at an end. In my opinion, he was not so entitled because the defendant had until the date fixed for completion—viz., the 10th of November, to procure the consent of the owner to the transfer of the mortgage. The plaintiff might have receded from the position he took up after the interview when he later on found that the owner had consented to the transfer of the whole mortgage, and he might then have said he was willing to complete, and had he done so there would have been nothing to prevent him from suing the defendant if there had been any breach of the agreement by the latter. But the plaintiff never did recede from the position he took up after the interview, and that being so it was through his fault, and not through any fault on the part of the defendant, that the purchase was not completed. He therefore cannot recover the deposit, and the appeal must be allowed.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The whole question is whether the plaintiff was entitled to treat what happened at the interview as a final declaration by the defendant that he was unable to carry out his part of the contract. If he was so entitled, then he could rescind the contract and sue for the recovery of his deposit. In the present case it was clearly proved that the plaintiff finally withdrew on the 4th of October from the contract, and that he never afterwards altered his position. If the plaintiff had legal rights in so treating what happened on that date as a final refusal on the part of the defendant to carry out the contract, then he was right in the present case; if not, then he was in the wrong. What right had he to treat what happened at that interview as a final declaration on the part of the defendant that he was unable to carry out his part of the contract or that he refused so to do? True it is that at that interview the defendant was not then in a position to say that he was able to fulfil the condition as to the transfer: but the contract does not say that that condition is to be fulfilled before the 10th of November. If inability to perform the condition at some date prior to the date fixed for completion is to be taken as a ground for the rescission of the contract, such right to rescind must be established by the contract itself or by some independent agreement between the parties. But there is absolutely no evidence of any such right or agreement, or even of any custom to that effect, and therefore the defendant retained all his rights up to the date fixed for completion.

The plaintiff was wrong in treating the events of the 4th of October as a final refusal or declaration of inability on the part of the defendant to carry out the contract, and having taken up that position and held to it he cannot now aver readiness and willingness on his part to carry out the contract. This view of the law is nowhere more clearly dealt with than by Lord Esher, M.R., in Johnstone v. Milling, 34 W. R. 238, 16 Q. B. D. 460.

I am therefore of opinion that the plaintiff cannot succeed in this action.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree. It is clear to my mind that the vendor has until the time fixed for completion in which to obtain the consent of a mortgagee to accept the purchaser as a mortgagor, or, if no time for completion is fixed, then a reasonable time in which to obtain such consent. Though the condition that the vendor shall obtain the consent of the mortgagee is one that may be fulfilled at any time before the completion, yet I do not think that the purchaser is always bound to wait until the actual date fixed for completion. I can suggest several such cases. One such where the purchaser is able to prove that the conditions cannot practically be fulfilled by that date. Another where the vendor has practically admitted that the condition cannot be fulfilled. A third where a vendor and purchaser have agreed that a particular refusal of the mortgagee to accept the purchaser as mortgagor is to be taken as conclusive, which agreement need not be expressly stated, but may be implied from the circumstances.

It is for the purchaser to show some special agreement or circumstances whereby he is entitled to treat the contract as at an end, and if he is unable to show that he is so entitled and goes back from his contract, the vendor may treat the contract as broken by the purchaser, and he would be relieved from further carrying out his part of the contract or performing the condition, and in such a case the purchaser is not entitled to recover the sum he has paid as a deposit.

The cases which have been cited are, with one exception, cases where the purchaser, before the time for completion had arrived, became aware of the fact that the vendor did not possess the legal title and was unable to complete the contract.

Those cases therefore have no bearing upon the present one. The only case cited that has any bearing upon this case is that of Davis v. Nisbett. That case was one on a demurrer, and the fifth plea was treated by the court as an averment of final and irrevocable disapproval of the person proposed as a tenant, and it therefore comes within that class of case I have already pointed out—namely, where there is a failure to perform a condition which is shown to be final and conclusive.

It seems to me that the present case does not come within any of the classes of cases that I have alluded to. It is perfectly clear that the defendant in this case did not treat the refusal of the owner as final and conclusive, and in my opinion the plaintiff under the circumstances was not justified in treating the contract as at an end.

Further, as to the stipulation that the plaintiff should pay off the mortgage debt by annual instalments, that imposed no burden upon him, inasmuch as the money was payable on demand. I agree, therefore, that the appeal must be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the appellant, S. J. Attenborough.

Solicitors for the respondent, Benwell & Norfolk.

---

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } March 30.

In re WHITEHEAD & BROTHERS (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Shares—Fully paid up—Certificate of incorporation—Contract—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25—Companies Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 26), s. 1.

The certificate of incorporation of a company was dated the 9th of August, 1870. A contract under which the vendor to the company was to receive a certain number of fully-paid shares was signed on the 21st of October and registered on the 27th of October, 1870. The vendor had subscribed for the same number of shares in the memorandum of association. It was held in the case of Dalton Time Lock Co. v. Dalton, 66 L. T. Rep. 704, 40 W. R. Dig. 40, that the certificate of incorporation operated as the issue of the shares signed for in the memorandum of association.

Held, that, in the special circumstances of the case, relief would be granted to the personal representative of the vendor; and the court ordered the company to file a memorandum, which should operate as a sufficient contract in writing within the meaning of section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, and as if it had been duly filed at or before the issue of the shares.

This was a motion under section 1, sub-sections 1 and 4, of the Companies Act, 1898, for an order for the filing of a memorandum in writing specifying the consideration for which 1,068 ordinary shares of £100 each in Whitehead & Brothers (Limited) were issued, and that such memorandum when filed should operate as if it were a sufficient contract in writing within the meaning of section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, and had been duly filed at or before the issue of the above shares.

The company was incorporated on the 9th of August, 1870, and its nominal capital was £130,000 divided into 1,300 shares of £100 each.

By an agreement made on the 21st of October, 1870, Ralph Radcliffe Whitehead, as vendor, sold the business to the company for £130,000, of which £106,800 was to be paid in 1,068 fully-paid shares.

The agreement was registered on the 27th of October, 1870, and afterwards the 1,068 shares, numbered from 1 to 1,068, were allotted to R. R. Whitehead as fully paid up. The remaining 232 shares in the company were issued and fully paid up. There were certain material omissions in the articles. No provisions were made with regard to calls upon shares, and no provision was made to enable the directors to allot the capital, but there was a provision as to new shares.

R. R. Whitehead died in 1871. His will was proved by his widow and two other executors, of whom his widow was the survivor. She was now dead, and the present application was made by her executor.

The difficulty in the case arose from the fact that the vendor had signed the memorandum of association in respect of the 1,068 shares, and as the certificate of the incorporation operated as the issue of such shares, the contract whereby the 1,068 shares were to be deemed fully paid up, was not, therefore, a sufficient compliance with section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, which requires that such a contract should be filed at or before the issue of such shares.

Theobald, Q.C., and Bunting, for the applicant.—According to the decision in Dalton Time Lock v. Dalton, 66 L. T. Rep. 704, 40 W. R. Dig. 40, the issue of the shares took place when the memorandum and articles were registered, and, therefore, in the present case before the contract was filed. In the case of In re Jarvis & Co., 47 W. R. 186, [1899] 1 Ch. 193, Romer, J., refused to grant relief under the Companies Act, 1898, but that case was distinguishable from the present one. In the present case there was no definite contract concluded at the time the memorandum was registered, but the intended contract was set out in full in the memorandum. In the case decided by Romer, J., there were two separate contracts, and there was not apparently sufficient evidence to identify the shares concerned.

Eve, Q.C., and E. S. Ford, for the company.

COZENS-HARDY, J.—I think Mr. Theobald is entitled to the relief he asks. I think this case is quite distinguishable from that decided by Romer, J. There can be no difficulty about identifying these shares with those in the memorandum. I think this should be made quite clear. I will preface the order by an expression to the effect: "That the court being of opinion that the 1,068 shares, numbered 1 to 1,068, referred to in the agreement of the 27th of October are the shares for which R. R. Whitehead signed the memorandum of association."

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, Johnson, Weatherall, & Sturt.

---

Chan. Div. Farwell, J. } March 14.

RUDD v. LASCELLES. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser — Specific performance—Open contract—Restrictive covenants—Compensation.

In the case of an open contract the court will not decree specific performance with compensation where a vendor has entered into an open contract to sell property which, unknown to the vendor, is subject to restrictive covenants, and where there is no condition in the contract as to compensation, as to decree specific performance with compensation in such a case would be making a new contract, and not enforcing the one which the parties agreed to.

The very great difficulty in assessing compensation in such a case is another ground for refusing such relief.

Action for specific performance with compensation.

The defendant had agreed to sell the plaintiff certain houses and land at Harrogate, Yorkshire, for £3,500.

The contract was an open one and there were no conditions inserted as to restrictive covenants.

The defendant had not looked into her title when she entered into the agreement for sale. When the title came to be looked into it was found to contain restrictive covenants as to building and user.

The plaintiff now claimed specific performance of the agreement with compensation for the restrictive covenants, which compensation he estimated at £1,000.

Bramwell Davis, Q.C., and T. P. Perks, for the plaintiff.—Here the purchaser can insist on specific performance on the part of the vendor, although the latter could not compel him to take the property against his will. The difference between what the vendor contracted to sell and what he is able to sell is a matter for compensation: Fry on Specific Performance (3rd ed.), sections 1257-1278. Where you can form a reasonable estimate of the amount of compensation from the evidence of competent persons the court will do so—e.g., where another person had the right to dig for coal under the land: Ramsden v. Hirst, 6 W. R. 349, 4 Jur. N. S. 200. The misdescription was not wilful here and therefore is not ground for refusing to grant specific performance: Price v. Macauley, 2 De G. M. & G. 339. There is no hardship in this case, as the price after compensation has been deducted will represent the real value of the defendant's property.

Hughes, Q.C., and A. L. Ellis, for the defendant.—This is not a case for compensation, as it would entail great hardship on the defendant. The plaintiff is only entitled to rescind the contract or to enforce it by paying the full price: Earl of Durham v. Legard 13 W. R. 959, 34 Beav. 611; Collier v. Jenkins, Younge 295; Thomas v. Dering, 1 Keen 729. Ramsden v. Hirst is distinguishable, as there there was an express condition for compensation.

Bramwell Davis, Q.C., in reply.

FARWELL, J.—It is very material that both parties knew the vendor had not looked into her title nor knew what that title was; certainly there was no holding out of an indefeasible right to a fee simple. There was no wilful misrepresentation on the part of the vendor. I am asked to decree specific performance without compensation. I adhere to what I said in Hexter v. Pearce, ante, p. 330, [1900] 1 Ch. 341, the right to sue on a contract is the same in law and equity but the remedies differ and a court of equity will grant the equitable remedy in all cases, so far as I have been able to discover, unless there has been some conduct on the part of the plaintiff disentitling him to the relief in equity, or in some rare instances where there would be great hardship imposed on an innocent grantor or lessor by reason of some mistake which he has made, even if the other party did not contribute to it. I adopt the view expressed by Lord Langdale, M.R., in Thomas v. Dering: "It is impossible not to see that the cy près execution of the contract which is given in these cases is in fact the execution of a new contract which the parties did not enter into, in which there is no mutuality, and in which there are no adequate means of ascertaining the just price." Now, if I decree specific performance in this case, I shall compel the parties to enter into a contract they never contemplated. The jurisdiction in a case of this sort rests on a sort of equitable estoppel—viz., that the vendor cannot say that, though he has valuable interests he has not got the entirety of the property, and therefore the purchaser shall not have the benefit of his property: Mortlock v. Buller, 10 Ves. 292, at p. 315. It is in fact a cy près execution of the contract founded on the principle that the vendor is estopped from denying that he had the property which he had represented he was able to sell. That the doctrine rested on that ground is, I think, also borne out by the judgment of Gifford, L.J., in Castle v. Wilkinson, 18 W. R. 586, L. R. 5 Ch. App. 534. Here, however, there has no been no direct representation, although it is true that a person selling in this way implies that the fee is unincumbered. Having regard to all the other circumstances of the present case, I cannot find the slightest foundation for any idea that the purchaser has been misled by any misrepresentation whatever. Now I come to the defence that was raised—namely, that specific performance with compensation ought not to be decreed, because of the impossibility or great difficulty in ascertaining the right compensation in cases of this kind. Jessel, M.R., in referring to the great difficulty in assessing compensation, says in Cato v. Thompson, 9 Q. B. D. 616, at p. 618, 31 W. R. Dig. 210: "This is not a case for enforcing specific performance on a purchaser with compensation. It is almost impossible to assess compensation for covenants of this nature. I think that cases of specific performance with compensation ought not to be extended. In many of them a bargain, substantially different from that which the parties entered into, has been substituted for it and enforced, which is not right. I think this is not a case for compensation." I respectfully entirely agree with this. There should be no extension to cases like the present, where the subject-matter which the vendor has to convey is substantially different from that which was agreed upon. I have seen no case contravening the dictum of Jessel, M.R., brought to my notice. In Ramsden v. Hirst there was an express condition for compensation. In Barnes v. Wood, 17 W. R. 1080, L. R. 8 Eq. 424, which was referred to in Castle v. Wilkinson, a man chose to say he had something which as a fact he had not. But in this present case there has been no wilful misrepresentation at all. Further, it would be a great hardship on the defendant if special performance was decreed, for instead of obtaining £3,500 as she expected she would receive almost one-third less—a serious matter for a woman with a limited income. I think, therefore, the plaintiff fails, and as an offer was made by the defendant to reduce the purchase-money by £250, the plaintiff must pay the costs.

(a.) Reported by C. W. MEAD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, F. Hatton, for W. Topham, Harrogate; Morgan, Price, & Mewburn.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Ridley and Bigham, JJ.) May 22.

HAWKINS AND OTHERS v. JUSTICES OF BRIDGWATER. (a.)

Licensing law—Renewal—General annual licensing meeting—Proceedings where no notice of opposition—Objection—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 42.

At the general annual licensing meeting of a division in which a certain beerhouse was situated, a report made by the head constable of the division was read, in which he asked that the renewal of the licence of the beerhouse should be withheld until the adjourned meeting. No notice of opposition to the licence had been served on the licence-holder prior to the meeting, nor had he had notice to attend at the meeting. The justices thereupon adjourned the granting of the licence, and gave notice to the licence-holder to attend at the adjourned meeting.

Held, that an objection was made within the meaning of section 42 (2) of the Licensing Act, 1872, and that the justices had jurisdiction to consider the objection of the head constable at the adjourned meeting.

Case stated by the justices of Somersetshire.

The appellant Hawkins was the tenant of The Mariner's Compass beerhouse in Bridgwater which was licensed as such prior to the 1st of May, 1869, for consumption on the premises.

Prior to the general annual licensing meeting for Bridgwater, which was held on the 28th of August, 1899, no notice of objection to the renewal of the licence of the beerhouse had been served on the appellant, and he did not attend the meeting, nor was he requested to do so.

At the meeting, the head constable for Bridgwater presented his annual report (which was read in open court) as to offences committed by licensed victuallers in and about licensed premises during the year.

In the report the following passage occurred: "It is my pleasure to report a decrease in the charges of drunkenness during the year and also that the licensed houses generally have been well conducted; but I respectfully ask that the renewal of the Mariner's Compass beerhouse, St. Mary-street, may be withheld until the adjourned meeting." No other objection to the renewal was made nor was any ground of objection stated. The justices thereupon directed the matter to stand over until the 25th of September following.

On the 7th of September, 1899, two summonses were issued against Hawkins, one for permitting his licensed premises to be the resort of prostitutes on the 26th of August, 1899, the other for permitting his licensed premises to be used as a brothel on the 2nd of September, 1899.

The fact that the justices had directed the renewal of his licence to stand over was personally brought to Hawkins' notice a day or two after the 28th of August, 1899, and he was at the same time told that the charges contained in the summonses would be preferred against him. Hawkins was convicted on the first of the two summonses on the 18th of September, and the conviction was ordered to be indorsed on his licence. The second summons was withdrawn.

On the 21st of September the justices served on Hawkins a notice requiring him to attend at the adjourned annual licensing meeting on the 25th of September if he intended to apply for the renewal of his licence.

At the adjourned annual licensing meeting the head constable objected to the renewal of the licence, and Hawkins, who attended with his solicitor, objected that the justices had no jurisdiction to entertain any objection to the renewal, on the grounds, inter alia, that no notice in writing of objection had been served upon him as required by section 42 (2) of the Act of 1872, and that no objection to the renewal of the licence was made at the general annual licensing meeting on the 28th of August within the meaning of the proviso.

The justices overruled Hawkins' objection, and, having heard the evidence, refused to renew the licence. The appellants appealed to the quarter sessions, who dismissed the appeal subject to this case, the question for the opinion of the court being whether the request of the head constable that the renewal of the licence should be postponed was an objection within the proviso of section 42 (2) of the Licensing Act, 1872, which, coupled with the notice to Hawkins to attend at the adjourned meeting, conferred jurisdiction upon the justices to hear the objection at the adjourned meeting without other notice of objection.

Section 42 of the Licensing Act, 1872, provides as follows: "Where a licensed person applies for the renewal of his licence the following provisions shall have effect:

"(1) He need not attend in person at the general annual licensing meeting, unless he is required by the licensing justices so to attend.

"(2) The justices shall not entertain any objection to the renewal of such licence, or take any evidence with respect to the renewal thereof, unless written notice of an intention to oppose the renewal of such licence has been served on such holder not less than seven days before the commencement of the general annual licensing meeting: provided that the licensing justices may, notwithstanding that no notice has been given, on an objection being made, adjourn the granting of any licence to a future day, and require the attendance of the holder of the licence on such day, when the case will be heard and the objection considered as if the notice hereinbefore prescribed had been given."

Foote, Q.C. (F. E. Weatherley and Haythorne Reed with him), for the appellants.—The justices had no jurisdiction to hear the objection. It was a condition precedent to their jurisdiction that, in the absence of notice to the licence-holder prior to the general annual meeting, an objection should be made at the meeting. No such objection was made: see Reg. v. Merthyr Tydvil Justices, 14 Q. B. D. 584, 33 W. R. Dig. 122.

Duke, Q.C. (D. Metcalfe with him), for the respondents.—An objection within the meaning of section 42 of the Licensing Act, 1872, was made at the general annual licensing meeting. What the head constable said at the meeting was intended to be an objection, and it was treated as such by the magistrates.

RIDLEY, J.—The question in this case is whether an objection within the meaning of section 42 of the

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Licensing Act, 1872, was made at the general annual licensing meeting. I have come to the conclusion that such an objection was made. The section referred to for the first time allowed a licensed person who desired a renewal of his licence not to attend at the general annual licensing meeting unless he was required so to do, and it provides that the licensing justices are not at that meeting to entertain objections to renewals unless a written notice of the objection has been served upon the licence-holder before the meeting. But notwithstanding no notice has been given, upon an objection being made at the meeting the justices may adjourn the granting of the licence to a future day.

Here no formal objection was made—that is to say, no one said, "I object to the renewal of the licence, and I ask you to adjourn the granting of it." But the head constable said: "I respectfully ask that the renewal of the 'Mariner's Compass' beerhouse may be withheld until the adjourned meeting." Thereupon the justices, treating that as an objection, and acting in pursuance of section 42, adjourned the granting of the licence. The words of the head constable were regarded by the justices as an objection within the meaning of the section, and they were also so regarded by the head constable himself, though he had not at that time made up his mind as to what course he would adopt, awaiting, as he was, the result of the proceedings which were then about to be taken against the licence-holder. We ought therefore to treat this matter as if an objection had been made at the general annual licensing meeting. The rest of the proceedings having been regular, the justices had jurisdiction to hear the objection, and the appeal would therefore be dismissed.

BIGHAM, J.—I am of the same opinion. It is alleged that the licensing justices acted without jurisdiction because a condition precedent to their jurisdiction required by the provisions of section 42 of the Licensing Act, 1872, was not complied with. That condition precedent is that in the absence of a written notice to the licence-holder to attend the general annual licensing meeting an objection should have been made at the meeting itself. The question is whether in the present instance such an objection was in fact made. The head constable had made a report to the justices which was read in open court by the clerk to the justices. It contained a request that the renewal of the licence in question should be withheld until the adjourned meeting. What is that request but an objection to the renewal of the licence? It means that the head constable objected to that being done on that day which might have been done—that is to say, the granting of the renewal. He objected to that being done. How did the justices treat the request? They treated it as an objection, for they did what had to be done in the event of an objection being made. They adjourned the granting of the licence and required the attendance of the licence-holder at the adjourned meeting. They did so in order that they might comply with the requirements of the Act and in order that they might have the appellant before them when they dealt with the objection. We should fritter away the provisions of the Act if we held that what was done here was not an objection within the meaning of the Act. It was intended as such, heard as such, and acted on as such.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Prideaux & Sons, for Charles E. Hagon, Bridgwater.

Solicitors for the respondents, Prior, Church, & Adams, for Brice, Bridgwater.

Q. B. Div.
(Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) Feb. 16.

MILLER v. BORNER & CO. (a.)

Ship—Charter-party—Agreement to load cargo "say about 2,800 tons"—Obligation to load more than 2,800 tons.

The charterer of a ship the capacity of which was 2,880 tons agreed by a contract of charter-party to load "a cargo of ore, say about 2,800 tons." He loaded 2,840 tons.

Held, that he had performed his contract.

Morris v. Levison, 24 W. R. 517, 1 C. P. D. 155, distinguished.

Appeal from the Mayor's Court.

The plaintiffs, owners of the ship Marie, by a contract of charter-party dated the 20th of December, 1898, agreed with the defendants, the charterers, that the ship should load "a cargo of ore, say about 2,800 tons."

The capacity of the ship was 2,880 tons. The defendants loaded 2,840 tons.

The plaintiffs brought this action to recover a sum alleged to be due for freight on forty tons above the amount actually loaded.

The judge at the trial held, upon the construction of the charter-party and upon the authority of Morris v. Levison, 24 W. R. 517, 1 C. P. D. 155, that the defendants were bound to load 3 per cent. in excess of the 2,800 tons, the ship having capacity for that amount. He therefore gave judgment for the plaintiffs.

The defendants appealed.

Laing, Q.C., and Balloch, for the defendants.—Judgment ought to have been entered for the defendants. The judge was wrong in holding that the case was governed by Morris v. Levison. The words of the charter-party in that case were "to load a full and complete cargo of iron ore not exceeding what she could reasonably stow . . . say about 1,100 tons"; the ship could carry 1,210 tons, and the cargo actually loaded was 1,080 tons only; the court had regard to the words "full and complete cargo" in holding that 3 per cent. over the 1,100 tons was a fair cargo. In the present case the language of the charter-party is different and it is satisfied by loading the stipulated 2,800 tons or 3 per cent. more or less. [BUCKNILL, J., referred to Carnegie v. Conner, 24 Q. B. D. 45, 38 W. R. Dig. 185.]

Bateson, for the plaintiffs.—A "cargo" is what the ship will carry, and there is no distinction between "cargo" and "full and complete cargo." The case is therefore governed by Morris v. Levison, and the decision of the judge at the trial was right.

CHANNELL, J.—I am of opinion that this appeal must be allowed. The contract was to load "a cargo of ore, say about 2,800 tons." The real point is, does that contract differ from the contract in Morris v. Levison. The decision in that case proceeded entirely on the fact that there the contract was to ship "a full and complete cargo," and that it was necessary in some way or another to give effect so far as possible to all the words of the contract, and to put a construction upon the subsequent words "of say about 1,100 tons" that would, as far as possible, be consistent with the meaning put upon the words "full and complete cargo." The carrying capacity of the vessel in that case was larger than anything that could be considered to be about the quantity specified. The judgment of the court proceeds entirely on the words "full and complete," and that was pointed out in the subsequent case of Carnegie v. Conner, to which my brother Bucknill has referred. Having regard to those words the court held that the charterer was bound to load the maximum amount, which could be described as "about 1,100 tons," and being empowered to draw inference of fact, they put the maximum amount at 3 per cent. of the stipulated amount. Here the word used is "a cargo"—not a full and complete cargo, and what is a cargo for a particular ship would, I think, be a question of fact. A very small quantity of goods in comparison to the carrying capacity of the vessel would not be called a cargo. It must to some extent approach her carrying capacity before it could be called a cargo, and the question, therefore, what number of tons would make a cargo would be a question for the jury; but to make it necessary to leave it to the jury the facts must be such as to make it reasonable for them to answer either way. Here the quantity shipped was 2,840 tons, and it would be unreasonable to say that this was not a cargo for this particular vessel, the carrying capacity of which was 2,880 tons only. I think, therefore, that there was no question for the jury: 2,840 tons was undoubtedly "a cargo" for this particular vessel, and if it was a cargo it was certainly a cargo of about 2,800 tons. Judgment ought therefore to have been entered for the defendants.

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

BUCKNILL, J.—I am of the same opinion. In Morris v. Levison it was said that where the contract is to load "a full and complete cargo of, say, about so many tons," and where the ship is in fact capable of holding more than the specified number of tons, it is a question for the jury what the word "about" means. But here the word "cargo" only is used, and if the amount loaded is capable of being called a cargo for the vessel in question and also equals or exceeds the specified amount there is no question for the jury; the charterer has done all that the contract required him to do.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the defendants, Ince, Colt, & Ince.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Holman, Birdwood, & Co.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) } Feb. 16.

BAILEY v. ISLE OF THANET LIGHT RAILWAYS CO. (a.)

Lands Clauses Acts — Compensation for injuriously affecting—Intention to use land for special purpose—Adaptability.

Notice was given by a railway company to treat for the purchase of a part of a piece of land which the claimants had recently purchased with the intention of building a school thereon. The land was specially suitable for that purpose, and no other site in the vicinity was equally suitable. The construction of the railway would render the remaining part of the land less suitable for a school. The claimants had not begun to build the school.

Held, that, in assessing compensation for injuriously affecting the land retained by the claimants, their intention to build a school thereon and the suitability of the land for that purpose ought to be taken into consideration.

Case stated by an arbitrator on a reference as to the compensation to be paid on the taking of land under the Land Clauses Acts.

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The claimants in the early part of 1899 entered into a contract for the purchase of a plot of land at Margate, with the intention of erecting thereon a ladies' school, for which purpose the land was by reason of its nature and position well suited.

After the contract had been so entered into, the Isle of Thanet Light Railways Co. gave the claimants notice that they required to take a small portion of the said plot of land for the purposes of their railway.

By reason of the construction of the railway the portion of the plot not taken would be rendered less suitable for the purposes of a ladies' school. And it was admitted that there was no other land in the neighbourhood equally suitable for that purpose.

The claimants contended that, in assessing compensation in respect of the land not taken but injuriously affected as aforesaid, the intention of the claimants to use it for a ladies' school and its special adaptability for that purpose should be taken into consideration.

For the company it was contended that the needs and intention of the claimants in respect of the land in question should not be considered in determining the amount of compensation, but that there should be taken into account alone the value of the land taken, plus compensation, if any, for injuriously affecting the adjoining land on the basis of the land being the property of a claimant who did not intend to make any special use of it. The arbitrator awarded the sum of £1,200 as purchase-money for the portion of the land taken, and as compensation for damage by reason of the injurious affection of the part not taken, if in the opinion of the court the intention of the claimants and the adaptability of the land for the purposes aforesaid should be taken into consideration, and the sum of £726 if in the opinion of the court the intention and adaptability aforesaid should not be taken into consideration.

Macmorran, Q.C., and E. F. Lever, for the claimants.—Regard must be had to the actual loss sustained by the claimants. They bought the land for a special pupose and they have lost its value to them for that purpose: Countess Mary Ossalinsky v. Manchester Corporation, reported only in Browne and Allan on Compensation, p. 718.

Page, Q.C., and Vesey Knox, for the company.—Special adaptability of land injuriously affected is to be considered in ascertaining its value; but not the intention of the claimant to put it to any particular use where the intention has not been begun to be carried out.

CHANNELL, J.—In my opinion, our judgment must be for the claimants. The intention to put the land to a particular use may properly be taken into account. Compensation is assessed on the basis of the value of the land to the particular claimant. For instance, where trade premises with a goodwill attached are taken, the question is not what is the market value of the premises, but what is their value to the trader who has the goodwill. If these ladies had already built their school it could not be disputed that they would be entitled to compensation on the basis of the injury to the school; and if the arbitrator is satisfied that the intention to build the school existed, he must treat the land as the site of a school, and assess the compensation accordingly. No doubt, if there had been other neighbouring land equally adaptable for a school the compensation would have been only upon the basis of the market value. But it was admitted that no such other land was available, and I think that the claimants are entitled to compensation for injury to the land as a site for a school, although it was not yet built.

Held, that evidence as to the meaning of the expressions "the total costs of the work" and "the estimate of £35,000" was admissible.

This was an appeal from the Supreme Court of New South Wales.

The facts are fully set out in their lordships' judgment.

Asquith, Q.C., and Vaughan Hawkins, for the appellants.

Upjohn, Q.C., and Danckwerts, for the respondent.

The judgment of their lordships (Lords DAVEY, ROBERTSON, and Sir RICHARD COUCH) was delivered by Lord DAVEY.—The respondent is an engineer, who was employed by the appellants, the Bank of New Zealand, to superintend, on their behalf, the construction of a railway from Rosehill to Pennant's Hills. He sues the bank for extra commission alleged to be due to him from them under the agreement between them. The appeal is from an order of the Supreme Court of New South Wales dated the 18th of November, 1898, setting aside the verdict of a jury in favour of the appellants and directing a new trial. The question between the parties is exclusively one of the admissibility of certain evidence.

On the 22nd of January, 1894, an interview took place between the respondent and Mr. Chapman, the manager of the bank. On the following day the respondent wrote to Mr. Chapman as follows:

"113, Phillip-street, Sydney, N.S.W.,
"January 23, 1894.

"To I. Chapman, Esq.,
Manager of the Bank of N. Zealand Estates Co. (Limited), Pitt-street, Sydney.

"Dear Sir,—In reply to your inquiry as to the engineering expenses of the construction of the first section of the Pennant Hills and Dural Railway, I beg to inform you that I am prepared to undertake the work on the following terms, which shall include the payment of all necessary professional assistants and inspectors:—

For contract specification and drawings, 2½ per cent. on £35,000.

For supervision of work, 5 per cent. on ditto.

For measurement of work, 1 per cent. on ditto.

Provided I should be allowed another 1½ per cent. on the estimate of £35,000, in the event of my being able to reduce the total cost of the works below £30,000. I propose to effect this saving by extra labour in making comparative drawings of works for the sake of economy and not by sacrificing the character of the work, and for this reason I do not recommend the adoption of any rail under 71½lbs.

"I shall be glad to hear from you in reply to the terms contained herein.—Yours very truly,

"(Signed) B. C. SIMPSON."

No reply to this letter was written, but the offer contained in it was verbally accepted on behalf of the bank and it admittedly expresses the terms of the contract between the parties.

The works were proceeded with under the respondent's supervision and the railway was completed. The cost of constructing the railway exclusive of the purchase of land was £28,116 16s. 4d. The cost of the land purchased was £5,774 12s. 11d. The amount of the respondent's commission at 8½ per cent. on £35,000 was £2,975. There were further fees paid to the respondent in connection with the purchases of land and other expenses bringing the total up to £43,174 19s. 5d. If, therefore, "the total cost of the works" referred to in the letter of the 2nd of January, 1894, included the cost of the land and the respondent's commission of 8½ per cent., or either of those sums, he did not succeed in reducing the cost below £30,000, and the respondent was not entitled to his extra commission of 1½ per cent.

The respondent contended that according to the true meaning of the agreement the estimate of £35,000 did not include the cost of the land purchased or the amount of his commission, and on the 22nd of February, 1898, he commenced an action to recover £525, the amount of the extra 1½ per cent.

The action was tried by Cohen, J., with a jury. The respondent gave evidence and stated his version of what took place at the interview of the 22nd of January, 1894, and of the intention of the parties. Mr. Chapman was called by the bank and gave his version of what had taken place between the respondent and himself, and the respondent was called in reply. Chapman's evidence was objected to by the respondent's counsel, but admitted by the learned judge. The appellants' counsel also tendered a certain circular which had been prepared by the respondent and issued by him with the concurrence of the bank before the date of the agreement, and certain correspondence between the parties which it was said tended to support the view of the appellants. This evidence was also objected to by the respondent's counsel, but admitted by the learned judge.

The circular in question stated that the "estimated cost of the line" (meaning the line in question) was £35,000, but that by economy in works it would probably be constructed for less, and after giving figures showing an estimated net revenue of £1,913, proceeded thus: "Assuming that the cost will be £35,000 the net revenue will yield a dividend of 5½ per cent. on the capital."

At the close of the trial (after the jury had retired) respondent's counsel asked the learned judge to construe the letter of the 23rd of January and direct a verdict for the respondent. The learned judge declined, and the jury gave a verdict for the appellants.

The respondent moved for and obtained a rule nisi for a new trial on grounds which fully raised the questions between the parties and need not be stated at length. The rule was made absolute. The learned Chief Justice in his judgment held that according to the true construction of the letter "the total cost of the works" meant the cost of the actual construction of the railway and could not with legal certainty be applicable to both the total cost of the works (alone) and also to the cost of the works plus the cost of the land plus the engineer's commission, and that, therefore, the extrinsic evidence objected to ought to have been rejected. The Chief Justice added that they could not understand any person receiving the letter, after due consideration being misled by its contents.

Their lordships cannot agree with the views so expressed. The respondent admitted in his evidence (as indeed is plain without his admission) that which was proposed to be reduced was the £35,000 to below £30,000, or, in other words, that the two sums are co-extensive. It is not therefore a mere question of the meaning of the words "the total cost of the works" standing alone, but the meaning of "the estimate of £35,000" has also to be considered. These words point to something which was known to, and in the contemplation of, both parties to the contract and with reference to which they contracted, and in order to construe and apply the contract you must ascertain what was included in "the estimate of £35,000," on the reduction of which the contract depended. Extrinsic evidence is always admissible not to contradict or vary the contract, but to apply it

But again, owing to the number of steamers waiting o be loaded, a quay-berth was not ready for The City f Newcastle until the 2nd of June at 8 a.m. By learing for a foreign port—viz., Constantinople, she ost her turn for a quay-berth, and on her arrival ack at Poti found a number of fresh steamers had n the meantime arrived, which made her position ith regard to getting a quay-berth much worse. he loading was completed at 7 p.m. on the 9th of une, and The City of Newcastle sailed from Poti at a.m. on the 10th of June, laden with a cargo of bout 2,578 tons of manganese ore.

On the 14th of July The City of Newcastle arrived Philadelphia, and discharged her cargo in two ays. The time allowed for discharge under the arter-party for her cargo of 2,578 tons at 400 tons r day was 6 days eleven hours, and therefore a ving of 4 days and 11 hours was effected.

On the 14th of June, by which date differences had isen between various parties to the adventure, the esent defendants undertook by letter of that date consideration of the plaintiffs signing a certain bill lading for the cargo then on board The City of ewcastle, to be responsible to the plaintiffs for the murrage if any proved to be legally due to them der the charter-party whether in loading or charging and to waive all terms of cesser of bility clause.

Upon the plaintiffs' contention, The City of Newcastle s on demurrage from noon of the 24th of February til 1 a.m. of the 4th of March, a period of 7 ys 13 hours, and from 5.30 a.m. of the 19th of ril until 10 a.m. of the 10th of June, a period of days 4½ hours. The plaintiffs do not claim any nurrage for the period from the 4th of March until 19th of April, during which The City of Newcastle s incapacitated from loading by reason of collision. plaintiffs bring into account the 4 days 11 hours ed in the discharge. In respect of the balance of days 18½ hours, or 1,314½ hours, the plaintiffs make ir present claim. The plaintiffs claim they should e had a ready quay-berth without reference to any n.

Upon the defendants' contention, inasmuch as The of Newcastle, but for the collision, would have a quay-berth on the 8th of March, the charterers not responsible for the demurrage for more than t they would have been liable for if The City of castle had got her quay-berth on the 8th of March finished loading by the 16th of March, and on assumption that they would also have saved the ys 11 hours on the discharge.

rver, Q.C. (A. A. Roche with him), for the ntiffs.—The whole risk of obtaining a berth for hip must, under the charter-party, be borne by lefendants, and the plaintiffs are entitled to be for all the hours that she was detained in port the lay-days had run out: Jones v. Adamson, . D. 60.

seph Walton, Q.C., and T. G. Horridge, for the ndants.—The decision in Jones v. Adamson does not t the present case, as in that case there were no ptions, whereas in this case there are. If it had been for the accident the vessel would have ned a berth and have completed her loading on 16th of March, the failure, therefore, to get a there was due to a cause beyond the control of lefendants, and comes within the exceptions ined in clause 4: see Carver's Carriage by Sea ed.), s. 630.

rver, Q.C., in reply, cited Kay v. Field & Co., 31 . 332, 10 Q. B. D. 241.

NNEDY, J.—I have come to the conclusion that from the time this vessel was in such a position that her owner was entitled to say, "My vessel is on demurrage," and so long as she was at Poti, unless there was some act or default which may be attributed to the shipowner, the demurrage obligation must be enforced against the charterers.

What happened was that after the vessel did come on demurrage in accordance with the terms of the charter-party, and after the demurrage obligation had begun to operate, the vessel was run into by another ship, and, as it was not disputed, her captain took the proper and necessary step, under the circumstances, of taking her to Constantinople to repair. There was no claim for demurrage whilst she was there. She could not be said to be on demurrage when, instead of being at Poti, she was at Constantinople, but, although she was at Constantinople and not on demurrage, she was not there by reason of any violation of the charter-party engagement. She was there for a good reason, which would absolve her from any blame as between herself and those who were to load her. She again came on demurrage when she returned to Poti, and on the whole it seems to me that although during this intervening time there could be no claim made against her owners for breach of the charter-party, and no claim made by her under the demurrage clause, the period of demurrage was resumed without any break in the legal continuity of the charterers' obligation in respect of demurrage. I do not think, on the whole, that it can be truly said that this is an exception protecting the charterers from liability with respect to the demurrage claimed. The fact that, owing to the presence of a large number of other steamers, she was unable to obtain a berth appears to me no more to excuse the charterers than would the fact that while at Poti she had been driven out to sea by a gale of wind, and had thus lost her turn. In that case there would be no default on the part of the owner. When once the demurrage period has begun, it appears to me the liability continues. I therefore hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Maples, Teesdale, & Co., for Bramwell & Bell, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Solicitors for the defendants, Field, Roscoe, & Co., for Batesons, Warre, & Nixon, Liverpool.

Privy Council.

(From the Supreme Court of New South Wales.)

Feb. 17.

BANK OF NEW ZEALAND v. SIMPSON. (a.)

Contract—Evidence—Extrinsic evidence—Meaning of words used—Parol evidence to explain.

Extrinsic evidence is always admissible, not to contradict or vary a written contract, but to apply it to the facts which the parties had in their minds and were negotiating about.

Therefore, where S. undertook to do certain work on terms embodied in a letter of his to the appellants, and which "provided that S. should be allowed an additional percentage on the estimate of £35,000 in the event of his being able to reduce the total cost of the work below £30,000,"

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Finding that the rabbits on the farm were doing damage to his crops, the defendant caused them to be trapped.

The plaintiff brought this action for trespass to his exclusive right of sporting, and he claimed damages and an injunction.

The defendant pleaded that he was entitled to trap the rabbits by virtue of the Ground Game Act, 1880.

The question was whether the occupier of a farm, who was also the owner, was entitled to the benefits of the Ground Game Act.

Wright, J., gave judgment for the defendant.

The plaintiff appealed.

Duke, Q.C., and Bodilly, for the appellant.—The Ground Game Act, 1880, was passed to confer a new statutory right on agricultural tenants. The word "occupier" throughout the Act means tenant, and does not include occupying landlord. The Act has no application where the landlord is in occupation: Smith v. Hunt, 54 L. T. Rep. 422, 34 W. R. Dig. 79.

Foote, Q.C., and Clavell Salter, for the respondent.—The word "occupier" in the Act includes occupying landlord. So long as an occupying landlord has not alienated the rights of shooting he does not want the protection of the Act, but as soon as he does alienate them he wants the protection of the Act as much as a tenant does. Smith v. Hunt was a decision on section 6 of the Act, which does not speak of "occupier" at all. And in that case there was no severance of the shooting rights.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—Although I am in the minority I have a strong opinion that this appeal ought to be allowed. The question is whether the Ground Game Act was passed in the interests of landlords as well as of tenants. Speaking for myself I have no doubt that it was passed for the purpose of protecting tenants against their landlords and not of protecting landlands against their tenants. Then does the word "occupier," which occurs all through the Act, include a landlord who has no tenant? In the year 1880 landlords were in no need whatever of the protection which the Act was intended to afford. They had everything in their own hands. It is suggested that the Act was passed in the interests of good husbandry. It seems clear to me that it was passed to protect tenants whose crops were being eaten up by ground game in consequence of their landlords failing to keep down the ground game. The Act is intituled "An Act for the better protection of occupiers of land against injury to their crops from ground game." The word "occupiers" there must mean tenants. Where the occupier of a farm is the landlord himself, he is completely dominus, and does not require any protection. The preamble says, "Whereas it is expedient in the interests of good husbandry, and for the better security for the capital and labour invested by the occupiers of land in the cultivation of the soil, that further provision should be made to enable such occupiers to protect their crops from injury and loss by ground game." There again "occupiers" must mean tenants. Then section 1 enacts that "Every occupier of land"—i.e., every tenant—"shall have, as incident to and inseparable from his occupation of the land, the right to kill and take ground game thereon, concurrently with any other person who may be entitled to kill and take ground game on the same land." An occupier of land who was the landlord and had no tenant would not require such a right to be conferred on him by the statute. Then follow three provisoes, in each of which "occupier" again clearly means tenant; this is specially obvious in the third proviso with regard to moorlands. The same considerations apply to the following sections 2, 3, 4, and 5, in none of which, as it appears to me, can the word "occupier" mean landlord. Whether or not we were right in our judgment in Smith v. Hunt on the construction of section 6, I am of opinion that the main provisions of the Act are in the interests of tenants, and that they are only to be brought into play in cases where there is both a landlord and a tenant. I therefore think that the appeal ought to be allowed.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I am of opinion that the judgment of Wright, J., is correct. We have to determine the meaning of the words "occupier of land" in the Ground Game Act. It does not seem to me to be necessary to limit the meaning of the words in any way. I think we may take them as meaning what they naturally mean—viz., an occupier of land. I do not say that the Act was passed for the protection of landlords, but neither do I know that it was passed only for the protection of tenants. I think it was passed to prevent the separation of the right of killing and taking ground game from the occupation of land. It provides that every occupier of land shall always have the statutory right of killing and taking ground game inseparable from the occupation of his land. That right is given subject to certain limitations. Those limitations are inapplicable to the case where a landlord occupies his own land and retains the rights of shooting. I think that Smith v. Hunt was rightly decided. In that case there was no alienation of the shooting rights and no occasion for the statutory right. Where, however, a landlord occupies his own land, but has alienated the rights of shooting, the limitations are applicable. This view is strengthened by section 2, which is wide enough to cover the case of an occupier who is also landowner as well as that of an occupying tenant. I wish to say plainly that there is nothing in my judgment which involves the proposition that, where a landlord is in occupation and has not parted with the rights of shooting, this Act has any operation. In such a case I think it has no operation.

ROMER, L.J.—I think that the judgment of Wright, J., ought to be affirmed. In my opinion the policy of the Ground Game Act is to insure that all occupiers of land shall have the right to kill and take ground game. The Legislature intended to give that right to all occupiers of land who without the Act would not have such right. Subject to that it seems to me that the Act contemplates occupiers of all sorts. It does not on the face of it draw any distinction between different kinds of occupiers. The object of the Act to be gathered from the title and the preamble is to provide protection for the occupiers of land against injury to their crops from ground game. Such protection is necessary for occupiers of every kind, who, not having the rights of shooting, cannot keep down the ground game. The Act does not seem to me to be an instance of class legislation; it does not purport to exclude wealthy persons from its benefits. The intention appears to be that all occupiers of land, if not able otherwise to keep down ground game, are to have the right given by the Act. It is argued that an occupier within the meaning of the Act must have only a chattel interest in the land. I cannot see why. The policy of the Act applies to an owner in fee as much as to a tenant for a long term. I see nothing to justify the distinction that is sought to be drawn; and, if it were drawn, I think it would cause injustice in the working of the Act. For instance, take the case of a landlord who has an agricultural tenant, and who has granted a lease of shooting rights. The lessee of the shooting rights cannot interfere with the right of the agricultural tenant to kill and take game. Suppose, then, that the agricultural tenant absconds, and that the landlord goes into possession. According to the contention of the appellant, the landlord would then be obliged to work the farm subject to the right of the lessee of the shooting, if he thought fit, to let the ground game multiply. Why should the rights of the lessee of the shooting be thus enlarged? Take another case. A young farmer is lessee of a farm of which his father is owner in fee, and the father has let the shooting rights. Suppose, then, that the father dies, and the son succeeds as heir, so that his lease becomes merged in the freehold. According to the appellant the son loses his statutory right, and the lessee of the shooting acquires a right which he did not before possess. I do not think we should be justified in saying that we were forced to put that construction on the Act by something which is certainly not in the Act itself, but is supposed to have been the reason of the Act. In my opinion, all occupiers of land are within the Act so long as, apart from the Act, they have not the right to kill and take ground game. The case of Smith v. Hunt was on a different footing from the present case, and in my opinion that decision does not conflict with the view which I am taking.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Mann & Crimp, for Hacker & Michelmore, Newton Abbot.

Solicitors for the respondent, Church, Rendell, Todd, & Co., for Baker, Watts, Alsop, & Woolcombe, Newton Abbot.

---

From Chan. Div. (Lord Alverstone, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) May 16.

WELSBACH INCANDESCENT GAS LIGHT CO. v. NEW SUNLIGHT INCANDESCENT CO. (a.)

Practice—Interrogatories—Officer of company—Knowledge—Matters previous to formation of company—Course of employment—Sufficiency of answers—R. S. C., ord. 31, rr. 5, 24.

A corporation answering interrogatories by the proper officer is in the same position as an individual. The officer, therefore, who answers on behalf of the corporation cannot be compelled to inquire of the officers, servants, or agents of the corporation as to matters which happened before the corporation came into existence, or their knowledge of which was not acquired by them as servants of the corporation and in the ordinary course of its business.

This was an appeal from an order of Byrne, J., that a further and better answer should be given to interrogatories.

The action was brought by the plaintiff company on the ground of the infringement by the defendants of letters patent.

The plaintiff company was incorporated in 1897, and acquired the business and assets of an old company as a going concern. The officers and servants of the old company were continued in the employment of the plaintiff company.

The letters patent related to the use of thorium and cerium for the purpose of impregnating incandescent mantles, and by their particulars of objections the defendants alleged want of novelty because of the user of these materials for the purpose by the old company in 1891 and 1892.

Byrne, J., gave leave to the defendants to interrogate the secretary of the plaintiff company as to the user of these materials by the old company.

The secretary by his answer stated that he had no personal knowledge whatever; that he had made inquiries of the directors, officers, servants, and agents of the plaintiff company as to what knowledge they had acquired in the course of their employment by the plaintiff company, and had been unable to obtain any information from them, they informing him that, as such directors, officers, servants, and agents, they had no knowledge of the matter. He also stated that he was advised that he was not bound to make inquiries of any persons who might happen to be directors, officers, servants, or agents of the plaintiff company as to any information they might possess accidentally, not in the course of their employment and not in the ordinary course of their business as such; and he had therefore not made such inquiries.

The defendants applied for an order that the secretary should give a further and better answer to the interrogatories, and Byrne, J., made an order to that effect.

The plaintiff company appealed.

Moulton, Q.C., T. Terrell, Q.C., and A. J. Walter, for the appeal.

Bousfield, Q.C., and Neill, contra.

The following cases were referred to: M'Intosh v. The Great Western Railway Co., 4 De G. & Sm. 502, 544; Re Barned's Banking Co., 15 W. R. 524, L. R. 2 Ch. App. 350; Moline v. Tasmanian Railway Co., 32 L. T. Rep. 828, 23 W. R. Dig. 177; Bolckow, Vaughan, & Co. v. Fisher, 31 W. R. 235, 10 Q. B. D. 161; Chaddock v. British South Africa Co., 44 W. R. 658, [1896] 2 Q. B. 153.

Lord ALVERSTONE, M.R.—This case raises a somewhat important and perhaps in some respects a novel point; but we do not think, after the full arguments we have heard, that it is necessary for us to take any further time to consider before delivering our judgment.

The case arises by way of appeal from a decision of Byrne, J., who has thought that the answer of the secretary of the plaintiff company is insufficient, the main point of principle being raised by the second paragraph, which I will read:

"I have been advised and believe that I am not bound for the purpose of answering the interrogatories to make inquiries of any persons who may happen to be at the present moment directors, officers, servants, or agents of the plaintiff company as to any knowledge or information they may possess accidentally, not in the course of their employment by the plaintiff company, and not in the ordinary course of their business as such, and I have therefore not made such inquiries."

The question therefore that arises is whether or not the officer of the company who has been ordered to answer interrogatories is bound to make inquiries as to the knowledge and information of the persons from whom he ought to seek information as to the affairs of the company, with regard to matters which are outside those affairs, and which may have arisen before the company was incorporated.

I think it would perhaps be convenient, in order that my judgment at any rate may be understood, that I should state a little more specifically the actual way in which the case is raised so far as it is material. It appears that the plaintiff company was incorporated to purchase, and did purchase, one of the incandescent light patents. It appears that this patent had previously belonged to the vendors, a former company, and that among the managers there were officers who apparently had been in the employment of the previous company, as well as the plaintiff company, and it is suggested by the particulars of objections that the defendants have put in in an action for infringement of the patent that at some time prior to the actual taking out of that patent the patented invention had been worked by the predecessors of the company, and I do not know whether it is not suggested also by somebody before the first company was formed, but, I will take it, by the predecessors of the company; therefore, no doubt it will be a material matter to discuss, when the action comes to be tried, whether that allegation is true.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Now, I am of opinion that Byrne, J., has gone too far. In my opinion in substance the objection that was taken by the officer of the plaintiff company is a well-founded objection, and assuming that he has honestly made investigation as to the affairs of the company, he is not bound to inquire as to things which happened before the company was constituted, or, it may be, as to matters that come to the knowledge of servants of the company quite apart from their position as such servants.

We have been addressed very clearly, and I do not think at too great a length, with regard to the old practice. Speaking for myself, I do not think there is very much difference between the practice as it now stands and the practice as it existed, certainly before the Judicature Act. I understand that an order is made on a company, as upon anybody else, to answer interrogatories. In order that those interrogatories may be answered, some officer of the company has to answer them, and the court unquestionably has discretion to say who shall answer, and would, in the exercise of that discretion, in my opinion, choose the officer who knew of his own knowledge most about the questions about which he was being interrogated. But the questions as to which he is being interrogated still are, and still ought to be, with reference to the business of the company, and while I should apply to such an officer the same rules as are laid down in a case to which our attention has been called as to the duty to answer to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief, still it must be to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief with reference to the affairs of the company, and not with reference to the affairs of anything else. Now, it is suggested that rules 1, 5, and 24 of order 31 enable us to decide this question. I do not think myself that there are any specific words in any of the rules which decide the question one way or another. Take rule 24, which has been so much relied on by the appellants. The words are: "Any party may at the trial of a cause, matter, or issue, use in evidence any one or more of the answers, or any part of the answers, reserving to the judge discretion to use the rest." In my judgment that rule was only directed to the use that can be made of an answer when the answer has been filed on behalf of a party. I do not think those words were meant to determine this question. I think the solution of this question rests upon this broad ground: What is the real position of a person who answers an interrogatory? It seems to me that whether you speak of an individual who has to get information from his servants, or whether you speak of a company that answers by a secretary or manager, who also has to get information from other officials, the reason why the answer can be read is that when it has been answered according to the rule which I have indicated it is a statement on the part of the party by which he is bound. I do not want to say that no case may arise in which a person answering on behalf of a company may not be able to protect himself in some way or other by the form of the answer; but, speaking of it as a statement of fact, I think the answer to the interrogatory is intended to be practically an admission by the person making the statement, or at any rate an answer by which under ordinary circumstances he would be bound. It was said that the defendants did not want to take it as an admission; they were content to take the answer as giving them information, and not as being a statement by the plaintiffs. I personally am not aware of any case which has contemplated answers to interrogatories being framed in that way. It seems to me that it might let in a very dangerous practice, for it might thus enable a person to get the benefit of hearsay evidence, or of evidence which would not be admissible before the court, simply because he had forced a defendant company through their officer to make an inquiry. I think I should come to this conclusion without any previous authority, and I do not know that it can be said that there is any absolute authority, but I must say that I think that the opinion of Smith, L.J., in Chaddock's case, which coincides with the view I am expressing, is certainly an opinion which ought not lightly to be disregarded, where he says, "I think the meaning of ord. 31, r. 5, must be that if a judge thinks a member of a company is in such a position with regard to the company that he is a proper person to answer interrogatories on their behalf he may order him to do so, and his answers in that case will bind the company." Certainly, as I understand the old practice, to a large extent it depended upon the theory that the person answering had to search his conscience and answer in reference to the matter so that the statements made by him would be binding upon him, and although it is quite true that the late Master of the Rolls, Brett, L.J., and Lindley, L.J., in Bolckow, Vaughan, & Co. v. Fisher may not have had this particular argument in their minds, yet still it is to be noted that they speak of a person being bound to answer as to what was known to his servants in the course of his business and not what they came to know accidentally. It seems to me that the principle which lies at the bottom of this distinction is that you are really intended to get the answer of the party through the knowledge of those persons for whose knowledge the party is responsible, and you are not intended to use interrogatories or the answers to them for the purpose of a channel to procure information which would not be binding upon parties by whom it was produced, but which may have some indirect advantage to the person by whom the questions have been put forward. If I could have seen that there was some use that could be made of the further investigation by the secretary which would have brought the answers within the rules, I should have been disposed to require further answers to be given. It seems to me that the question of principle is clearly raised in this case and for the reasons I have given, I think the judgment of Byrne, J., went too far and that this appeal ought to be allowed.

RIGBY, L.J.—In my opinion there never was any principle that there should be obtained from an incorporated company more discovery than could be got from individuals. All the practice has been a sort of makeshift endeavour to get the same sort of discovery as far as possible on oath from a company that is got from individuals.

Now I begin with what I conceive to be the correct conclusion from all the practice and the authorities in the case of an individual. Can you insist upon the individual going out of his way to collect evidence for the plaintiff? Certainly not. The individual who chooses or is obliged to have his affairs transacted by servants and agents could not, by keeping ignorant himself, decline to answer what he would have been obliged to disclose if he had managed his own affairs himself, and therefore it is incumbent upon him to ask from anyone who had acted for him what they knew about it in the course of their employment, but he was not obliged to ask and therefore he was not obliged to answer as to anything that they had happened to pick up outside the course of their employment. That, I think, is sufficiently illustrated in the case of Bolckow, Vaughan, & Co. v. Fisher, and, as I understand, is the rule of the court.

Coming then to the case of a corporate body, the first idea was to have a proper officer made party, and to get discovery from him. It is unnecessary to go into the history of that, but it became established that you might make the proper officer of a corporation party to the action in order to obtain from him discovery; but he was not bound to give discovery on any other principle than any other party would be. The importance was, that you got discovery on oath from him, but the answer so made by him was in exactly the same position as the answer of any other person who happened to be a co-defendant, and, among other things, it could not be read as evidence against his co-defendant, the company. By degrees we have altogether moved away from that practice; and I think in Wilson v. Church, 28 W. R. 284, it was laid down that the old practice had gone. The practice now is to get against the corporation an order that they shall put in an answer through the proper officer, whoever he may be, and I do not see how you can avoid the conclusion that the answer so put in by the corporation, not by a co-defendant any longer, must be capable of being read against them. It therefore becomes very important that such an officer should not include in the answer, or be bound to inquire into matters which the corporation or the company themselves, if they had been individuals, would not have been bound to trouble themselves about—that is to say, the knowlege of outsiders, or the knowledge even of their servants, if it were acquired otherwise than in the course of their employment. I cannot say that it would not be capable of being read against the corporation. I refrain from saying that it would be absolutely, and in all cases, binding upon them, for if they were able to make clear that any of the answers were mistaken or otherwise wrong, I cannot say they could not do so, but it seems to me that the officer, in gaining the information that he is bound to disclose, is in the same position as any private individual acting in his own business for himself, and is not bound to go further. I think, therefore, that this order of Byrne, J., that the secretary should put in a further answer, meaning, as it does, by my understanding of it, that he shall go to all the officers of the company, who, by accident, and apart from the course of their employment by the company, have got any knowledge, collect it, and put it into an answer, is not founded upon a right principle, and in fact the order ought to be discharged.

Then it is said you have always got a right to go to the person who knows. Very well. Within proper limits that is a right principle. If you are inquiring into details, for instance, of a manufactory, it would be idle to suggest that you should go to the secretary, who probably does not know one thing from another in the manufactory, when there may be an important officer or manager of the manufactory who could give you reasonable and plain answers; I do not think, because you can argue from surrounding circumstances that So-and-so, who seems to be an officer of the company, happens also to be able to tell you the truth about particular matters, that that makes him the proper officer; and above all, I do not think you can go from one to another. You have had an answer from the secretary, and that ought to satisfy you. It may not contain everything that you want, but if it contains all that you are entitled to, you cannot then go to other persons and ask them what they know about the matter independently of the question how they acquired the knowledge; and, indeed, I do not see that you can get any answer from them. The answer here seems to me to fulfil all the objects of an answer; it gives the defendants in this case as much as they would have been entitled to if the plaintiffs had been individuals, and there the duty of the court ends. You are not going to go round. If you go to another, why not go to a third, and then a fourth, and find out among them someone who happens to know something that this company knows nothing about at all, and that he has not acquired in the business of the company? You have had an answer, the answer is a sufficient answer, and I think that no further order should be made.

We have heard arguments based on the theory, for instance, that this is a partnership. It appears to me the plain answer is that it is not a partnership. It is a corporation. No doubt there is something in that argument. For instance, if you want to know the rights of the shareholders among themselves, you may say company law is based upon partnership law, and find how that can be adapted to the case of a company; but I am quite sure that that argument was never intended to give a party to an action a right to get further or other discovery than the parties would have been entitled to if the company were treated as a company quite separate from the law of partnership. I do not think it is necessary to add anything further.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, and as this is a matter of some importance, and we are differing from the decision of the learned judge below, I will add a very few words.

I think that when you realise that the evidence given by the answer is the evidence of the company and not of the individual who gives it, the difficulty is solved. It seems to me that on the modern system, at all events, the answers of a company are on precisely the same footing as the answers of an individual—that is to say, they are in both cases admissions by the person who makes them—in this case the company. Being admissions, they can be read against that person. It is idle to say that the admissions can be qualified. That is not ad rem at all. The question is, Does it come under the category of admission? If it does it can be read against the person who makes it, with all the suggestions, sinister or otherwise, as to the amount admitted, or the qualification sought to be put upon it, and that is precisely the reason why when you have to introduce somebody who really is not the company to answer for the company you must hedge that admission round with proper restrictions. Now, you are introducing necessarily—because you cannot make a corporate body answer—somebody to answer for the company. It is obvious that that person is not the company, but his function is to give the answer of the company. Therefore you must put some restriction upon the knowledge which he brings to bear in answering questions. Where are you to draw the line? It seems to me that the line has been drawn logically and practically in the restriction which has been put, I think by Sir George Jessel, where he says that the person who is called upon to answer is not bound to answer as to what he has learnt accidentally, or not in the ordinary course of his business. It is the function of the judge, with the assistance of the counsel, when the person is named who is to answer for the company, to see that he is such a person as will, from the course of his business in that company, be able to give the proper information, which, when given, binds the company just as much as if the company itself were able to take an oath, but with that limitation put upon it, the answer is the answer of the company, and can be read against the company just as it can be read against the individual. But it is said that the information obtained by interrogatories may be exceedingly valuable; so it may be; but it may be entirely outside the function of interrogatories, or of the court, to help to get that information. The party desiring the information has it in his power, if he desires, to subpœna the person who can give him the information, and, if the evidence is relevant, it will be admitted, but, as my learned brother Rigby has pointed out, it is by no means part of the duty of the company, by means of its officers, to assist the plaintiff in getting up evidence to support his case. It seems to me that the whole thing is perfectly logical when you once realize what I am bound to say is the fundamental principle, that these answers are the answers of the company and not of the individual. When you once grasp that, it seems to me that the whole thing follows logically; and therefore the decision of Byrne, J., in this case was wrong, and ought to be overruled.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Faithfull & Owen; Michael Abrahams & Co.

---

Appeal.
(Collins, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) April 6.

STUART v. NIXON AND BRUCE. (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Duration of employment—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37).

For the dependants of a workman who has met his death by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment to be entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it is necessary that the workman, at the time of the accident, should have been in the employment of the employer for at least two weeks.

Appeal from the decision of the county court judge of Liverpool on a point of law arising on a claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The appellant was the widow of a deceased workman, who at the time of the accident causing his death was a stevedore's labourer in the employment of the respondents.

The deceased was a casual labourer and had been employed by the respondents for five days continuously at daily wages. On the fifth day he was killed by an accident.

The county court judge held, under Schedule I. (a) (i) of the Act, that the deceased having been employed for less than a week the appellant was not entitled to compensation.

Leslie Scott (Joseph Walton, Q.C., with him), for the appellant.—The decision in Lysons v. Andrew Knowles & Sons, ante, p. 408, [1900] 1 Q. B. 780, does not govern this case, since it turned upon clause 1 (b) of Schedule I., where the language is different. The first part of clause 1 (a) (i) of Schedule I. gives compensation equal to the workman's earnings in the employment of the same employer during the three years next preceding the injury, with a maximum of £300 and a minimun of £150. The rest of the clause merely provides a method of calculating the workman's weekly earnings where such a calculation is necessary. The right to compensation is given by Schedule I. In the present case the appellant is entitled to the minimum amount, £150.

Ruegg, Q.C., and A. G. Steel, for the respondents, were not called upon.

COLLINS, L.J.—In my opinion the appeal must be dismissed. The question is whether the case of a labourer who was employed only for one day—taking an extreme case—and who met with an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment on that day, comes within the Workmen's Compensation Act. It is contended that the case of Lysons v. Andrew Knowles & Sons does not govern the present case. In that case the workman who was injured, but not killed, by an accident had at the time of the accident been employed by the same employer for a period less than two weeks. It is said that the observations of the court in that case upon clause 1 (a) (i) are merely obiter dicta and do not decide the present case, and that the appellant is entitled to compensation to an amount not less than £150. I—and I think I can also speak for A. L. Smith, L.J.—arrived at the conclusion, taking all the sections and provisions of the Act together, that the Legislature could not have intended to introduce labourers of this class into the Act. I am not pressed with the difficulties of this view suggested in the argument. I cannot follow those difficulties. I do not think that clause 1 of Schedule I. creates any real difficulty of construction at all. Its meaning is reasonably simple. The first part of clause 1, which deals with the death of a workman, contemplates, in the first place, that the workman should have been in the employment of the same employer during the three years next preceding the injury causing his death. If his earnings during those three years amounted to or exceeded £300, the workman's dependants would get that sum. If his earnings did not amount to £300 they would get the amount of his earnings, the minimum sum being fixed at £150. So far the clause relates to employment by the same employer during the three years next preceding the injury. The next part of the clause deals with a case where the employment is for less than three years.

The Act says that in such a case "The amount of his earnings during the said three years shall be deemed to be 156 times his average weekly earnings during the period of his actual employment under the said employer." The compensation is based upon the average weekly earnings during the period short of three years. That is subject to this, that the employment must have lasted for at least two weeks. I do not say that it is absolutely necessary that the workman should have been employed every day during those two weeks, but the employment must be such as to form the basis for the calculation of average weekly earnings. That was the reasoning adopted by this court in Lysons v. Andrew Knowles & Sons, to which I still adhere. It would be most anomalous to hold that a casual workman who was injured by an accident not resulting in death would not be entitled to any compensation, whereas if the workman died from the effects of the accident his dependants would be entitled to compensation. In my opinion this case is governed by the decision in Lysons v. Andrew Knowles & Sons.

(a.) Reported by P. B. DURNFORD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—In Lysons v. Andrew Knowles & Sons the court decided the case on the ground that, upon the construction of the Act, a workman who has not been in the employment of the employer from whom compensation is claimed for at least two weeks is not within the Act, and not merely, as it was contended, on the ground that there is no provision for measuring the compensation to such a workman when the accident has not resulted in his death. I think we must regard all the provisions of the Act on the basis that the case of a workman who has not been in the employment of the employer for a period of two weeks is not within the Act at all. The appeal must therefore be dismissed.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree that the case is governed by the decision in Lysons v. Andrew Knowles & Sons.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellant, G. J. Linskey, Liverpool.

Solicitors for the respondents, William Hurd & Son, for Oliver Jones, Billson, & Co., Liverpool.

---

Appeal.
(Collins, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) April 6.

PEARCE v. LONDON AND SOUTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO. (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation — Sub-contractor — Accident to contractor's workman—Work ancillary or incidental to business of undertakers—Erection of railway station —Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), ss. 4, 7.

A workman employed by a contractor, who in turn was employed by a railway company to erect a railway station for them, cannot recover compensation from the railway company for injuries sustained in such employment, since the work undertaken by the contractor is merely ancillary or incidental to, and is no part of, the trade or business of the railway company within the meaning of section 4 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Appeal from the decision of the judge of the Southwark County Court in proceedings to assess compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The appellant was a painter in the employment of Messrs. Perry & Co., who were builders and contractors. They had entered into a contract with the respondents to do such work in the way of altering, repairing, and painting the respondents' stations in the London district as they might be directed to do by the district engineer at a fixed schedule of prices. Under this contract Messrs. Perry & Co. were engaged in reconstructing Hampton Court Station, and the appellant was employed by them on the work when he met with the accident in respect of which he claimed compensation.

The county court judge held that the respondents were not liable, because the operation of section 4 of the Act was excluded by the clause at the end, the building of a station being "no part of or process in the trade or business carried on by" the railway company being "merely ancillary or incidental thereto."

(a.) Reported by P. B. DURNFORD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

J. D. Crawford, for the appellant.—The respondents are liable under section 4. The case falls within the first part of the section, and not within the exception. The work was not merely ancillary to, but essential to the respondents' business.

He referred to South-Eastern Railway Co. v. Railway Commissioners, 6 Q. B. D. 586, 29 W. R. Dig. 108; Caterham Railway Co. v. London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Co., 1 C. B. N. S. 410.

Lawson Walton, Q.C., and R. B. D. Acland were not called upon.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of opinion that the learned judge was perfectly right in this case. The question arises in this way: The appellant was employed by a contractor who was engaged by the South-Western Railway Co. to rebuild or to execute some repairs or additions to the Hampton Court Railway Station. There was a point raised before the county court judge as to whether this man met with his injury in the course of his employment, but I will assume that he was disabled from an accident arising out of and in the course of that employment. Inasmuch, however, as he was not employed by the South-Western Railway Co. he could only make them liable by virtue of the provisions of section 4 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, which is in these terms: "Where, in an employment to which this Act applies, the undertakers, as hereinafter defined, contract with any person for the execution by or under such contractor of any work, and the undertakers would, if such work were executed by workmen immediately employed by them, be liable to pay compensation under the Act to those workmen in respect of any accident arising out of or in the course of their employment, the undertakers shall be liable to pay to any workman employed in the execution of the work any compensation which is payable to the workmen (whether under this Act or in respect of personal negligence or wilful act, independently of this Act) by such contractor, or would be so payable if such contractor were an employer to whom this Act applies." Now, to stop there: This section, which is certainly an enabling section giving to a person a right against another which he would not have had but for it, would impose, if the Act stopped there, I think, a liability on the South-Western Railway under that section. They are the undertakers; they have employed a contractor to do the work, and a person employed by the contractor in the course of his employment has met with an accident, and therefore down to that point the section would apply, but inasmuch as the Legislature is conferring a boon upon such persons, giving them a right of action against others, against whom but for the section they would have had no right or remedy, they have quite naturally clogged that boon with certain conditions which are just as much part of the section as the primary enacting part itself. Now come the conditions: "Provided that the undertakers shall be entitled to be indemnified by any other person who would have been liable independently of this section. This section shall not apply to any contract with any person for the execution by or under such contractor of any work which is merely ancillary or incidental to, and is no part of or process in the trade or business carried on by such undertakers respectively."

Now the undertakers in this case are the railway company, and the work for which they had contracted with the contractor to do was the building or improving of a railway station. It is said that it is not work merely ancillary or incidental to the business of a railway company. In my opinion it would be difficult to give a better illustration of work which is "ancillary or incidental to" as distinguished from being the actual work or business which the undertakers carry on. The difficulty that arises in this case is not so much a difficulty in construing the section as the difficulty in trying to make it applicable to a railway company. There are plenty of other classes of work to which this section might apply without any difficulty. There is some difficulty in applying it to the case of a railway company, because it is not easy to conceive a railway company letting out or contracting with others for the purpose of doing any part of that business which is their own primary duty. You do not find railway companies contracting with other persons to drive their engines; you do not find them contracting with other persons to carry their goods for them from place to place. It might be done, but we do not often meet with it, and therefore it is not easy to put an illustration of a railway actually contracting with somebody else to do something that is not merely incidental to or ancillary. But the business of a railway company is to carry, and "carriage" may of course embrace more than mere haulage; but they are bound to carry, and that is their primary duty. Now, to build a railway station does not seem to be part of their duty at all; in fact there is no obligation on the part of a railway company to put intermediate stations along their line. They must start from some place and arrive at some place, but dealing with the intermediate stations on the line is a matter within their discretion. They had not taken any statutory obligation to put them at all, or put them at one place rather than another, and although a station is defined and a railway is defined, still, after all, the stations, when they are there, are ancillary to the main purposes of the line. Nothing is carried at them, goods are received at them, but some portions of the accommodation give unquestionably facilities which the railway company are bound to give and which are ancillary. On the other hand some parts of the station frequently are not, and what this man was doing was not anything which the railway company could describe as being "part of or process in the trade or business carried on." Their trade is to carry passengers and goods from place to place, therefore it seems to me the work this man was doing was something ancillary or incidental to the ordinary work.

If it was necessary to refer to authority, I think there is authority in this court covering this very case. There is the case referred to by Mr. Crawford where the owners of a dye works applied to a person who deals with machinery to send someone to look over their machinery; the person came and met with an accident while engaged in doing it, and an action was brought by him against the owners of the dye works. It was held in this court that he had no remedy against the owners of the dye works. He was only engaged in doing work which was not their primary work at all, but which was simply ancillary to and incidental to their trade and business. He had no claim against the dye works. Mr. Crawford says that point was not necessary for the decision in that case. It is not very fully reported in the Times Law Reports, but that is my impression of it. Even if I am wrong I think this was an instance where the work was not the main work of the company, but can only properly be described as work ancillary or incidental to the main business. For this reason I am of opinion that this appeal must be dismissed.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I will take the most extreme hypothesis that Mr. Crawford put before us. I will assume that a railway station is essential, and I will also assume that there was an obligation upon the railway company to have this railway station, still it seems to me perfectly clear that the work of building a railway station is not a part of or process in the trade or business carried on by the railway company as an undertaking.

ROMER, L.J.—I quite agree, and cannot add usefully anything to what my learned brothers have said.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Brooks & Heller.

Solicitor for the respondent, S. Bircham.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div.
Kekewich, J. } June 21, 28.

In re ARCHIBALD D. DAWNAY (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Registered contract—Shares subscribed for in memorandum—Sale to company for similar number of shares—Identity of shares—Relief—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25—Companies Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 26), s. 1.

A company was formed to take over the business of D., and it was agreed that D. should sell the business to the company for 4,069 fully-paid shares. On the formation of the company D. signed the memorandum of association for 4,069 shares. Subsequently a contract setting out the terms of the sale to the company was duly filed in accordance with section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867. There was evidence that the shares for which D. signed the memorandum were considered by all parties to be the same as those issuable to him under the contract.

Held, on a motion under the Companies Act, 1898, s. 1, for an order for filing a fresh contract, that the court had no power to grant the relief.

In re F. W. Jarvis & Co. (Limited), 47 W. R. 186, [1899] 1 Ch. 193, followed.

The above company was incorporated under the Companies Acts on the 7th of August, 1897, with a nominal capital of £75,000 in 7,500 shares of £10 each. The object of the company was the acquisition of the business established by a Mr. Archibald D. Dawnay, with the stock, plant, machinery, and business premises. The basis on which the company was formed was the purchase from Mr. Dawnay of the business for £40,690, by the allotment to him or his nominees of 4,069 fully-paid shares, and a draft agreement to that effect was prepared before the incorporation of the company ready to be adopted by it and executed on its incorporation. Mr. Dawnay, who himself drew up the memorandum of association, signed it for "4,069" shares of £10 each which, though not indicated by any numbers, he understood and were intended, as he deposed, to be the paid-up shares which were the consideration to be given him for his business. He also signed the memorandum for 200 further shares, which he paid for in cash. He stated that he never agreed to take any other shares than those mentioned, and that when he signed the memorandum he was not aware his doing so implied any contract or obligation to pay cash for the 4,069 shares, and that his signing for them in those circumstances was an inadvertence.

There were other subscribers to the memorandum for shares amounting in all to 231 shares and one other share had since been issued, the total issue thus being 4,501 shares; the remaining 2,999 shares were never issued.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The agreement for the sale and purchase of the business was duly executed on the 11th of August, 1897, after the incorporation of the company, and on the 13th was filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies.

After reciting the objects and formation of the company it was agreed that the vendor, Mr. Dawnay, should sell and the company should purchase the business in question, and that part of the consideration should be "£40,690 to be satisfied by the allotment to the vendor or his nominees of 4,069 fully paid-up shares in the capital of the company to be numbered 1 to 4,069 both inclusive," and that, as the residue of the consideration, the company should undertake to discharge all the debts and liabilities of the business.

Shortly after the filing of the agreement the 4,069 shares, numbered as stated in the agreement, were duly allotted to the vendor and registered in his name, and certificates for them were duly issued to him. No further capital beyond the 75,000 shares was ever created. No notice of any call in respect of any of the 4,069 shares had ever been given.

The question then arose whether Mr. Dawnay, the vendor, was not liable to pay in cash for the 4,069 for which he subscribed the memorandum, there being nothing to show that those shares were identified with the 4,069 numbered shares specified in the agreement. Section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, requires that every share in a company "shall be deemed and taken to have been issued and to be held subject to the payment of the whole amount thereof in cash, unless the same shall have been otherwise determined by a contract duly made in writing, and filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies at or before the issue of such shares." By section 1 of the Companies Act, 1898, the court is empowered to grant relief for an omission to file a sufficient contract under section 25 of the previous Act, where the omission has been "accidental or due to inadvertence"; and accordingly the vendor applied by motion under section 1 of the Act of 1898 that the company should, within fourteen days after the order now asked for, file with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies a memorandum in writing in the form scheduled to the notice of motion; and that an order might be made to the effect that—the court being of opinion that the 4,069 fully paid-up shares mentioned in the agreement were the 4,069 shares for which the vendor had signed the memorandum of association—on the filing of the said memorandum in the form scheduled within the time aforesaid, such memorandum should, in relation to the 4,069 shares, operate as if it were a sufficient contract in writing within section 25 of the Act of 1867, and had been duly filed at or before the issue of such shares. The scheduled form of memorandum purported to state that the 4,069 shares numbered in the agreement were the 4,069 shares for which the vendor had signed the memorandum of association, and had been issued in satisfaction of the £40,690, part of the consideration agreed to be paid to the vendor. An affidavit by a director of the company agreed with the vendor in saying that the company never contemplated an allotment of any further shares to him, and never made any call in respect of the 4,069 shares for which he signed the memorandum of association, "considering them to be the very shares agreed to be allotted as fully paid up under the terms of the filed agreement, and that the omission to file a sufficient agreement with the memorandum arose from inadvertence." It appeared that the company was in a prosperous condition and paying large dividends.

Warrington, Q.C., and Bunting, for the vendor, relied upon In re Whitehead & Brothers (Limited), [1900] 1 Ch. 804, and argued that the present case was distinguishable from Dalton Time Lock Co. v. Dalton, 66 L. T. Rep. 704, 40 W. R. Dig. 40, and In re F. W. Jarvis & Co. (Limited), 47 W. R. 186, [1899] 1 Ch. 193.

W. Brinton, for the company, did not oppose.

Cur. adv. vult.

KEKEWICH, J., said: Judgment was reserved because I was unwilling to depart from the decision of Romer, J., in In re F. W. Jarvis & Co. (Limited), or to adopt that of Cozens-Hardy, J., in In re Whitehead & Brothers (Limited), without further consideration. Unless the distinctions which satisfied Cozens-Hardy, J., in the latter case, and which were also urged here, are sufficient, this case must be governed by the decision of Romer, J., which is directly in point. The case before him was like this one. It was one in which a vendor had signed the memorandum of association for a number of shares in precisely the same way as in the present case in consideration of the issue of which as fully paid up he contracted after the incorporation of the company to sell his property; and there, as here, the vendor's shares were protected by a registered agreement, and the question arose respecting the same number of shares for which the memorandum of association was signed. The report states ([1899] 1 Ch., at p. 194) that there was evidence that the share for which the vendor signed the memorandum of association were the same as those issuable to him under the agreement; but the learned judge did not consider the evidence as sufficient, and indeed says, on p. 198, that the two lots of shares could not be identified. He held that the case was not one contemplated by the Act of 1898; but, more than that, he considered it on its merits, and though deeming it a case of great hardship and expressing his regret that he could not help the applicant, he determined, for the reasons set out in his judgment, that the application ought not to be granted. Cozens-Hardy, J., came to a different conclusion in In re Whitehead & Brothers. He held that case to be distinguishable from that decided by Romer, J. The only distinction noticed in his judgment is that there was no difficulty in identifying the shares registered in the name of the vendor as being the same shares as those subscribed for by him on the memorandum. I cannot myself see from the report that he had any better evidence of identity than was before Romer, J.; but perhaps there was some which has escaped my notice or is not expressly mentioned in the report. The other distinction urged in argument, but not referred to by the learned judge, was that, in the case before Romer, J., there were shares not taken up more than sufficient to provide for the double allotment, whereas in In re Whitehead & Brothers all the shares had been issued. I do not say that this is not a fact worth consideration, and it is undoubtedly present here; but I do not think it sufficient, standing alone, to induce me to distinguish a case similar in other respects from In re F. W. Jarvis & Co. As regards the other distinction which I have commented upon in connection with the case before Cozens-Hardy, J., I need only say that I have no more convincing evidence than was before Romer, J., and that it seems to me—as it seemed to him—insufficient. Besides these distinctions there is a fact peculiar to this case which deserves separate notice, because much was made of it in argument. The applicant subscribed the memorandum of association not only for the same number of shares as that for which he agreed to accept in payment of purchase-money, but also, and separately, for 200 shares for which he admits he is liable to pay. The argument I understand to be this—that this is evidence of two classes of shares subscribed for, and that one of them is identical with the other, being undoubtedly distinct from the vendor's shares. To my mind the observations of Romer, J., are equally applicable to both, and the fact, peculiar though it be, does not assist the applicant. Under these circumstances I must follow the decision of Romer, J., and refuse the application. It is as well to add that I do this not so much because I am bound by the case of In re F. W. Jarvis & Co. as because it approves itself to my judgment, and I ought not readily to adopt distinctions from it. As stated by that learned judge at the conclusion of his judgment, my order will not prejudice any question that may hereafter arise between the applicant and the court as to whether, under the circumstances, he is or is not bound to take other shares under the memorandum of association; but, seeing the importance of the case, the considerable amount involved, and the public inconvenience of a difference of opinion between judges on such a question, I venture to hope that my conclusion will be submitted to review in the Court of Appeal.

His lordship accordingly refused the application, but made no order as to costs.

Solicitors, Bartlett & Co.

---

Chan. Div. Kekewich, J. } May 16; June 22.

In re DE NICOLS.

DE NICOLS v. CURLIER. (a.)

Domicil — Marriage according to French law—Community of goods—Subsequent English domicil—After-acquired real estate.

The principle of the decision in De Nicols v. Curlier, ante, p. 269, [1900] A. C. 21, is applicable to real estate in England.

Where, therefore, two French subjects domiciled in France married there without a contract of marriage, and afterwards acquired an English domicil,

Held, that the rights acquired by the marriage under the French law of "community of goods" extended to freehold and leasehold property in England acquired by the husband, and therefore his power to dispose of them by will was limited to a moiety.

Originating summons.

In 1854 M. and Madame De Nicols, who were French subjects born and domiciled in France, were married in Paris. No contract or settlement was made by the parties on the marriage, and consequently by French law their rights with respect to property were regulated by the law of "community of goods."

In 1863 M. De Nicols came to England with his wife, where they became permanently domiciled and naturalized as English subjects.

On the 28th of February, 1897, M. De Nicols died leaving a large fortune, including freehold and leasehold estates, and leaving a will whereby he gave his residuary estate, real and personal, to trustees upon trust for sale, and to hold the proceeds upon trust for his wife for her life, and after her death upon trusts for the daughter of the marriage and her husband and children. The widow, however, claimed a moiety as her own absolute property under the French law, and an originating summons was taken out to determine the question.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Kekewich, J., decided that the change of domicil did not affect the rights acquired by M. and Madame De Nicols in each other's unsettled movable property by their marriage in France. The Court of Appeal, however, held otherwise, and reversed the decision of Kekewich, J., on the authority of Lashley v. Hog, 4 Paton's Sc. App. 581.

On the 15th of December, 1899, the House of Lords reversed the decision of the Court of Appeal, and restored the decision of Kekewich, J. The decision of the House of Lords, however, only had reference to movable property, and the question now to be decided was whether the same principle applied to the testator's freehold and leasehold estates in England.

Renshaw, Q.C., and Ingle Joyce, for Madame De Nicols.

Warrington, Q.C., and E. J. Elgood, for the trustees of the will.

P. O. Lawrence, Q.C., and Whinney, for the daughter and her children.

Cur. adv. vult.

KEKEWICH, J., in delivering judgment, said: Undoubtedly the House of Lords considered and determined merely the question whether the marriage contract affected movable goods notwithstanding the change of domicil, and all that was said must be read with reference to that question, as the only one to which attention was directed. Albeit so restricted, the decision proceeded on the broad principle that a contract operating by force of law in the absence of expression by the parties is as complete and as obligatory as a contract expressed, and must have effect given to it on the same footing. Unless, therefore, there is some inherent disability in some particular property to be bound by such a contract, it must equally be applied to and enforced against all falling within its scope, and this is according to the language of the code and the evidence given in explanation of it. On the present occasion the court is asked to determine whether in enforcing the contract it is right to include freehold and leasehold estates in England—that is, what we term real estate and chattels real, as distinguished from personal estate other than chattels real which is covered by the decision of the House of Lords. Assuming that these freehold and leasehold estates are within the scope of the contract, it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that they are affected by it, unless, to repeat what has been already said, there is a disability inherent in this species of property. There are, therefore, two questions for consideration—one of fact—viz., whether these estates are within the scope of the contract; the other of law, whether they can be affected by it. The first question depends on the evidence which was before the House of Lords, some further evidence given by affidavit and orally on the hearing of the present application, and additional evidence adduced under leave given after the hearing in consequence of a letter from one of the witnesses which was communicated to the court. This evidence was directed to the proper meaning of "immeubles" in the French code. There is no difficulty about the meaning of the word as regards the character of property comprised in it. It means, broadly, the soil itself and that which is attached to the soil as distinguished from that which, being unattached, is therefore movable. As in our own system of law so in that of France some things are, from their close connection with the land, treated as attached to it, and therefore immovable, but these exceptions do not impair the general description and are of no importance here. The difficulty which arose was whether the term comprised immovables abroad—that is, beyond France. The words of the code are apparently wide enough to cover all, wherever situate, and if it were an instrument which the court is competent to construe it would be impossible to avoid the conclusion that this is its real meaning. The construction of the code, however, is beyond the competence of the court. It is a matter of fact with which the court can only deal according to the testimony of those qualified to give it. Hence the oral and the additional evidence subsequently given, to which reference has already been made. That evidence has set the matter at rest and removed all difficulty. It may be stated in general terms that, unless an exception is established in a particular case on the ground of public policy (and there is no suggestion of that here), the provisions of the code as regards "immeubles" are of universal application, that is, apply equally to immovable property situate in France and to that situate in a foreign country. Turning now to the question whether there is any objection in law to the contract operating according to the intention of the parties so as to bind the freehold and leasehold estate, one is at once confronted by the principle which distinguishes obligations respecting real estate from those which affect personal estate. That principle is well established, and is to be found stated in different language in many books. It will suffice to cite one. In Story's Conflict of Laws, section 158, the learned author says this:

"The result of this reasoning (and it certainly has very great force) would seem to be that in the case of a marriage without any express nuptial contract the lex loci contractus (assuming that it furnishes any just basis to imply a tacit contract) will govern as to all movable property, and as to all immovable property within that country, and as to property in other countries it will govern movables but not immovables, the former having no situs, and the latter being governed by the lex rei sitæ."

In the following section, 159, he expounds this subject in a manner so apposite to the case in hand that it is worth while to quote it at length. It runs thus:

"Perhaps the most simple and satisfactory exposition of the subject, or at least that which best harmonizes with the analogies of the common law, is that in the case of a marriage where there is no special nuptial contract, and there has been no change of domicil, the law of the place of celebration of the marriage ought to govern the rights of the parties in respect to all personal or movable property whatever that is acquired and wherever it may be situate, but real or immovable property ought to be left to be adjudged by the lex rei sitæ as not within the reach of any extraterritorial law. Where there is any special nuptial contract between the parties that will furnish a rule for the case, and as a matter of contract ought to be carried into effect anywhere under the general limitations and exceptions belonging to all other classes of contracts."

According to the decision of the House of Lords there is here a special nuptial contract between the parties ascertained by reference to the code, but not less precisely ascertained because it was not reduced into writing in connection with the particular marriage. It ought, therefore (to adopt the language just quoted), to be carried into effect everywhere, but under the limitations and exceptions belonging to all other classes of contracts, one of which is, that as regards immovables, the lex rei sitæ must prevail. There is nothing in the common law of England to make the contract which we have already seen to be definite unenforceable respecting the freeholds and leaseholds in question, and if there be any obstacle, it must be found in some statutory provision. There is none but the Statute of Frauds, but that does not raise a formidable objection. Reference was made in argument to both the 4th and 7th sections of the statute. I do not propose to consider which of them is the more applicable, because, without doubt, either one or the other prohibits the creation of equitable interests in land, such as sought to be established here, except by writing under the hand of the creator of the trust. Nevertheless, it is insisted that the statute has no application to the circumstances of this case, and that the agreement between the parties made in consideration of marriage is sufficiently obligatory notwithstanding the absence of any writing. That is the point I am called upon to determine. It is settled that there may be an agreement of partnership by parol, notwithstanding that the partnership is intended to deal with land, and that to an action to enforce such agreement the plea of the Statute of Frauds will not avail. In such an action therefore the rights of the parties to the land, their respective interests in it, and their mutual obligations respecting it, may and must be determined and enforced notwithstanding there has been no compliance with the statutory provision. The authorities for this are not numerous, but they are conclusive—namely, Forster v. Hale, 3 Ves. 696, 5 Ves. 308, and Dale v. Hamilton, 5 Hare 369. In the latter case Wigram, V.C., applied this ruling to a case where the partnership was intended to deal exclusively with land. Lord Lindley in his work on partnership (6th ed., p. 89) says that the latter case goes a long way towards repealing the Statute of Frauds, and that it is difficult to reconcile it with sound principle or the more recent decision of Caddick v. Skidmore, 6 W. R. 119, 2 De G. & J. 52. This is a strong adverse comment, but yet I am bound to treat the decision as sound, and I did so in Gray v. Smith, 38 W. R. 310, 43 Ch. D. 208. Whether it is competent for the Court of Appeal now to disturb the ruling above quoted, or whether being competent the court would be willing to do so, is not for me to say, but at any rate I must take the ruling to be established. It by no means follows that I ought to extend it, and it is fairly open to question whether the rule obtaining in contracts of partnership is properly applicable to a contract of marriage. In one sense, no doubt that is also a contract of partnership, but no one would, I think, venture to rely on this, the ruling in the two cases referred to having reference to commercial partnerships with which the court was there exclusively concerned. Nevertheless, the reasoning of the Lord Chancellor in Forster v. Hale seems to me to show that he intended to lay down a general rule, which may be applied without extension to the case in hand. This, I think, was the view of Wigram, V.C., in Dale v. Hamilton, and also, as it seems to me, of Lord Lindley, who cites the passage from the Vice-Chancellor's judgment in Forster v. Hale, which supports it. The Lord Chancellor held that the question whether there was a partnership or not must be tried as a fact, and if it were established by evidence that there was a partnership, then the premises necessary for the purposes of that partnership would by operation of law be held for the purposes of that partnership. It is established here by evidence that land acquired by either of the two parties to the contract would by force of the contract be held by him or her in certain terms described briefly by the phrase community of goods. Any lands subsequently acquired are an acquisition brought within, and are required to fulfil the purposes of the contract, and according to the Lord Chancellor's reasoning they are by operation of law held for those purposes. There may be error in this way of stating the case and applying the Lord Chancellor's ruling, but I am unable to discover it, and must, therefore, hold that the freehold and leasehold estates are as much subject to the community of goods as the movables which have been held subject to it by the decision of the House of Lords.

Solicitors, Hicks, Arnold, & Mozley; Tyrrell Lewis, Lewis, & Broadbent.

---

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } May 19.

In re BOWES.
EARL OF STRATHMORE v. VANE. (a.)

Solicitor—Translations made in office—Costs—Taxation.

Certain letters and legal documents necessary to the conduct of an administration action were translated into English from French by competent clerks in a solicitor's office. On the taxation of the bill of costs, the taxing-master disallowed the charges for translation.

Held, that the taxing-master must allow reasonable costs for the translation of such documents as had been used and entered as read in the orders of the court.

This was an appeal, on a summons, against the decision of the taxing-master as to taxation of costs.

The facts were briefly these: John Bowes, an Englishman, died leaving a large estate in France, and also having contracted debts due to persons residing in France. An action was brought for the administration of his estate. A portion of the letters and legal documents in the case were written in the French language, and it was necessary to have a translation made of these documents. The solicitors for the defendant had them translated into English, and transcribed by competent clerks in their office, instead of by professional translators. The same course was pursued as regards replies and notices required by the rules of the court to be served on persons resident in France—that is, they were first written in English, then translated into French and transmitted abroad.

E. Y. Western, the defendant, a member of the firm of Western & Sons, was a trustee and executor of the testator's will, with power to charge for work done as a solicitor. A bill of costs, which included charges for the translation of the various French and English documents, was drawn up. No objection was raised by plaintiff's solicitors; but, when the bill came to be taxed, the taxing-master disallowed these charges, relying on the case of Ellington v. Clark, Bunnett, & Co., 36 W. R. 873, 38 Ch. D. 332.

Macnaghten, Q.C., and W. B. Heath, for the summons.

Vernon Smith, Q.C., and C. M. Pitman, for the other executors.

COZENS-HARDY, J., said that it was clearly necessary to have these documents translated into the English language. If it were laid down that documents of this nature, many of them confidential, must necessarily be sent out of the solicitor's office, it would be a most inconvenient precedent.

Every consideration of convenience pointed to this—that, if a solicitor had a staff competent for the purpose, it should be within the scope of the solicitor's duties to use this staff in making translations. The matter must go back to the taxing-master for him to make such allowances as he might think reasonable in respect of such translations as were absolutely necessary for the due conduct of the case, and which had been used and entered as read in the orders of the court.

Solicitors, Western & Sons; Young, Jones, & Co.

---

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } Jan. 24, 31.

In re NORTH OF ENGLAND IRON STEAMSHIP ASSOCIATION. (a.)

Company—Alteration of memorandum—No capital—Jurisdiction—Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 62), s. 1, sub-section 1—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63), s. 1, sub-section 1.

The High Court has jurisdiction to sanction an alteration in the memorandum of association of a registered company with unlimited liability, because it has also jurisdiction to wind it up.

Petition.

This was one of several petitions by which application was made to the court to confirm special resolution for the alteration of the memoranda of association of similar companies of a special kind.

The association was registered in 1876 as an unlimited company for the mutual assurance of steamships belonging to its members. It had no capital, and the only qualification required of a member was that he should insure a ship in his own name or in his name as agent in pursuance of the company's articles and rules. The special resolution aimed at the enlargement of the scope of the company's operations.

Leigh Clare, for the petition, argued that companies of a similar kind had been wound up, and therefore there was jurisdiction to sanction alterations in their memoranda of association: 53 & 54 Vict. c. 62, s. 1.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 31.—COZENS-HARDY, J., after reading the memorandum of association, continued as follows: This complied strictly with section 10 of the Companies Act, 1862. The company has no shares and no capital. It is, however, a company the winding up of which is plainly contemplated by section 79 of the Act of 1862, and under section 81 of that Act the Chancery Division of the High Court has power to wind it up. But by section 33 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, section 81 of the Act of 1862 is repealed and section 1 of that Act is substituted. That section is as follows: "The courts having jurisdiction to wind up companies in England and Wales shall be the High Court, the Chancery Courts of the Counties Palatine of Lancaster and Durham, the county courts, and the Stannaries Court." And the question arises whether there is now any court competent to wind up a company which has no capital paid up or credited as paid up. Upon the whole I have come to the conclusion that I cannot attribute to the Legislature the intention to render all companies formed under section 9 or section 10 of the Act of 1862 exempt from the jurisdiction of any court and to leave companies formed under section 8 liable to be wound up. Section 32, sub-section 2, of the Act of 1890, which is as follows, "In Part IV. of the Companies Act, 1862, and in this Act the expression 'the court' shall, unless the contrary intention appears, mean the court having jurisdiction under this Act to wind up the company," assumes that Part IV. of the Act of 1862, which is headed "Winding up of companies and associations under this Act," continues in full force. I think I am justified in holding that sub-section 1 of section 1 defines the courts which have jurisdiction to wind up all companies in England and Wales, except so far as set down by the following sub-sections, and that sub-sections 2 and 3 apply only to companies formed under section 8, and which therefore possess a capital. The result is that the High Court has jurisdiction to wind up the association, and therefore has jurisdiction to sanction alteration of the memorandum of association. The question of jurisdiction being settled, I feel no difficulty in confirming the special resolution, the object of which is to enlarge the scope of the operations of mutual insurance. The order, therefore, will be as prayed.

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by J. F. ISELIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, Williamson, Hill, & Co., for Ingledew & Fenwick, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Ridley and Bigham, JJ.) May 21.

REG. v. WINDER. (a.)

Justices—Licensing law—Appeal to quarter sessions—Costs—Taxation out of sessions—Consent—Order on borough treasurer to pay costs of licensing justices—Right of treasurer to be present at the taxation—Jurisdiction—Licensing Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), s. 29.

Section 29 of the Licensing Act, 1828, provides that, in the case of an appeal from the judgment of a justice in or concerning the execution of the Act to the court of quarter sessions having been reversed, "it shall be lawful for the court, if it shall think fit, to adjudge and order that the treasurer of the county or place in and for which such justice whose judgment shall have been so reversed shall have acted on the occasion when he shall have given such judgment shall pay to such justice, or to whomsoever he shall appoint, such sum as shall, in the opinion of such court, be sufficient to indemnify such justice from all costs and charges whatsoever to which such justice may have been so put."

When a court of quarter sessions under this enactment orders the expenses of licensing justices to be paid by the treasurer of the county or place for which the justices acted, the amount of such expenses ought not to be taxed out of sessions without the consent of the treasurer; and if, in the absence of such consent, the court refer the taxation to their clerk of the peace, they must adopt his decision during the sessions. The treasurer is entitled to have notice of, and to attend, the taxation of the expenses.

A court of quarter sessions ordered the treasurer of a borough to pay a sum of money to the clerk of licensing justices whose judgment, while acting for the borough, had been appealed against, for the expenses to which he (the clerk) had been put in supporting the judgment of the justices.

Held, that the order was bad.

Rule for a certiorari to quash an order of the justices of Lancashire made at their quarter sessions held in October, 1899.

In August, 1899, an application was made by James Paisley to the licensing justices of Bolton for a alehouse licence in respect of premises known as Calliwell Lodge in substitution for, and by way of renewal of, a licence theretofore held by Paisley in respect of premises known as the "Rope and Anchor." The licensing justices refused the application and Paisley appealed to the quarter sessions.

The quarter sessions allowed the appeal and granted the renewal of the licence. They also ordered the cost of the justices to be paid by the borough treasurer, and adjourned the sessions until the 14th of November.

The clerk of the peace thereupon drew up the order for the payment of the costs, leaving the amount thereof to be filled in afterwards.

On a day after the close of the sessions and prior to the 14th of November Winder attended before the clerk of the peace and produced a bill of the costs and expenses incurred by him on behalf of the justices.

The bill included several items of "profit" costs which Winder, under the terms of his employment by the justices, would be entitled to retain for himself.

The treasurer of the borough did not attend before the clerk of the peace on this occasion, nor had notice been served upon him to do so.

The clerk of the peace did not tax any sum off the bill, but certified the amount of the costs to be as stated in the bill. He then inserted the amount in the order of the quarter sessions, which was dated the first day of the sessions.

The order was as follows: "This court doth order the treasurer of the county borough of Bolton forthwith to pay unto Robert Winder, Esq., the sum of £310 16s. 4d. for the reasonable costs, charges, and expenses which he hath been put unto and hath incurred in supporting the act, order, or adjudication of William Nicholson, Esq., and others, justices of the peace of the same borough, whereby they refused to grant an alehouse licence to one James Paisley, for doing which this shall be the said treasurer's warrant."

The treasurer, when the order was served upon him, refused to pay the costs, and the justices had obtained a rule to move the order of quarter sessions into the High Court for the purpose of being enforced. Thereupon the Corporation of Bolton moved for the present rule, seeking to quash the order on the following grounds: (1) Because the taxation took place in the absence of the borough treasurer; (2) because no copy of the bill of costs was served with the order; (3) because the order directed that the money should be paid to Winder for the reasonable costs, charges, and expenses which he (Winder) had incurred; and (4) because the costs were taxed out of sessions without the consent of the person who was ordered to pay them.

It appeared from an affidavit sworn by Winder that on the 9th of October, 1899, the justices of Bolton passed a resolution authorizing Winder to incur the expense of appearing to support their decision at the quarter sessions, and that nine of the justices, being a majority of three of those who were present on the 9th of October, afterwards signed an authority or appointment appointing Winder to receive the sum of £310 16s. 4d. payable under the order of the quarter sessions.

Avory showed cause on behalf of the justices.—The order for the payment of the costs by the borough treasurer is not like an order for the payment of costs by one party to another. It is analogous to an order for the payment of the costs of a prosecution. The justices instead of adjourning the sessions for the purpose of the clerk of the peace ascertaining the amount of the costs, might there and then have fixed the amount and made it a part of their order. For these reasons the treasurer had no right to be present when the amount was ascertained by the clerk of the peace, nor had he a right to be served with a copy of the bill of costs, and his consent to the fixing of the amount out of sessions was, for the same reasons, unnecessary. With regard to the objection that the order made the amount payable to Winder instead of to the justices, that was merely erroneous procedure and not a defect of jurisdiction: see Reg. v. Binney, 22 L. J. M. C. 127, and Reg. v. Justices of the Isle of Ely, 4 W. R. 5, 25 L. J. M. C. 1. The order of the justices of the 9th of October was a sufficient appointment within section 29 of Winder as the person to receive the money, taking into consideration the fact that he was their clerk and the person they would naturally appoint for the purpose.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Lawson Walton, Q.C. (C. W. Mathews with him), in support of the rule on behalf of the Corporation of Bolton —The order is bad on its face, because it does not direct that the costs incurred by the justices should be paid, but that the costs incurred by Winder should be paid. The result of that would be that it would be immaterial whether Winder were paid by salary or by fees. Winder, in fact, sent in a bill of costs as between solicitor and client of an exorbitant amount, containing many "profit" items. The bill contained charges in respect of the employment of special counsel. It ought to be decided by someone whether the cost of briefing such counsel ought under the circumstances, to be allowed. If the order stood as an order for the payment of the costs incurred by Winder, then, assuming that the employment of the special counsel was authorized by the justices, the cost of employing them must be allowed. But if the order had been—as it ought to have been—an order for the payment of the costs incurred by the justices, then the taxing officer would be entitled to exercise his discretion as to whether the special counsel should have been employed. The order was also bad because the justices never exercised their jurisdiction as to the amount of the costs, either directly or by the subsequent adoption of the figure fixed by the clerk of the peace. The justices cannot delegate their jurisdiction in this respect (Reg. v. Long, 10 L. J. M. C. 124); and the taxation cannot take place out of sessions without the consent of the person ordered to pay the costs: Reg. v. Mortlock, 7 Q. B. 459; Freeman v. Read, 30 L. J. M. C. 123; Sellwood v. Mount, 10 L. J. M. C. 121; and Midland Railway Co. v. Edmonton Union, 43 W. R. 309, [1895] 1 Q. B. 357.

RIDLEY, J.—The question is, whether, under the circumstances of the case, the order made by the court of quarter sessions was good or bad. [Having stated the facts and read section 29 of the Licensing Act, 1828, his lordship proceeded:] One objection taken was as to the person to whom the order is addressed. The order is an order upon the treasurer of the county borough of Bolton to pay unto Robert Winder, Esq., such-and-such a sum. It will be noticed that section 29 says that the order is to be that the treasurer of the county or place shall pay to such justice or whomsoever he shall appoint, and the objection is that the order should have directed payment to be made to the justices and not to Robert Winder. I do not think that that is a good objection, for I think that the fact that Robert Winder had been appointed or designated by the justices as the person to whom the money should be paid (which, I will assume, was the case) would be sufficient. So that the fact that the order directed payment to Robert Winder instead of to the justices would not be one which would invalidate the order. It was an objection which could be got over.

I come, however, to another objection, and it is this: That whereas the Act says that the sum of money to be paid shall be such as in the opinion of the court is sufficient to indemnify the justices, the order is that the sum of money to be paid is for the reasonable costs, charges, and expenses which Robert Winder hath been put to and incurred in supporting the act of the justices. I think there is a sufficient distinction. Different considerations would apply to the question how much would indemnify the justices, and to the question how much is to be allowed to a solicitor instructed on behalf of the justices to support their decision. It may be that the difference in amount would be only fractional in some cases, but in the present instance, having seen the bill of costs, I am satisfied that this is a substantial distinction. I therefore think that the order is bad on that ground.

Another objection was that the sum inserted in the order was fixed by the officer of the court out of court, and not at the sessions at which the decision was given. That objection can also be taken notice of on the present occasion, because if it is true it goes to the jurisdiction of the court of quarter sessions to make the order. The court have not in point of fact done that which the statute directs them to do—that is to say, they have not directed by their order such a sum to be paid as in their opinion would be sufficient to indemnify the justices from all costs and charges. The law is that although the court may, by its officer, if it so thinks fit, arrive at the sum which is to be paid in respect of costs, yet they must do it at the same sessions and must adopt it as their own act. That is the conclusion which ought fairly to be arrived at from the decisions in Sellwood v. Mount, Reg. v. Long, and Midland Railway Co. v. Edmonton Union. That seems to be the general law, and although in the section under which the present order was made there are words indicating that the opinion of the court is to be taken as to the amount of the sum to be paid, I take it that that opinion could be arrived at by them by appointing their officer to ascertain the amount and by adopting his act. Further, the amount of the costs could also be ascertained out of sessions by consent of the parties, but here there was no such consent. Therefore I think that as the sum inserted in the order was ascertained by the officer of the justices out of sessions without adoption by the court and without the consent of the parties, it is not a sum which in the opinion of the court was sufficient to indemnify the justices from all costs, charges, and expenses whatsoever to which such justices may have been put.

For these reasons it appears to me that the order of the court of quarter sessions cannot be supported.

BIGHAM, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think the order is bad in two respects. It is bad upon its face because it does not state that the money is to be paid to any person whom the justices have appointed for the purpose of receiving it, and it is bad because the court of quarter sessions have not, in my opinion, exercised any jurisdiction at all in making it.

It appears to me upon the affidavits that Mr. Winder, in whose favour the order purports to be made, has never been appointed as a person to receive the money in question. Some of the justices appear to have consented to it, but the justices who are entitled to the indemnity have not in fact consented, and I do not think, therefore, that the order is in point of form right. But a far more serious question arises in considering whether the court of quarter sessions have exercised their jurisdiction at all in this matter. What have they the power to do? They have power to order the treasurer of the county or place to pay such sum as shall in the opinion of the court be sufficient to indemnify such justice from the costs and charges incurred. The court of quarter sessions never has formed in this case any opinion at all upon the matter. It is true they made an order that the treasurer should pay, but as to how much he should pay they have never formed any opinion at all, nor expressed any opinion. What the treasurer is to pay is the costs and charges to which the justice may have been put. What does that mean? I take it that it means, may have been properly put. There has been no taxation at all of this bill in the proper sense of the word. A very large bill was brought in by the solicitor who represented the justices, and placed, as I understand, before the clerk of the peace. The person who had to pay—namely, the treasurer of the corporation, had no notice of this so-called taxation; he did not know what was going on, and his voice had never been heard in the matter. In point of fact, not a penny-piece was taken off the bill, and I, for my part, do not believe that any real taxation took place.

In proceedings such as these I am of opinion that the person who is ordered to pay should have an opportunity of coming before the taxing officer, whoever he may be, and should have an opportunity of being heard as to what he should pay. He should have an opportunity, as all persons have who are ordered to pay costs, of making objection to the items which are charged against him. That right is in accordance with common sense and with justice, and the treasurer of the corporation in this case has not had that right given to him. The court of quarter sessions has never formed any opinion whatever as to what costs or charges the justices in the court below were put to, and the order ought never to have been drawn up. It must be quashed.

Rule made absolute.

Solicitor for justices, R. Winder.

Solicitors for the Corporation of Bolton, Holt Beever & Co., for R. G. Hinnell, Bolton.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Ridley and Bigham, JJ.) May 17.

In re GREENWOOD & CO. (a.)

Company—Winding up—Creditor's petition—Right of creditor to winding-up order for his own benefit only.

When a company is insolvent and has no assets distributable amongst its creditors generally other than debenture-holders, an unpaid creditor of the company is not entitled to a compulsory winding-up order which would benefit himself only, but which would not benefit the general body of creditors.

Appeal from a judgment of Judge Whitehorne, sitting at Birmingham County Court.

An application had been made to the learned judge for an order for the compulsory winding up of the business of a limited company called Thomas Greenwood & Co. (Limited), of Birmingham.

The company had issued debentures in the ordinary way by way of a floating charge upon the assets of the company. A portion of the assets so covered by the debentures was a debt owing by certain persons to the company, and before any action was taken on the debentures that debt was assigned by the company in the ordinary way of trade to one Mr. Butler.

The debenture-holders then commenced an action to enforce payment of their debentures, and got a receiver appointed. The company, being in difficulties, passed resolutions for its voluntary winding up, and they afterwards commenced an action for the recovery of the debt assigned to Butler on the ground that it still belonged to them and had never been effectually assigned to Butler.

In the course of that action interpleader proceedings were taken between Butler and the company to determine to whom the debt belonged; and in these proceedings it was found that Butler was the real creditor and that the debt belonged to him, and judgment was given for him with costs against the company. These costs thus became a debt due from the company to Butler. The proceedings taken by the company were really in the interest of the debenture-holders, as the debt, if recovered by the company, would have gone to the debenture-holders, and no part of it could have gone to the creditors generally.

Butler applied to the receiver, who occupied the two-fold position of receiver for the debenture-holders and voluntary liquidator, to pay these costs. The receiver replied that the company had not got sufficient assets even to pay the debenture-holders, and had no assets for the creditors generally.

Butler then presented a petition in the county court and applied for an order for a compulsory winding up of the company, or in the alternative for the continuance of the voluntary winding up under the supervision of the court. He contended that the only persons interested in fighting the action were the debenture-holders, and that the proceedings were for the benefit, not of the insolvent company or the other creditors, but solely for the benefit of the debenture-holders; that the company were therefore entitled to indemnity from the debenture-holders, and that he was entitled to the benefit of that indemnity.

The company, it was admitted, had no assets that could be distributed among the creditors other than the debenture-holders. No other creditors supported the petition, and the debenture-holders opposed it.

The judge was of opinion that the expensive machinery of statutory liquidation ought not to be used at the instance of one particular creditor to enable him to obtain payment of a sum of money for himself alone by means of a possible right of indemnity against the debenture holders, and that as the granting of the application would benefit the petitioning creditor only and not the general body of creditors, the case was an exception to the general rule that a creditor is entitled to a winding-up order ex debito justitiæ. He accordingly refused to make the order.

The petitioning creditor appealed.

C. A. Russell, Q.C. (Mansfield with him), for the appellant.—The judge was wrong in the view he took that the petitioning creditor was not entitled to the order, because he alone, and not the general body of creditors, would be benefited. An unpaid creditor is entitled to the order ex debito justitiæ. It is not necessary for him to show that the creditors generally will be benefited by the order; it is sufficient if he show that he himself will be benefited. The judge relied on In re Chapel House Colliery Co., 31 W. R. 933, 24 Ch. D. 259, but that case is distinguishable. There the creditor was not able to show that he himself would be benefited, and the decision merely is that a winding-up order ought not to be made at the instance of a creditor who would derive no benefit from it. Here the petitioning creditor would benefit by the order; and the order ought therefore to have been made.

Ashton Cross, for the liquidator (the respondent).—The learned judge had a discretion in granting or refusing the application, and he has exercised that discretion rightly. The order asked for by the petitioning creditor was for his own benefit only, and the general body of creditors could have got no benefit out of it. It was not intended that the machinery of a statutory winding up under these Acts should be used merely for the benefit of one creditor only and to enable one creditor only to recover his debt. The decision in the case of In re Chapel House Colliery Co. is wide enough to cover this case, and is not confined to the case where the creditor can get no benefit for himself. The judge was right in refusing the application.

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., Barrister-at-Law.

Russell, Q.C., in reply.

RIDLEY, J.—I think the county court judge was right. He had a discretion to grant or refuse the application within certain limits, and it has not been shown that he has gone outside those limits. I think he exercised his discretion rightly in refusing the application. The petitioning creditor asked for this order for his own benefit only, and not for the benefit of the creditors generally, and he did so to compel the liquidator to raise the question whether the debenture-holders could be compelled to pay these costs. I agree with the judge that he would not have been justified in employing the expensive machinery of statutory liquidation at the instance of one particular creditor to enable him to recover payment of a sum of money which would not have been distributable among the creditors generally. The case of In re Chapel House Colliery Co. is an authority, so far as it goes, in favour of the decision of the judge. There were no other creditors assenting to the petition; the application was at the instance of one creditor for his own benefit only and not for the creditors generally; but this machinery was not intended for one creditor only. We cannot, therefore, interfere with the discretion of the judge in refusing the application.

BIGHAM, J.—I agree. The Act provides that where a resolution has been passed for a voluntary winding up a creditor may come to the court and ask to have the voluntary liquidation converted into a compulsory liquidation, or else to have it continued under the supervision of the court. It is in the discretion of the judge to make or refuse such order, and unless it is asked for in the interest of the general body of creditors, the order ought not to be granted. The order in this case was applied for in the interest of one creditor only, and I think the judge was right in refusing it.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellant, Cartwright & Cunningham, for Hargreave & Heaton, Birmingham.

Solicitors for the respondent, Timbrell & Deighton, for Hooper, Tanfield, & Fairbairn, Birmingham.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) Jan. 26.

OVER v. HARWOOD. (a.)

Vaccination—Non-compliance with order—Evidence of non-vaccination—Burden of proof—Vaccination Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 84), s. 31.

In proceedings under section 31 of the Vaccination Act, 1867, for non-compliance with a vaccination order, the burden of proving non-vaccination lies on the prosecution, and evidence that the fact of vaccination has not been notified to the proper officer is good primâ facie evidence from which non-vaccination may be presumed until the contrary is shown by the defendant.

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Case stated by justices for the county of Surrey.

An information had been preferred by the respondent, a vaccination officer appointed by the guardians of the Farnham Union, charging that the appellant, being the parent of a certain child called Gilbert William Over, under the age of fourteen years, unlawfully omitted to carry into effect a certain order of a court of summary jurisdiction made pursuant to section 31 of the Vaccination Act, 1867, whereby it was directed that the appellant should cause the said child to be vaccinated within twenty-eight days from the date thereof, the said period having expired, and the said child not having been so vaccinated, nor shown to be unfit to be vaccinated, nor to be insusceptible of vaccination, contrary to section 31 of the Act.

Upon the hearing of the case the respondent produced the original order, and deposed upon oath that he had not received any certificate of successful vaccination of the child, neither had he received any certificate that the child was unfit to be vaccinated or insusceptible of vaccination. He admitted that he had never seen the child the subject of the information. He also produced and submitted the register of vaccinations kept by him pursuant to section 24 of the Vaccination Act, 1867, and the Acts amending the same. No other evidence was given on behalf of the prosecution, and no evidence was given on behalf of the appellant.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that the evidence given by the respondent was not sufficient proof that the appellant was guilty of the offence alleged in the information. For the respondent it was contended that the evidence was sufficient proof that the appellant had not complied with the order.

The justices, having regard to the statutory provisions requiring under penalty every certificate of successful vaccination or of a child being unfit for or insusceptible of vaccination, if given by a public vaccinator to be transmitted by him, and if given by any other medical practitioner to be transmitted by the parent of the child, accepted the view of the respondent and convicted the appellant.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether, upon the facts stated in the case, the decision of the justices was right in point of law.

The Vaccination Act, 1867, s. 31, empowers a justice (in certain cases) to order an unvaccinated child to be vaccinated within a certain time, "and if at the expiration of such time the child shall not have been so vaccinated, or shall not be shown to be then unfit for vaccination or to be insusceptible of vaccination, the person upon whom such order shall have been made shall be proceeded against summarily, and unless he can show some reasonable ground for his omission to carry the order into effect, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 20s."

Schultess Young, for the appellant.—The section does not cast upon the defendant the burden of proving vaccination; it is upon the prosecution to prove the averment as in other cases of criminal neglect of duty: Williams v. East India Co., 3 East 192. The register does not prove non-vaccination. The public vaccinator ought to have been called to prove that he had not vaccinated the child. The parent is only required to transmit the certificate to the registrar where the vaccination has been performed by a private practitioner.

He also cited Allen v. Worthy, L. R. 5 Q. B. 168, 18 W. R. Dig. 99.

Ryde, for the respondent.—The conviction was right. The evidence of the vaccination officer was good presumptive evidence of non-compliance with the order. If the child had been vaccinated and no notification thereof sent to the registrar an offence under the Act would have been committed, and the justices could not presume, in the absence of direct evidence, that an offence had been committed.

CHANNELL, J.—I am clearly of opinion that this appeal ought to be dismissed. The case is defectively stated. It does not show that the original order under which these proceedings were taken was served on the appellant or (which would probably be sufficient) made in his presence. It does state that no evidence was given besides that which is set out in the case. It appears, therefore, that the justices had no evidence before them on these points. But it is clear that the question was raised whether sufficient evidence had been given of non-compliance with the order, and we must take it that proof of service of the order was given (and the evidence on this point omitted from the case stated) or that this point was not taken before the justices.

The question is, Was there any evidence of non-compliance with the order? I agree that the burden of proving non-compliance is on the prosecution. In some matters under the Vaccination Act, 1867, the burden is thrown upon the defendant; for instance, in this very section 31—"if the child shall not be shewn to be then unfit," &c.; but this shows that it was not intended to throw on the defendant the burden of proving that the child has been vaccinated; the prosecution must prove non-vaccination. Some evidence must therefore be given of the negative proposition, unless the question arises on some exception, exemption, proviso, excuse, or qualification within the meaning of section 39 (2) of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, and this question does not so arise. The ordinary, and in most cases the only, way of proving a negative is by presumption, and the court has to apply the proper presumption. Under this Act machinery is provided whereby the fact of vaccination is to be notified by various persons, and if it is not notified it can only be because someone has failed to do his duty. The fact, therefore, that no notification has been received by the proper officer is, to my mind, primâ facie evidence that the child has not been vaccinated. Whether this is the best proof is a question which does not concern us. Even if the public vaccinator had been called it would still be possible that another practitioner had vaccinated the child and the justices would still have to be asked to rely on a presumption arising from the evidence of the public vaccinator. For these reasons I think that there was evidence on which the justices were justified in convicting, and that this appeal should be dismissed.

BUCKNILL, J.—I concur.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellant, H. T. Nicholson.

Solicitors for the respondent, Johnson, Weatherall, & Sturt, for Potter & Crundwell, Farnham.

Court of Appeal.

Appeal.
(A. L. Smith, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) June 30.

CROSSFIELD & SONS v. TANIAN. (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Award—Application for review of weekly payment—Change in circumstances—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I. (12).

An application under paragraph 12 of Schedule I. of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, for a review of a weekly payment can only be made where some change in the circumstances of the case has taken place since the making of the award.

So held, Vaughan Williams, L.J., doubting.

Appeal from the refusal of the judge of the Warrington County Court to allow an application under paragraph 12 of Schedule I. of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, for a review of a weekly payment.

The workman, who had lost an eye through an accident in the course of his employment, duly filed a request for arbitration, and in the particulars annexed to the request he stated that his average weekly earnings previous to the accident were 30s., and that his average weekly earnings since the accident were 17s. 1d.

The employers, in their answer, stated that the workman's average weekly earnings previous to the accident were 19s. 10d.

The answer was filed only two days before the day fixed for the hearing.

Rule 17 of the Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1898, requires that the respondent's answer shall be filed five clear days at least before the day fixed for proceeding with the arbitration.

At the hearing, which took place in August, 1899, the county court judge held that the employers, having filed their answer out of time, were precluded from giving evidence, and he accepted the statement contained in the workman's particulars, and made an award for a weekly payment of 12s. 6d.

In March, 1900, the employers applied to the county court judge, under paragraph 12 of Schedule I., asking that the weekly payment which had been awarded might be reviewed.

Paragraph 12 of Schedule I. is as follows: "Any weekly payment may be reviewed at the request either of the employer or of the workman, and on such review may be ended, diminished, or increased, subject to the maximum above provided, and the amount of payment shall, in default of agreement, be settled by arbitration under this Act."

It was not suggested on the part of the employers that any change in the circumstances of the case had taken place between the making of the award and the application for a review.

The county court judge refused the application.

The employers appealed.

Arthur Powell, for the employers.—The learned county court judge was wrong in refusing the application. Paragraph 12 ought to be construed according to the natural meaning of the words, which is that either the employer or the workman may at any time apply to have the weekly payment originally awarded reviewed, and may show any grounds why the amount should be altered, and the county court judge ought on such application to fix the payment at such an amount as may then appear to be right.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

W. D. Benson, for the workman, was not called upon to argue.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—The question is whether, on the true construction of paragraph 12 of the first Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, employers can apply for a review of a weekly payment where the circumstances which existed at the time of the making of the award have not in any way altered. An award has been made by a county court judge who had before him a statement in the workman's particulars that his average weekly earnings before the accident were 30s. The employers desired to show that the man's average weekly earnings before the accident were 19s. 10d. But the county court judge held that, as they had not filed their answer five days before the hearing, they were out of time, and it was not open to them to take this point or to give any evidence, and he therefore made an award on the basis of the workman's statement. The award was made in August, 1899, and no appeal was brought from it. In March, 1900, the employers made an application under paragraph 12 of the first Schedule to the Act for a review of the weekly payment. The question arose, what change had taken place in the circumstances of the case since the making of the award. The answer was that no change whatever had taken place. The employers admitted that the position of the workman remained the same. But the point which the employers really wished to raise was that the award was wrong, because the county court judge ought to have found that the workman's earnings before the accident were 19s. 10d. Can it be shown that the award is wrong in an application under paragraph 12? In my opinion it cannot; I think that paragraph 12 was enacted alio intuitu altogether. It contemplates that an injured workman may get well, or get better, or get worse, and it enacts that "any weekly payment"—not any award—"may be reviewed at the request either of the employer or of the workman, and on such review may be ended."—i.e., if the workman gets well — "diminished" — if he gets better — "or increased"—if he gets worse. I think that the decision of the county court judge refusing to review the weekly payment was right, and that the appeal must be dismissed.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I agree that it would be manifestly unfortunate if paragraph 12 of Schedule I. could be used for the purpose of appealing against any award which one party or the other did not like. I feel sure that the Legislature did not intend this enactment to be used for such purpose. But though I agree in coming to that conclusion, I know no power of the court which it is more difficult to exercise, or which, in my opinion, ought to be more sparingly exercised, than the power of what I may call interlinear legislation—that is to say, of introducing into an Act of Parliament words which are not there. Now what are the words of this enactment? "Any weekly payment"—it does not say "awarded," but it is clear that it means any weekly payment awarded—"may be reviewed at the request either of the employer or of the workman, and on such review may be ended, diminished, or increased." It is suggested that in the exercise of the power which we have of interlinear legislation we should read in the words "if the circumstances are changed." I do not feel the necessity for introducing those words. But however that may be, it seems to me that the employers here wish to bring before the court circumstances which differ from the circumstances which were before the court at the original hearing. They wish to show that the weekly earnings of the workman were less than they were then taken to be. It is said that they cannot do that because they are estopped by the previous award. I am not sure that that is so. An award is not a judgment so as to operate technically as an estoppel. And if abstract justice requires us to say whether there ought not to be an estoppel in this case, I cannot help seeing that this is a case in which the question of amount has never been determined on the merits at all. It may be that the result is that there is an estoppel, but I am not sure. At any rate I hesitate to read into the Act words which are not there, though I am much impressed by the fact that the paragraph is so drawn that if we strictly follow the mere words it might be much abused by being allowed to give indirectly an appeal which the statute does not give directly.

ROMER, L.J.—This is an attempt to re-open an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act and to impeach the award on the ground that facts were admitted at the hearing which should have been contested. This is done under cover of an application under paragraph 12 of Schedule I. In my opinion that paragraph was directed to another purpose and was not intended to enable an award to be impeached on any such ground as that which the employers now rely upon. I think it applies to cases in which some change in the circumstances has taken place since the making of the award. Here the parties admit that no new fact has arisen. If the appeal were allowed I think it would lead to great abuse. Whenever either party was dissatisfied with an award he could continue to have fresh arbitrations until he obtained an award in his favour. We are bound, in my opinion, not to give such an interpretation to the enactment as would lead to such a result.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the employers, W. Hurd & Son.

Solicitors for the workman, Cunliffes & Davenport, for Davies & Forshaw, Warrington.

---

From Q. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) June 15, 23.

ELLIOTT v. YATES AND ANOTHER. (a.)

Inland revenue—Income tax—Non-payment—Distress—Authority of collector—Taxes Management Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 19), ss. 73, 86.

The power to distrain in the event of non-payment of taxes, conferred upon a tax collector by section 86 of the Taxes Management Act, 1880, may be lawfully exercised after the expiration of the year in respect of which the tax is payable, provided that, at the time of the distress, the collector has not been required to pay over the sums collected by him, and to deliver a schedule of arrears, as provided by section 103 of the Act.

Application by the plaintiff for judgment or a new trial in an action tried before Channell, J., and a common jury.

The defendants were collectors of income tax and inhabited house duty, and the action was brought against them to recover damages (1) for trespass for breaking and entering, and (2) for irregularity in the distress by remaining in possession for too long a period.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The facts, which are fully set out in the judgment, were shortly as follows:

The defendants were appointed collectors of income tax and inhabited house duty for the year ending the 5th of April, 1899, and by the warrant of the Commissioners of Taxes they were authorized to demand and collect the income tax and house duty during that period.

The plaintiff failed to pay his income tax and house duty after demand duly made, and thereupon on the 25th of May, 1899, the defendants levied a distress at the plaintiff's premises to recover the amount due. The plaintiff subsequently paid the amount, and the distress was withdrawn. The plaintiff then brought this action.

Channell, J., held that the defendants had authority to levy the distress, and that there had been no illegal distress, but the learned judge asked the jury to assess the damages, and the jury assessed the damages at £10.

The plaintiff applied for judgment or a new trial upon the first head of claim.

Witt, Q.C., and Poley, for the plaintiff.

Bowen Rowlands, Q.C., and Layman, for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 28.—A. L. SMITH, L.J., read the following judgment: The plaintiff in this action seeks to recover from the defendants damages for having trespassed upon his dwelling-house at Maidenhead on the 25th of May, 1899. The defendants are collectors of income tax under Schedules A and B of the Income Tax Acts, and also of inhabited house duties, and were appointed by the Commissioners of Taxes to collect the same pursuant to the Taxes Management Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 19), for the year ending the 5th of April, 1899. The defendants justify the alleged trespass under a warrant dated the 13th of December, 1898, duly granted to them under the Taxes Management Act, 1880. It is not in dispute (1) that the taxes for which the defendants distrained had been duly demanded of the plaintiff upon the 1st of January, 1899; (2) that such taxes then became due and payable by the plaintiff, and continued so down to the distress (which is the alleged trespass) upon the 25th of May, 1899; and (3) that the plaintiff throughout persisted in refusing to pay what was due from him, and that he had no valid excuse for such refusal. The first point taken on behalf of the plaintiff is that under the warrant the defendants' authority to distrain came to an end upon the 5th of April, 1899, and consequently they were functi officio upon the 25th of May, 1899, and could not justify under it. In my judgment this is not so, and the authority under the warrant has no such limitation, and this will be seen upon reading it. The warrant, after reciting the appointment of the defendants to be collectors of the duties arising from property, professions, trades, and offices, and of the duties on inhabited houses for the year ending the 5th of April, 1899, enjoins and requires the collectors to make demand of the several sums upon the parties charged therewith, and upon payment thereof to give acquittances, and "if any person should refuse to pay the sum or sums charged upon him upon demand duly made, for non-payment thereof to distrain for the same by virtue of this our warrant without further authority." I do not find in this warrant that the power to distrain is limited to a distress made on or before the 5th of April, 1899, but, on the contrary, the power given is to distrain without limit as to time "for duties payable for the year ending the 5th of April, 1899." I would point out that the collectors appointed in the succeeding year for the year ending the 5th of April, 1900, could not distrain for the taxes and duties due for the preceding year ending the 5th of April, 1899. So much for the warrant itself under which the defendants justify. But it is further argued for the plaintiff that by the Taxes Management Act, 1880, the collectors became functi officio on the 5th of April, 1899. I will first deal with the only section that has any possible bearing upon this point prior to section 100, for in that and the following sections the statute deals with a new state of circumstances which does not exist in the present case. Section 73, sub-section 1, which is the only section referred to in this part (Part V.) of the Act, deals with the nomination of collectors in the month of April in each year. There is nothing in this section which enacts that after the month of April, 1899, the nominated collectors may not get in unpaid arrears which they were appointed to collect and which they could not collect owing to the persistent refusal of the taxpayer to pay, and, indeed, sub-section 9 of the section points to this, that it is not until the collectors' account for the year have been closed that the collectors' office is at an end. I can find down to section 100 nothing which enacts that a collector's power to distrain under section 86 of the Act ceases upon the 5th of April in any year under a warrant similar to that in the present case. The collector appointed is not for one year only and no more, his appointment is to collect the taxes for the year ending the 5th of April. Although there is a fresh appointment every year, the collectors appointed are not in place of those appointed in the preceding year, but to collect another year's taxes. No doubt, as a rule, the duties of the collectors for a particular year would be practically ended with the year, but they are not appointed only for the period of a year, nor do their duties of necessity end with the year. As a short method of description they might be referred to as collectors appointed for a year, and I think that the expression in section 117, sub-section 1, "for the remainder of the year," is explicable in the view that the Act intended to show clearly that the appointment of one collector in lieu of another was not intended to invalidate the latter's acts for the period during which he had acted. At section 100 there comes a new part of the Act—viz., Part VII., headed "Receipt and Account." This gives rise to other considerations. By section 100 the board may appoint in each year a day to receive the moneys received by the collectors, on which day the collectors shall account for all moneys given them in charge to collect. By section 103 on the appointed day the collectors are to pay over to the collector of Inland Revenue the moneys received by them, and by sub-section (b) to deliver a schedule of arrears. Until this is done, in my judgment, the collectors' authority to collect has not terminated. By section 105 and the following sections, under the heading of "Schedules of Arrears," different processes are prescribed by which a defaulting taxpayer may be brought to book by the commissioners and others. In the present case no day prior to the day of distress had been appointed for receipt of the moneys collected by them under section 100, and consequently no schedule of arrears was in existence, and it will be seen that in this state of circumstances none of the sections after and including section 100 have any application to this case, and I have not to consider what effect they would have if they did apply. I cannot find in the Act prior to section 100, which is the part of the Act which applies to this case, any more than in the warrant itself, that the authority of the collector to collect arrears due before the 5th of April, 1899, terminates upon that day; and as no day for receipt has been appointed under section 100 the sections subsequent thereto do not apply. The argument that the proceedings to make the plaintiff pay after the 5th of April, 1899, must be by way of making him a Crown debtor is not well founded in this case, and, in my opinion, in the present case there is nothing to justify such an argument. The above are the only points now remaining in the case. I agree with my brother Channell that the defendants can justify, as they have done, under their warrant of distress of the 13th of December, 1898. The appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I agree. No doubt there is a fresh nomination of collectors in each year, and no doubt the statute contemplates the rendering of accounts and the collection of arrears and the closing of the accounts in each year, and when once the account has been closed there is no power in a collector to distrain for arrears without the special authority of the commissioners; but, notwithstanding this, the fact remains that neither in section 86 nor in the warrant is there any limitation of the power of distress to one year.

ROMER, L.J.—I have had an opportunity of reading my lord's judgment, and I entirely agree with it.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for plaintiff, Samuel Price & Sons.

Solicitor for defendants, F. FitzPayne, for C. R. Thomas, Maidenhead.

---

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) — March 13, 14.

DIXON v. WINCH. (a.)

Mortgage—Transfer—No notice to mortgagor—Sale by mortgagor and mortgagee without disclosing mortgage—Fraudulent retention of purchase-money by mortgagee—Satisfaction of mortgage.

A solicitor conveyed certain land to a builder. The builder built some houses thereon and mortgaged it to the solicitor. The solicitor transferred the mortgage. No notice of such transfer was given to the builder. Subsequently the solicitor and the builder sold the land, which was conveyed by a deed containing a recital that it was free from incumbrances. The proceeds of sale were received by the solicitor, who retained the mortgage debt out of them. The solicitor till he absconded paid interest to the transferee.

Held, that the purchaser took the property subject to the mortgage, but the builder, having placed himself entirely in the hands of the solicitor, must have imputed to him the knowledge which the solicitor actually had, and must indemnify the purchaser against any payments to be made to the mortgagee.

Decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. (47 W. R. 620), affirmed.

This was an appeal from a decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. (reported 47 W. R. 620).

The facts may be stated shortly as follow:

By a deed of the 24th of March, 1892, one Dent conveyed certain land at Harlow to the defendant Winch.

By a deed dated the 11th of January, 1893, Winch mortgaged a portion of the land, with some houses which he had built on it, to Dent to secure £350 with interest at 5 per cent.

On the 16th of January, 1893, Dent transferred to the defendant Miss Ellman the mortgage debt of £350 and the mortgaged property subject to redemption.

No notice of the transfer was given by Miss Ellman to Winch. Miss Ellman received and had since retained in her own possession the title-deeds.

Dent paid Miss Ellman interest on the mortgage debt till 1898, when he absconded.

On Dent's disappearance it was discovered that part of the mortgaged land had been conveyed by Dent and Winch to the plaintiff for £685 by a deed dated the 15th of September, 1893.

This deed recited that Dent was seised in fee of the land free from incumbrances, and that he had agreed to sell to Winch for £100, but that no conveyance of the land had been executed, and that Winch had built houses on the land and had agreed to sell to the plaintiff for £685, £100 of which was to be paid to Dent.

By a deed dated the 25th of April, 1894, and containing similar recitals, the rest of the land was, in consideration of £375 paid to Winch, conveyed by Dent and Winch to the plaintiff. No investigation of title was made on behalf of the plaintiff, the arrangement being that she was to have a free conveyance prepared by Dent and to accept Winch's title from him.

The purchase-money for the first purchase was paid to Dent, and he retained thereout £451 10s. for principal, interest, and costs said to be due to him from Winch.

It was not alleged that the plaintiff had any knowledge of Miss Ellman's mortgage, and Winch denied all knowledge of the transfer to Miss Ellman.

The plaintiff claimed a declaration whether the defendant Miss Ellman's mortgage was a valid and subsisting security or not, and if it was to be entitled to redeem and to be indemnified by Winch.

The defendant Miss Ellman counterclaimed foreclosure or sale in default of payment.

Cozens-Hardy, J., held that Miss Ellman's mortgage was a valid subsisting charge, and that the defendant Winch must indemnify the plaintiff against all payments to be made by her to Miss Ellman.

The plaintiff and the defendant Winch appealed.

Eve, Q.C., and Christopher James, for the plaintiff.

Hayter, for the defendant Winch.

Micklem, Q.C., and Harman, for the defendant Miss Ellman.

The following cases were referred to: Norrish v. Marshall, 5 Madd. 475; In re Lord Southampton's Estate, Allen v. Lord Southampton, 29 W. R. 231, 16 Ch. D. 178; Matthews v. Wallwyn, 4 Ves. 118; Williams v. Sorrell, 4 Ves. 389; Le Neve v. Le Neve, 3 Atk. 646; Marjoribanks v. Hovenden, 6 Ir. Eq. Rep. 238; Bradley v. Riches, 26 W. R. 910, 9 Ch. D. 189; Cave v. Cave, 28 W. R. 798, 15 Ch. D. 639; In re Cox and Neve's Contract, 39 W. R. 412, [1891] 2 Ch. 109; Oliver v. Hinton, 48 W. R. 3, [1899] 2 Ch. 264; Kettlewell v. Watson, 30 W. R. 402, 21 Ch. D. 685; Jones v. Gibbons, 9 Ves. 407; Bickerton v. Walker, 34 W. R. 141, 31 Ch. D. 151; Atterbury v. Wallis, 4 W. R. 734, 8 De G. M. & G. 454; Hewitt v. Loosemore, 9 Hare 449; In re Cousins' Trusts, 34 W. R. 393, 31 Ch. D. 671; Rolland v. Hart, 19 W. R. 962, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 678.

LINDLEY, M.R.—I think it is unnecessary to consider the authorities which have been cited, for there is one view of the case which, as it seems to me, is quite sufficient to enable us to dispose of it. The question is whether the plaintiff, who has bought this property (previously mortgaged by the defendant Winch), is entitled to compel Miss Ellman, to whom the mortgage has been transferred, to give up her security. One thing is clear—namely, that Dent, the solicitor who acted in the matter, and the original mortgagee, cheated both Winch and Mrs. Dixon. Dent, having become owner of the land, entered into certain arrangements with Winch, for whom he acted as solicitor in every transaction. Dent having sold part of the land to Winch, the latter made a legal mortgage to Dent, which Dent transferred to Miss Ellman. Miss Ellman paid the money to Dent and received the deeds from him. It did not occur to her to give notice to Winch of the transfer of the mortgage to her. Dent ought to have done this; it was his duty both to her and to Winch to do so, and not to allow Winch to pay the mortgage-money to the wrong person. Dent continued after the transfer to pay the interest to Miss Ellman. Then Dent and Winch together sold and conveyed the property to Mrs. Dixon. Winch left everything connected with the sale to Dent. Dent inserted in the conveyance to Mrs. Dixon a deliberately false recital, suppressing altogether the mortgage and the transfer of it, and stating that the property was unincumbered. The result is that a gross fraud has been perpetrated upon Mrs. Dixon, but Winch was a mere tool of Dent in the transaction. The property was sold as free from incumbrances, when it was really subject to the mortgage to Miss Ellman. Winch cannot derive any benefit from that. Then Dent, having thus cheated Mrs. Dixon, proceeded next to cheat Winch. An account was settled between them, Dent retaining the mortgage debt out of Mrs. Dixon's purchase-money, which she had paid to him. And now she says that this transaction enables her, though she had in fact bought the property subject to the mortgage, to throw the loss upon Miss Ellman. She says that though she bought only the equity of redemption, yet luckily for her Miss Ellman has been paid off by means of the payment to Dent, because Winch had no notice of the transfer. This seems to me to be a subtle refinement based upon the equitable doctrine that, when a mortgage has been transferred, the mortgagor is still enabled to go on paying the original mortgagee if he has no notice of the transfer. But was the payment to Dent such a payment of the mortgage debt as would have entitled Winch to have demanded a reconveyance of the property from Miss Ellman? Considering the manner in which Winch had placed himself entirely in the hands of Dent, I think the knowledge which Dent had must be imputed to him. He is, in my opinion, affected by the knowledge of that which Dent knew, and cannot therefore avail himself of his actual ignorance of the transfer of the mortgage. He must be treated as having known that it had been transfered to Miss Ellman, and that he was paying the mortgage money to the wrong person, and the plaintiff stands in no better position than Winch. The mortgage must be treated as still subsisting and as a security to Miss Ellman for £350 and interest, and the plaintiff must take the property subject to it. Both the appeals must be dismissed.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

RIGBY, L.J.—I agree. I sympathise equally with Mrs. Dixon and with Miss Ellman, who were both ignorant of legal matters, and are both free from blame. Nor can I withhold my sympathy from Winch. There is no ground for attributing to him any fraudulent intention, though every act of Dent in the matter was tainted with fraud. I have not looked carefully at the cases which have been cited to us because, in my opinion, we can set them aside for the purpose of deciding the present case. Under the circumstances I think Winch is not entitled to say that he was ignorant of any material fact which was known to Dent. He must be taken to have known that the mortgage had been transferred to Miss Ellman, and that in paying Dent he did not discharge the mortgage in her hands.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I am much troubled about this case, because it deals with matters my familiarity with which is of but recent acquisition. But under these circumstances I do not think I should be discharging my judicial duty in differing from my brethren, unless I were perfectly certain that I was right, nor merely because, but for their opinion, I might myself have arrived at a different conclusion. Still, I think it is my duty to express the doubts and difficulties which I feel in arriving at the same conclusion as they do. Cozens-Hardy, J., based his decision upon the ground that, although it is a recognized rule in equity that, when a mortgage has been transferred, a payment made by the mortgagor to the original mortgagee is good as against the transferee, provided that the mortgagor has received no notice of the transfer, yet that rule ought not to be extended to a case like the present, in which the money paid by the mortgagor to the original mortgagee was part of the purchase-money fraudulently obtained by means of a false recital in the conveyance to the purchaser to the effect that there was no mortgage. I do not understand that either of my learned brethren has based his affirmation of the decision on that ground. I understand the ground of their decision to be this—that in these transactions as a whole there was such a general agency of Dent for Winch, that the knowledge of Dent must be imputed to Winch, and that Winch cannot be allowed to set up his actual ignorance of matters which were within the knowledge of Dent. My difficulty in accepting this view of the case is that there were, as it seems to me, two distinct transactions in which different persons were engaged. The first transaction was the conveyance of the property by Dent and Winch to Mrs. Dixon. I agree that in that transaction you must impute to Winch the knowledge of all that Dent knew, and that as between Winch and Mrs. Dixon he cannot be heard to say that he did not know of the transfer of the mortgage to Miss Ellman. This is something very like an estoppel against Winch setting up his actual ignorance of the transfer. But in my view this estoppel does not extend to anything outside that particular transaction. The result of the first transaction was that Mrs. Dixon took the property subject to the mortgage to Miss Ellman, and I do not understand her to deny this. Of course Winch is bound to indemnify her against that mortgage. That was the state of things when the conveyance was completed, and Mrs. Dixon had paid the purchase-money to Dent as agent for Winch. Shortly afterwards a settlement of accounts took place between Dent and Winch, and Winch allowed Dent to retain the mortgage debt out of the purchase-money. Then the question is, ought we to impute to Winch at that moment the knowledge of the fact that Dent had transferred the mortgage to Miss Ellman? In truth and in fact Winch knew nothing about it, and his allowing Dent to retain the money is the strongest possible evidence that he believed Dent to be still the mortgagee, and as such entitled to receive the mortgage-money. It may very well be that the knowledge of Dent must be imputed to Winch on the ground that he had placed himself in such a general relationship to Dent that he must be treated in all matters as having the knowledge which Dent had. I agree that the two transactions were immediately consequent on one another, and were very closely connected, though I have felt a difficulty in treating them as one. Under the circumstances, it might be right to draw the inference of fact that there was such a general agency of Dent for Winch that we ought to impute to Winch the knowledge of all which Dent knew, and that he must be taken to have known that he was paying the money wrongfully. On this question of imputed knowledge I prefer to adopt the judgment of my learned brethren. I have only intended in what I have said to point out the difficulties which I have felt in treating both the transactions as one, and then imputing Dent's knowledge to Winch.

Solicitors, Druces & Attlee; West, King, Adams, & Co.; C. F. Ingram.

---

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } April 7.
Byrne, J. }

EASTWOOD BROTHERS (LIMITED) v. HONLEY URBAN COUNCIL. (a.)

Local government—Sewer—Sewage matter—Pollution—Trade effluent—Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75)—West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxvi.), ss. 9, 10—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 17, 21—Public Health Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 17.

Where a prescriptive right exists to discharge drainage into a sewer, trade effluent may also be discharged, and a local authority has no right to cut off the connection of the drain and the sewer, although as a matter of fact the discharge may prejudicially affect the discharge of the sewage matter.

Trial of action.

This was an action tried without pleadings on affidavit evidence, in which the plaintiffs claimed an injunction to restrain the defendants from cutting off the connection between a sewer and a drain from the plaintiffs' mill.

The facts of the case were as follows: The mills in question were known as Thirston Mills and were acquired by the plaintiffs in 1890. The mills which had existed in 1853 had been from that time materially enlarged and there was some evidence to the effect that the volume of trade effluent had increased in recent years, but there had been no material alteration in its character.

In 1893 a dam was constructed from the mills which carried the trade effluent discharged in the processes of the manufacture into a channel known as Thirston dyke, that channel discharged itself into a stream which itself flowed into the River Holme. There was no interruption on the user of the drain for trade effluents so long as it discharged into Thirston dyke.

In 1885 the Honley Local Board, the then sanitary authority for the district, carried out a sewerage system, under which they constructed a sewer near Thirston dyke, and the workmen of the board (as appeared from the evidence), without any direction or any communication with the then owners of Thirston mills, took up the drain from the mills at the point where it met the new sewer and made a connection between them; so that from that time the drain ceased to discharge into Thirston dyke, and the effluent matter passed into the River Holme through the sewer.

Under the Local Government Act, 1894, the Honley Local Board became the Honley District Council.

In 1896 a joint committee of the Honley Urban District Council and the South Croyland Urban District Council was formed for the purpose of making sewers for the two districts, and subsequently this committee acquired land for the construction of outfall and purification works.

In April, 1897, the joint sewerage committee was, under a provisional order, superseded by a joint sewerage board, but only for the management of the main sewers, sewers already made by either of the two councils remained vested in and under the control of the council in whose district they were situate.

The defendants were advised that the trade effluent from Thirston Mills into this sewer on account of temperature and for other reasons injuriously affected the disposal of the sewage matter, and exposed them to liabilities under the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), s. 4. They accordingly informed the plaintiffs of their intention to cut off the connection between the sewer and the drain.

Levitt, Q.C., and Waggett, for the plaintiffs.

Asquith, Q.C., and Clayton, for the defendants.

BYRNE, J.—Having regard to the circumstances under which the connection between the drain and the sewer was made, and to the length of time, during which the connection has continued, I think I ought to hold that the connection was duly and lawfully made.

The plaintiffs' predecessors in title had a right to cause the drain to empty into the sewer of the local authority, now vested in the defendant district council (see Ainley v. Kirkheaton Local Board, 60 L. J. Ch. 734, and Brown v. Dunstable Corporation 47 W. R. 538, [1899] 2 Ch. 378), and the plaintiffs have a right to cause their drain to empty into the same sewer under section 21 of the Public Health Act, 1875.

The plaintiffs' predecessors in title were and the plaintiffs still are entitled to open through the drain into the sewer in question, not only sewage matter, but manufacturing effluents: see Peebles v. Oswaldtwistle Urban Council, [1897] 1 Q. B. 384 (reported on appeal 45 W. R. 454, [1897] 1 Q. B. 625). This case was reversed, but it was not reversed on any point material to the present case. Under these circumstances the plaintiffs are, in my judgment, entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendants from cutting off, as they threaten to do, the communication between the plaintiffs' drain and the defendants' sewer: see, amongst other cases, Attorney-General v. Clerkenwell Vestry, 40 W. R. 185, [1891] 3 Ch. 67, and the cases there cited.

Having regard to the provisions of section 16 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, I do not think that section 7 of that Act gives power to the defendants to stop up the communication in question even if it had been proved beyond all question—as it has not, in fact, been proved—that the liquid discharged from the drain into the sewer would prejudicially affect the disposal by sale, application to land, or otherwise of the sewage matter conveyed along the sewer. The defendants may or may not be entitled to some other remedy against the plaintiffs in respect of the effluent discharged into the sewer; I express no opinion on this point which does not arise in this action, but I am of opinion that the plaintiffs are entitled to an injunction to restrain interruption of the communication of the drain with the sewer.

---

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Judgment for plaintiffs.

Solicitors, Van Sandau & Co., for Mills & Co., Huddersfield; Jaques & Co., for Armitage, Sykes, & Hinchcliffe, Huddersfield.

---

Chan. Div. } Farwell, J. } May 28.

HAY v. NORTHCOTE. (a.)

Conflict of laws — Marriage — Validity — Marriage solemnized abroad before British consul — British subject and foreigner—Foreign decree of nullity—Consular Marriage Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 68).

A marriage between a British subject and a foreigner solemnized abroad in accordance with the requirements of the Consular Marriage Act, 1849, is valid in England, although such marriage has been declared void by a foreign court.

Action to set aside a settlement on account of its failure of consideration.

On the 24th of May, 1880, Louis Alphonse Duperrel, a Frenchman domiciled in France, but born in the Mauritius, and Louisa Harriet Tyrwhitt, an English woman domiciled in England, were married before the British Consul at Bordeaux, in accordance with the regulations of the Consular Marriage Act, 1849.

By an indenture dated the 20th of July, 1880, made between Edmund Tyrwhitt (since deceased) of the one part and George Burges (since deceased) of the other part, after reciting that previously to the marriage of Louis Alphonse Duperrel with the defendant Louisa Harriet Tyrwhitt, a daughter of the said Edmund Tyrwhitt, the said Edmund Tyrwhitt agreed to assign the two policies of assurance thereinafter particularly described upon the trusts thereinafter declared concerning the same, and also to enter into a covenant for the payment of an annual sum of £40 in the manner thereinafter provided, and that the marriage of the said L. A. Duperrel and the defendant L. H. Tyrwhitt was duly solemnized on the 25th of May, 1880, for effectuating the said agreement, and in consideration of the promises the said Edmund Tyrwhitt assigned the two policies of assurance therein particularly described unto the said George Burges, his executors, administrators, and assigns, to hold the same upon trust, to receive and invest all moneys assured by, or to become payable under, the said policies, and to pay the income thereof to the defendant L. H. Tyrwhitt during her life and after her decease upon trust for all the children of the defendant L. H. Tyrwhitt by the said L. A. Duperrel or any future husband, and it was thereby declared that if there should be no issue in whom the trust funds should become absolutely vested, then the trustee should hold the said funds upon trust for the next-of-kin of the defendant L. H. Tyrwhitt, and the said Edmund Tyrwhitt covenanted to pay during the joint lives of himself and the defendant L. H. Tyrwhitt the annual sum of £40 to the said George Burges for the benefit of the defendant L. H. Tyrwhitt.

On the 15th of March, 1882, the tribunal of first instance of Bordeaux made a decree on the petition of the wife, the husband concurring, declaring this marriage null and void. After this decree Louisa Harriet Duperrel lived with her father, who ceased to pay her the £40 annuity, but kept up the policies which remained in the hands of the trustee of the settlement.

On the 21st of July, 1899, Edmund Tyrwhitt died, and his will was proved by his executors, the plaintiff and the defendant G. R. Northcote.

The defendants G. S. Northcote and G. R. Northcote were the present trustees of the settlement.

The defendants had received the moneys payable under the policies since the death of Edmund Tyrwhitt.

The plaintiff now claimed a declaration that the said indenture of settlement was not binding on the estate of the said Edmund Tyrwhitt and ought to be delivered up, and an order to the defendants G. S. and G. R. Northcote to transfer and pay the trust fund to the executors of the will of the said Edmund Tyrwhitt.

Bramwell Davis, Q.C., and E. S. Ford, for the executor.—The marriage was solemnized in France, the French court is therefore competent to declare the marriage null and void: Sottomayer v. De Barros, 27 W. R. 917, 5 P. D. 94.

Badcock, Q.C., and A. F. Peterson, for the trustees of the settlement.—By the Consular Marriages Act, 1849, a marriage celebrated before a British Consul abroad is as valid as if it had been celebrated in her Majesty's dominions, and its validity can only be determined by an English court: Simonin v. Mallac, 2 Sw. & Tr. 67, 8 W. R. Div. Dig. 16. Pemberton v. Hughes, 47 W. R. 354, [1899] 1 Ch. 781, was a case of divorce, where different considerations apply.

Bramwell Davis, Q.C., in reply.—The court should follow the decree of the French court unless it offends views of substantial justice: Pemberton v. Hughes.

FARWELL, J., after stating the facts: It is now contended that a marriage which has been declared null and void by a court in France should be also declared null and void in this country. In the first place I have to decide if the marriage is good in England. I do not think the case is distinguishable from Simonin v. Mallac. That was a case of two foreigners domiciled abroad who came to England and were married in order to evade the law of their own country, and the marriage had on that ground been there declared void. In the present case the parties are not two foreigners, but an Englishwoman and a Frenchman who were married before the British consul at Bordeaux in 1880. Now, a marriage of this nature was at that date governed by the Consular Marriage Act, 1849. [His lordship read the preamble and section 1 of the Act, and continued:] It is admitted that the marriage was solemnized in the manner provided by the Act. There is, therefore, first, an enactment of the English Legislature saying that a marriage solemnized as this was, before a duly authorized British Consul, shall be valid according to English law; and secondly, an English settlement providing for the wife and children, the trustee being an Englishman resident in England and the trust funds being in this country. I am asked to say that the marriage was void here because it was declared void in France. But it seems perfectly clear that the marriage was not void in England. The Act was exactly followed and covered the very case, thereby giving statutory validity to the marriage. In Simonin v. Mallac, Sir Cresswell Cresswell, in delivering the considered judgment of himself, Channell, B., and Keating, J., says: "The great importance of having some one certain rule applicable to all cases; the difficulty, not to say impossibility, of having any rule applicable to all cases, save that of the law of a country where a marriage is solemnized shall, in that country at least, decide whether it is valid or invalid; the absence of any judicial decision, or dictum, or even any opposite opinion of any writer of authority on the law of nations have led us to the conclusion that we ought not to found our judgment in this case on any other rule than the law of England as prevailing amongst English subjects." In my opinion, on the true construction of this Act, this marriage must be treated as solemnized in England. The consulate must for this purpose be considered as English territory. The English Legislature, it is true, cannot make French territory English, but it can say that acts done in a certain manner shall have the same effect as if the territory were English. Simonin v. Mallac is therefore applicable, and whether the decree of the French court was good or not in France, this marriage is perfectly good in England. In Sottomayer v. De Barros there was an inability of the parties to contract inter se, and Simonin v. Mallac, though distinguished on those grounds, was cited without disapproval by the Court of Appeal. I therefore hold that the settlement is binding on the father's estate.

(a.) Reported by C. W. MEAD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, Robins, Hay, Waters & Hay.

---

Chan. Div.
Farwell, J. } March 12.

CARR v. LYNCH. (a.)

Statute of Frauds—Memorandum in writing—Sufficient description.

The Statute of Frauds is satisfied if the parties are sufficiently described, so that their identity cannot be fairly disputed. Thus a letter stating: "In consideration of your having this day paid me the sum of £50, I hereby agree and undertake to grant you or your assigns a further lease of twenty-four years . . . of the . . . Warden Arms . . . immediately after the expiration of the term granted by the now existing lease, . . . such new lease to be at the same rental . . . and to contain similar covenants and conditions as are contained in the existing lease," but not containing the name of the person to whom it was addressed, was held to sufficiently identify the existing tenant of the premises (who had that day paid £50 to his landlord) to satisfy the statute.

Action for specific performance of an agreement to grant a lease.

The defence alleged that the agreement relied on by the plaintiff was not sufficiently clear to satisfy the Statute of Frauds.

The defendant had granted a lease of the Warden Arms, Kentish Town, to Charles Smith for a term of twenty-eight years from the 24th of June, 1885, at a rent of £50.

This lease was assigned to Jayne in 1898.

Jayne negotiated with the defendant for an extension of the lease, and in December, 1895, they agreed together that Jayne should have a further term of twenty-four years for a fine of £50. Jayne paid this sum to the defendant, who thereupon handed him the following memorandum:

"3, Avenue-villas, Cricklewood, London, N.W.,
"Dec. 30, 1898.

"Dear Sir,—In consideration of you having this day paid to me the sum of £50 (fifty pounds), I hereby agree and undertake to grant you and your assigns a further lease of 24 years (twenty-four), 'W. L.,' of the premises known as the Warden Arms, 27, Warden-road, Kentish Town, London, N.W., to run immediately after the expiration of the term granted by the now existing lease dated the 24th of June, 1885, and made between William Lynch and Charles Smith of the premises. Such the new lease to be subject to the same rental, £50 (fifty pounds), and to contain similar covenants and conditions as contained in the now existing lease.

"(Signed) WILLIAM LYNCH.
"Witness—ARTHUR FREDERICK KEEVES JAYNE."

The plaintiff subsequently took an assignment of the existing lease, and the benefit of the extension from Jayne.

The plaintiff was prepared with evidence to prove that Jayne had signed his name intending to be bound by the memorandum, and that signing his name apparently as witness only was done by mistake. The defendant admitted that Jayne had paid him £50, but alleged that the agreement with him was only for an extension for fourteen years, and that the memorandum was not sufficient to satisfy the statute.

Younger, Q.C., and W. Baker, for the plaintiff.—The memorandum sufficiently defines Jayne as the proposed lessee, for he is admitted to be the person who paid the £50, and he was then the lessee of the premises, a further lease could therefore only be granted to him or his assigns.

Ingpen, Q.C., and A. L. Ingpen, for the defendant.—The description is insufficient, for others might have paid £50 on the 30th of December, 1898, and a "further lease" might be a reversion to anyone. The description is therefore insufficient to identify Jayne as the person to whom the lease was to be granted: Potter v. Duffield, 22 W. R. 585, L. R. 18 Eq. 4; Williams v. Jordan, 26 W. R. 230, L. R. 6 Ch. D. 517.

FARWELL, J.—I should be sorry if I had to allow the defendant's plea of the Statute of Frauds to prevail in this case. If the parties are so described that their identity cannot be fairly disputed, the statute is satisfied according to the rule in Potter v. Duffield. In this case it is plain on the memorandum that the lease is to be granted to the person who paid the £50. This is quite as good a description as the word "proprietor," which was held sufficient in Sale v. Lambert, 22 W. R. 478, L. R. 18 Eq. 1, and it is admitted in the defence that that person was Jayne. If further authority is wanted there is the recent case of Plant v. Bourne, 46 W. R. 59, [1897] 2 Ch. 281. Id certum est quod reddi potest. A further point, which, by itself, might have been more difficult, is the reference to a "further lease." If, however, I had felt any doubt on the first point, the employment of this phrase would, in this case, have removed it, though apart from the context the phrase might only have pointed to a reversionary lease. The alleged mistake as to the word "witness" might also have been relied on if it had been necessary to hear evidence. But the first is sufficient to dispose of the case, and I give judgment for the plaintiff with costs.

Solicitors, Williamson, Hill, & Co.; Leggatt, Rubinstein, & Co.

---

Chan. Div.
Farwell, J. } March 6.

FOAKES v. JACKSON. (a.)

Settlement—Power of appointment—Transfer of property by all parties interested—Release of power.

Any dealing with property subject to a power of appointment which is inconsistent with the exercise of that power, releases the power.

(a.) Reported by C. W. MEAD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by J. F. ISELIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Action, with witnesses, for an account of a trust estate.

By a marriage settlement made in 1858 the Ipswich Journal with its appurtenances were settled upon trust for the wife for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, with remainder, as to one moiety, upon trust for F. J. Foakes Jackson, her son by a former marriage, during his life, remainder upon trust for the benefit of his children, and in default of such children upon the trusts of the other moiety, which were for the husband for life, and after his decease for F. J. Jackson and the children or issue of the marriage as the husband and wife should jointly appoint, and in default of such appointment as the survivor should appoint, and in default of such appointment upon certain trusts for the benefit of F. J. Jackson and the children of the marriage.

Only one child of the marriage, a son named W. J. E. Foakes, survived to attain a vested interest under the settlement.

By an indenture dated the 14th of June, 1886, to which the husband and wife, Jackson, and W. J. E. Foakes (the two latter of whom had both attained the age of twenty-one years) were parties, the property subject to the settlement was transferred and assigned to Jackson for his own use and benefit, he covenanting to pay to W. J. E. Foakes (after the death of his mother) one-fourth of the net annual profits.

The plaintiffs, who were the infant children of W. J. E. Foakes, claimed under a subsequent appointment by the husband after the wife's death. The defendants, the trustees of the settlement and Jackson, claimed that the deed of 1886 was an execution of the joint power of appointment, or in the alternative operated as a release of that power, and that consequently the later appointment was ineffectual. This point was argued as a preliminary objection.

Bramwell Davis, Q.C., Rawlinson, Q.C., and T. T. Method, for the defendant Jackson, argued that the deed of 1886 showed a clear intention to pass the property to Jackson, and therefore was an exercise of the joint power, and the absence of any allusion to the power was not material.

P. M. Walters, for one of the trustees.

J. G. Wood, for the other trustee.

Hamilton, Q.C., Griffith-Jones, and M. Griffith-Jones, for the plaintiffs, contended that the deed did not show on its face that the husband and wife intended to exercise their joint power of appointment. The property was only assigned to Jackson for purposes of management. [FARWELL, J., referred to In re Lyons and Carroll's Contract, [1896] 1 I. R. 383.] The deed of 1886 was, therefore, no exercise of the power, and the rights of the surviving donee to exercise the subsequent power in favour of the infant plaintiffs was not thereby affected.

FARWELL, J., after referring to the settlement of 1858 and the deed of 1886, said: In my opinion the deed of 1886 operated either as an appointment under the joint power or as a release of the husband's power. It might have been more difficult to hold that it operated as an appointment if the parties entitled in default of appointment had not concurred; but as they and the donees of the power all joined with the intention of passing the property, which could only pass absolutely indefeasibly by an appointment, the deed would—and I should hold, if it were necessary in order to give full effect to the deed, that it did—operate as an appointment. In In re Hancock, Malcolm v. Burford-Hancock, 44 W. R. 426, 45, [1896] 2 Ch. 173, a husband who had power to appoint amongst his children, and also a power to appoint by deed one-fourth of the income to his wife for her life, exercised the latter power by two deeds in favour of each of two successive wives, having in the interval between the two deeds irrevocably appointed one-third of the trust funds to each of his three children by the first marriage. It was there held that the appointment in favour of the second wife was ineffectual, and Lindley, L.J. [1896] 2 Ch. at p. 183, approved the rule that any dealing with the estate by the donee of the power inconsistent with the exercise of a power put an end to it. In the present case all the persons interested are parties to the deed, and they intended to transfer the estate to Jackson absolutely, and whether the deed operated by appointment or release the plaintiffs have no title, and their action must be dismissed with costs.

Solicitors, A. M. Griffith Williams; Walters, Walters, Wood, Walters, Rawlinson, & Deverell; H. O. Soutter.

---

Chan. Div. Farwell, J. — March 5, 6.

MAY v. PLATT. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Construction—"All estate, term, and interest . . . in land coloured red in plan"—Covenant for title—Damages—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 7, sub-section 1 (a).

A conveyance expressed to be supplemental to a "principal agreement," wherein the vendor, "as beneficial owner," assigned and conveyed "all the estate, term, and interest . . . in the said piece of land coloured red in the said plan annexed to the said principal agreement, and a copy of which is annexed hereto," is a covenant by the vendor that he has the interest given to him by the principal agreement in the land coloured red.

Where the vendor has not all the land coloured red in the plan, he is liable to make good the damage which the purchaser suffers by the deficiency.

Action for damages for breach by the defendant of the covenants for title implied by the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 7, sub-section 1 (a).

By an agreement dated the 13th of June, 1891, between J. A. Brand and the defendant, the defendant was entitled to a lease, on completing certain buildings, of certain pieces of land coloured red and yellow in the plan annexed to the deed. On the plan a certain piece of land lying next to the land coloured yellow, which formed a slipway from the river, was coloured red, and there was nothing to distinguish it from the rest of the land coloured red.

Towards the end of 1891 the defendant agreed to sell the land coloured yellow in the plan. Upon a resurvey the slipway was found to belong to the land coloured yellow, and with the assent of the defendant a lease of the land coloured yellow was granted, including the slipway.

On the 15th of September, 1898, the defendant agreed in writing to sell to the plaintiffs all his estate, term, and interest in the principal agreement of the 13th of June, 1891, in the land coloured red on the said plan annexed thereto.

By an indenture dated the 30th of November, 1898, and made between the defendant of the one part and the plaintiffs of the other part, and expressed to be supplemental to the principal agreement of the 13th of June, 1891, after reciting that the plan annexed to the indenture now in statement was an exact copy of the plan annexed to the said principal agreement, and the lands coloured red and yellow on the plan annexed to such principal agreement were exactly delineated on the plan annexed to the indenture now in statement, and were therein also coloured red and yellow; and reciting that a lease of the land coloured yellow had been duly granted in respect thereof under the principal agreement; and reciting the agreement of the 15th of September, 1898, it was witnessed that the defendant "as beneficial owner doth hereby assign and convey unto the purchasers, their executors and administrators, all the estate, term, and interest of him the said J. E. Platt under and by virtue of the said principal agreement, in the said piece of land coloured red in the said plan annexed to the said principal agreement, and a copy of which is annexed hereto, and the full benefit of the said principal agreement and all rights, powers, and privileges of him the said J. E. Platt thereunder, to hold the same unto the purchasers, their executors, administrators, and assigns, for ever."

(a) Reported by C. W. MEAD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The fact that the slipway had been included in the lease of the land coloured yellow on the map was discovered by the plaintiffs after the conveyance. The defendant admitted that the slipway had been leased with the land coloured yellow, but alleged that the plaintiffs' agent was aware of the fact before the conveyance, that the difference was immaterial, and that the slipway was included in the conveyance by inadvertence and contrary to the true intention of the parties, and counterclaimed for rectification of the conveyance. The plaintiffs denied all these allegations.

Warmington, Q.C., and MacSwinney, for the plaintiffs.—The defendant has broken the covenant implied when he conveyed as "beneficial owner." The defendant cannot by parol evidence show that there was something agreed on outside of the written contract. The conveyance and the agreement both agree, and any evidence to show that what was agreed to be conveyed was not all the land coloured red, but that a part is not included, is not admissible: Davies v. Fitton, 2 Dr. & War. 225; Cato v. Thompson, 9 Q. B. D. 616; 31 W. R. Dig. 210; Page v. Midland Railway Co., 42 W. R. 116, [1894] 1 Ch. 11. The defendant is not entitled to rectify the agreement, for the error is not common to both parties. If the defendant were allowed to rectify it would be allowing him to vary the agreement by parol and then grant him specific performance of the agreement so varied.

Hughes, Q.C., and Whinney, for the defendant.—The assignment is of the defendant's "estate, term, and interest . . . of the piece of land coloured red on the plan annexed to the principal agreement." This means "estate, term, and interest, if any." The plaintiffs should have ascertained the nature and extent of the interest: Delmer v. M'Cabe, 14 Ir. C. L. Rep. 377; Allen v. Holton, 37 Mass. 458; Sweet v. Brown, 53 Mass. 175. Cooke v. Founds, 1 Lev. 40, is distinguishable. The defendant is entitled to rectification on the ground that there was a mistake if the covenant applies at all. If the mistake is not mutual the remedy is rescission with the option of accepting rectification: Harris v. Pepperell, 16 W. R. 68, L. R. 5 Eq. 1; Garrard v. Frankel, 30 Beav. 445. [FARWELL, J., referred to Dart on Vendors and Purchasers (6th ed.), 839.]

FARWELL, J.—The plaintiffs ask for a declaration that the defendant is liable to make good the damage they have suffered by the breach on the defendant's part of the covenant for title implied in the conveyance of the 30th of November, 1898. It is said that the covenant is not applicable. That is a question of construction. The conveyance first refers to the principal agreement, under which the defendant held, and then the defendant conveys as beneficial owner all his estate, term, and interest under and by virtue of the principal agreement in the piece of land coloured red in the plan annexed to the principal agreement. It is said that that is equivalent to saying "all such estate and interest, if any," as the defendant may have in the piece of land coloured red, and, inasmuch as he had no interest at all in the slipway, the covenant does not extend to it. In my opinion that is not a sound construction. Several cases have been cited, but the form of this conveyance appears reasonably plain. The words "all the estate, term, and interest" are put in with reference to the principal agreement and show that what is conveyed is not freehold, but the estate limited by the principal agreement. There are two things to consider—namely, the quantum of the estate of the assignor and the limits of the property to which that estate applies. The quantum of the estate is limited to the estate which the defendant had under the principal agreement and the limits of the property are defined by the part of the plan coloured red. The defendant covenants that he has the interest given to him by the principal agreement in the land coloured red. That is the fair and reasonable construction of the covenant. I treat the American authorities with respect, but they are decisions on the construction of other deeds and do not assist me in the present case. The Irish case of Delmer v. M'Cabe is also merely a decision on the words of a particular covenant. The point of the decision appears to me to be found on p. 382, where Monaham, C.J., construing the covenant, says: "There is no covenant that the party is seised in fee simple, or of any estate whatever, as is, to say the least of it, generally found in the conveyance of an estate in fee simple; or that he has power to convey a fee simple as for a freehold or any particular estate; but he has good power to convey his estate and interest under the deed of 1841, saying, as I read it, almost in so many words—'I do not know what estate I have under the deed of 1841; whether it is freehold or chattel; but whatever it is, I give it to you as I have got it; I have not done any act to dispose of it or incumber it; and, such as it is, I sell it to you.'"

That is merely a decision on construction, and it is not for me to say whether I agree with it or not. If it were intended as a decision that the generality of the witnessing part of a deed could be limited by reference to the covenant, it would be contrary to the decisions of the Court of Appeal in Page v. Midland Railway Co. I may observe that Delmer v. McCabe is referred to in Elphinstone on the Interpretation of Deeds at p. 468, where the old English case of Cooke v. Founds is cited as a decision to the contrary. On that point, therefore, I am of opinion that the covenant is applicable.

Then it is said that the plaintiffs by their agent knew of the diminution of the land coloured red before the date of the conveyance. I have rejected evidence on that point altogether. First of all, I cannot admit it as a defence in the action, if there is a latent ambiguity in the description of the property conveyed so that the words used are susceptible of two meanings; but where there is, as here, no ambiguity at all, but the property is conveyed by a clear and definite description and plan, parol evidence to contradict the deed is altogether inadmissable. If authority is wanted for that proposition it is supplied by Cato v. Thompson. Page v. Midland Railway Co. also shows that the generality of the covenant for title cannot be restricted by proving that the defect was known to the purchasers—i.e., in this case by showing that the plaintiffs knew that the plan was coloured red beyond the true boundary. If the covenant is clear and refers to the property expressed to be conveyed, evidence is not admissible to contradict it, and even the recital in the conveyance in Page v. Midland Railway Co. showing the defect was held not admissible for that purpose, that being only an illustration of the principle that clear, unambiguous words in the witnessing part of the deed cannot be contradicted by a recital.

I now come to the consideration of the counterclaim, which asks for rectification. In my opinion, the evidence tended to show there was a mistake is inadmissible for this purpose also. In a suit for rectification parol evidence of material mistake is of course admissible to show that the completed deed is not in accordance with the true agreement between the parties; but when such agreement is itself in writing and is plain and unambiguous and in exact accord with the deed, it is obvious that the person claiming rectification must first rectify the agreement. But what does that involve? In a case like the present, where the vendor counterclaims for rectification only, he necessarily implies that he desires the transaction to stand as rectified; or, in other words, starting de novo with the contract, he first asks the court to rectify it, and then grant specific performance of the contract as rectified. This is contrary to the well-settled practice established by cases such as Woolam v. Hearn, 7 Ves. 211, that a plaintiff cannot obtain specific performance of a written contract with a parol variation. If further authority is wanted it will be found in Davies v. Fitton, where Lord St. Leonards says: "It is said that there is a mistake in the deed; I, however, cannot see any. The question and the cause is, whether the lease has been prepared in conformity with the agreement? The plaintiffs say that by the agreement I can reform the lease; if this be so, parol evidence is not required, but the parol evidence is tendered to show that the lease is contrary to the spirit of the agreement"—that is, it is not in accordance with the true intention of the parties—"inasmuch as there is something de novo the contract agreed upon between the parties which was omitted in the lease. Now, the rule of law is so well settled that it is idle to discuss it. How can I receive parol evidence on the part of a plaintiff to rectify a written agreement of which he seeks a specific execution? I cannot decree a specific performance with a variation of a new term, no matter how inconsiderable that term may be—as, for instance, the payment of taxes—nor how clearly the term may be proved by parol evidence. The court cannot receive the evidence." Then he goes on a little later to say: "If the plaintiff had come here to have the contracts executed, I must have given them the precise lease which actually exists. Can I now reform this lease by that evidence, which if the lease existed in fieri would be inadmissible to aid the carrying it into execution? It would be more violent, I think, now to reform this lease by that evidence than formerly to use it for the purpose of executing the contract." That seems to me to be a clear decision that I cannot admit parol evidence to rectify a conveyance made in accordance with a written contract without first rectifying the contract and enforcing it as rectified, and this I have already said I cannot do. Then the defendant has pressed me to admit the evidence on the ground that it would show the parties are not ad idem, and the plaintiffs, as defendants to the counterclaim, would be put to their election to accept rectification or submit to rescission. This case does not, I think, really arise for my decision at all, because I am bound to reject the evidence altogether. I would point out, however, that the counterclaim asks only for rectification. In my judgment, in order to get rescission after conveyance the allegations would have had to be very different. I have always understood the law to be that in order to obtain rectification there must be a mistake common to both parties, and if the mistake is only unilateral, there must be fraud or misrepresentation amounting to fraud. It is true that Lord Romilly in Harris v. Pepperell and Garrard v. Frankel, and perhaps Bacon, V.C., in Paget v. Marshall, 33 W. R. 608, appear to have shrunk from stigmatizing the defendant's conduct in terms as fraud, but they treated it as equivalent to fraud, and in my opinion would have had no jurisdiction to grant the relief that they did in the absence of fraud. Rescission after conveyance of land can only be obtained on the ground of unfair dealing: Brownlee v. Campbell, 5 App. Cas. 925, 29 W. R. Dig. 232 (per Lord Selborne), and Soper v. Arnold 36 W. R. 207, 37 Ch. D. 96 (Cotton, L.J.). It is only necessary to say this in the present case, in consequence of the defendant's argument: if it were a case of fraud which unravels everything, there would be no difficulty in looking into the evidence to see how the contract was induced, as well as how it was carried out, but in the absence of fraud—of which there is no suggestion—I cannot see how the evidence could be admitted for any purpose whatever; there will therefore be a declaration that the defendant is liable to make good the damage, and an inquiry as to the amount. The defendant must pay the costs of the action, the costs of the inquiry being reserved. The counterclaim will be dismissed with costs.

Solicitors, Leighton & Savory; Field, Roscoe, & Co., for Wrigley, Claydon, & Trustram, Oldham.

---

Q. B. Div. (Mathew, J.) — May 25, 28; June 1.

DRIEFONTEIN CONSOLIDATED MINES (LIMITED) v. JANSON.

WEST RAND CENTRAL GOLD MINES (LIMITED) v. DE ROUGEMONT. (a.)

Insurance—Bullion—Seizure by Government of assured's country—Subsequent declaration of war—Insurance of property of enemy.

Gold bullion, the property of a company registered and carrying on business in the Transvaal, was insured at Lloyd's during transit from the mine to the United Kingdom by a policy which covered the usual risks of capture and detention. The gold, while in transit, was seized on the 2nd of October by the orders of the Transvaal Government. At that date it appeared probable that hostilities might shortly break out between this country and the Transvaal, but hope of a peaceful settlement had not been entirely abandoned. On the 11th of October, hostilities commenced. In an action on the policy, it having been agreed that the case was to be dealt with as if the war was over,

Held, that, as at the date of the seizure a state of war did not exist, the plaintiffs were not, as alien enemies, disentitled to recover.

The first of these two cases was an action on a policy of insurance subscribed by the defendant and other underwriters at Lloyd's.

The plaintiffs were a gold mining company incorporated according to the laws of the South

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

African Republic and carrying on business in the Transvaal.

By the policy, certain gold bullion belonging to the plaintiffs was insured during transit from the mine near Johannesburg until its arrival in the United Kingdom. The policy covered the usual risks of capture and detention.

On the 2nd of October gold which was the subject matter of the insurance was seized by agents of the Transvaal Government while in course of transit. Actual hostilities between the governments of the Transvaal and of this country began on the 11th of October.

The plaintiffs alleged that the gold had been lost through perils insured against—viz., by seizure or theft by agents of and for the behalf of the Transvaal Government.

The material points of the defence and the arguments of counsel are fully stated in the judgment.

The second action was also on a policy of insurance on gold, and the claim also arose out of a seizure of gold by the Transvaal Government. The only points of difference between the two cases were, that in this case the plaintiffs were a company registered in England, and that a portion of the gold seized was at the time of seizure—namely, on the 9th of October, in the charge of a bank at Johannesburg, where it had been received from the plaintiffs on the 5th of October.

The defendant alleged as to this portion that it was never in transit, and that the policy never attached; and, alternatively, that there had been a deviation or abandonment or change of voyage relieving the defendant from liability.

Lawson Walton, Q.C., Carver, Q.C., and Scrutton, for the plaintiffs.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., Lord Robert Cecil, Q.C., and J. A. Hamilton, for the defendants.

The following cases were cited in the course of the arguments: Reg. v. Jameson, 12 Times L. R. 551, 45 W. R. Dig. 43; The Herstelder, 1 C. Rob. 113; The Boedes Lust, 5 C. Rob. 233; Furtado v. Rodgers, 3 Bos. & P. 191; The Ionian Ships, Spink's Prize Court Cases, 193; Kellner v. Le Mesurier, 4 East 396; Gamba v. Le Mesurier, ibid. 407; Brandon v. Curling, ibid. 410; Society for the Propagation of the Gospel v. Wheeler, 2 Gall. 104; The Jonge Klassina, 5 C. Rob. 297; M'Connell v. Hector, 3 Bos. & P. 113; Conway v. Gray, 10 East 536; Aubert v. Gray, 3 B. & S 163; The Danckebaar Africaan, 1 C. Rob. 107; The Success, 1 Dod. 131; Campbell v. Innes, 4 B. & Ald. 423; The Abby, 5 C. Rob. 251; The Packet de Bilboa, 2 C. Rob. 133; The Hoop, 1 C. Rob. 196; Potts v. Bell, 8 T. R. 548.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 1.—MATHEW, J.—The first of these two cases was an action brought by the plaintiff company against underwriters at Lloyd's to recover a loss through the capture of gold while in transit from Johannesburg to the United Kingdom. The policy covered the usual risks of capture and detention. The facts were these. The gold was despatched from Johannesburg by train on the 2nd of October, 1899, and while in transit was seized at the frontier of the Transvaal by the orders of the Transvaal Government. On the 9th of October, an ultimatum was issued by the Transvaal Government to the British Government announcing that if certain demands contained therein were not complied with, the conduct of the British Government would be treated as a declaration of war at 5 p.m. on the 11th of October. The gold was taken absolutely out of the control and possession of the plaintiff company, and a demand was made on the underwriters for payment of the amount of the loss, but the underwriters refuse payment on the grounds stated in the points of defence as follows: "The plaintiffs are a limited company incorporated according to the laws of, and domiciled within the territories of, the present South African Republic and are alien enemies of her Majesty, and the loss, if by any peril insured against, was by an arrest, restraint, or detainment by the Government of the present South African Republic incidental to actual or expected hostilities against her Majesty and made for a purpose connected therewith—namely, to supply the said Government with funds with which to levy war upon her Majesty, as they were then proposing, and shortly afterwards proceeded, to do, whereby the plaintiffs' claim herein is for an indemnity which is contrary to public policy and is altogether barred and cannot be maintained." For the purposes of this action it was agreed that the Blue Books issued by the Government of this country should be treated as containing the evidence of all material facts, and it was further agreed that no dilatory plea should be set up based on the fact that the plaintiffs were an alien company, and therefore could not sue in this country while the war lasted. The case, it is agreed, is to be dealt with as if the war was over.

The first point raised on behalf of the defendant in argument was this. It was said that it was shown from what appears in the Blue Books that the Transvaal Government were, on the 2nd of October, resolved to go to war, and that the seizure of the gold was made with the object of obtaining the means of prosecuting the war effectively. The seizure was said, therefore, to be like an attack actually made by a belligerent Power upon enemy's territory. If that contention is right, all the serious consequences of a state of war would have followed from the 2nd of October. If war had then commenced, all commercial relations between the subjects of the two countries should have ceased, and every kind of communication that could relieve the pressure of hostilities was a violation of duty. I am clear that there was no state of war on the 2nd of October. What constitutes a state of war is well described in Hall's International Law (4th ed.), at p. 63: "When differences between States reach a point at which both parties resort to force or one of them does acts of violence which the other chooses to look upon as a breach of the peace, the relation of war is set up, in which the combatants may use regulated violence against each other until one of the two has been brought to accept such terms as his enemy is willing to grant." There was no evidence before me of the existence on the 2nd of October of an intention to settle the dispute by force, and, in fact, the negotiations for a peaceful settlement continued for several days after that date. Moreover both Governments were aware of the seizure of the gold, and neither treated it as an act of war. There was no evidence of any intention at that date to issue the sudden ultimatum which was eventually delivered on the 9th of October. Under these circumstances it is quite clear that the intention to wage war subsequently cannot be treated as creating an actual state of war. Now, if the seizure was not at the time a hostile act, as is my view, and if there was no other valid defence, the plaintiffs would clearly be entitled to sue and to recover for the loss. But a second point was raised. It was said that when the war did actually break out the seizure of the gold, even assuming it to have been a neutral act before, then acquired a hostile character. The proclamation of war on the 11th of October related back, it was said, to the previous seizure on the 2nd of October, with the same result as if the seizure had been made after war was declared. In support of this contention the cases of The Herstelder, 1 C. Rob. 113, and The Boedes Lust, 5 C. Rob. 233, were cited. The case was said to resemble that of an embargo laid on alien ships followed by a declaration of war. In such a case it would seem not to be disputed that the embargo would become a capture, and it is argued that here the seizure of gold ripened into a capture after the declaration of war. There is, however, in my opinion, no analogy between a seizure such as this, which only applies to the owner of the property seized, and an embargo. In the case of an embargo the property remains in the owner's hands, but here the bullion was wholly removed from the control of the plaintiff company by seizure in invitum. Again, the cases referred to relate to the acts of a belligerent and throw no light on a case such as this, where the seizure was by the Transvaal Government of the property of a company which is in the position of a subject of that Government. There is no authority for this supposed doctrine of the relation back from the date of the declaration of war to the date of the seizure, creating a state of war which did not in point of fact exist at that time.

Then it was said there was a further ground of defence. It was said that, even if the original seizure was not an act of war, and that a right of action would, therefore, under ordinary circumstances, have arisen as soon as the seizure took place, the subsequent war extinguished the liability of the underwriters. The principle of law contended for was that any contract which operates to protect the enemies' property from the calamities of war is against public policy and illegal. The cases cited in support of this supposed principle were the well-known prize cases decided in the early days of this century—Furtado v. Rogers, 3 Bos. & P. 191; Kellner v. Le Mesurier, 4 East 396; Gamba v. Le Mesurier, ibid. 407; Brandon v. Curling, ibid. 410, and the statement of the law in Duer on Insurance, vol. 1, p. 414. No doubt it is the law that insurances by English underwriters against English capture are illegal. In the words of Lord Ellenborough in Brandon v. Curling: "Where the insurance is upon goods generally, a proviso to this effect shall in all cases be considered as engrafted therein—viz., provided that this insurance shall not extend to cover any loss happening during the existence of hostilities between the respective countries of the assured and the assurer. Because during the existence of such hostilities the subjects of the one country cannot allowably lend their assistance to protect by insurance the property and commerce of the subjects of the other." The ground for this, as stated in the earlier cases, is that to permit such insurance would be obviously repugnant to the interests of the State. Capture is intended to defeat and weaken the resources of the enemy, and a contract of indemnity would frustrate that purpose. It is said that the principle disclosed by these authorities should be developed and extended so as to include this case, and that a further exception should be written into this policy—viz., the exception of capture by a belligerent Government of the property of its own subjects. It is said that to pay during the war the amount of the loss of the assured must increase the resources of the belligerent Power of which the assured is a subject. Without dealing at length with this proposition and without considering how far it could, in fact, be maintained, it is obvious that no such contention can arise when the war is over, and it has been agreed, as I have already said, that this case is to be treated as if the war were at an end. The principle contended for on behalf of the defendant would wholly override the well-known rule of law that, when both the contract of indemnity is entered into and the loss occurs before the commencement of hostilities, the declaration of war only suspends the remedy whilst the war lasts. The authorities for that proposition are to be found in Flindt v. Waters, 15 East 260, Alcinous v. Nigreu, 3 W. R. 25, 4 E. & B. 217, and Duer on Insurance, vol. 1, p. 434. I am satisfied that my judgment in the first case must be for the plaintiff company.

A point was argued at considerable length by Mr. Carver in his reply that the plaintiff company was not an alien enemy, on the ground that the majority of the shareholders were French, Germans, and subjects of the Queen, and that a very few were the subjects of the Transvaal Government. In my opinion this trading company, being incorporated under the Transvaal law, must be treated as a Transvaal subject, and it is clear from the decision of Story, J., in the case referred to by Mr. Walton, Society for the Propagation of the Gospel v. Wheeler, 2 Gall. 104, that a company may be treated as an alien enemy.

In the second action the only material difference is that a point was raised by the defendant that at the time of the loss the goods were not covered by the policy. That is a question of fact. The course of business followed by the plaintiffs was that parcels of bullion were, from time to time, forwarded from the mine to a bank in Johannesburg, in order that they might be sent on to the United Kingdom, and the bank would make advances against the parcels of bullion. On the 5th of October the bullion in question was sent from the mine to the bank, and, according to the terms of the policy, the gold was to be covered at and from the mines to its ultimate destination. The plaintiffs' manager hoped that when the gold reached the bank an advance would be made and the gold would be forwarded to its destination in the usual way; but by that time it had become known that seizures of gold by the Transvaal Government were taking place, and the bank refused to make any advance on the gold, or to take any responsibility in respect of forwarding it. It was thereupon arranged that the gold should remain in the custody of the manager of the bank, and should not be forwarded without further communication from the plaintiffs. It was contended on behalf of the defendant that the gold was never in transit. On the evidence before me I am clearly of opinion that it was. It was also argued that in the circumstances there was a deviation, but I am satisfied that it was the duty of the assured, under the well-known clause of the policy, to take proper steps to safeguard the subject-matter of the insurance, and that the arrangement come to between the plaintiffs' manager and the bank was the best that could be done in the position of the property in question at that time.

My judgment, therefore, in the second case also must be for the plaintiffs for the amount claimed.

Judgment for the plaintiffs in both actions.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, William A. Crump & Son.

Solicitors for the defendants, Waltons, Johnson, Bubb, & Whatton.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. } Feb. 6.
Divorce. }

MEDWAY v. MEDWAY. (a.)

Divorce — Practice — Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39)—Case remitted to justices—Wife's costs.

A deed of separation is conclusive evidence on the question whether the husband has neglected to maintain his wife.

Where a wife has obtained a decision in her favour under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, and comes to the High Court to support it, she will have her costs.

Appeal against order of Kent justices, Ashford division, by husband against a separation order and an order to pay to his wife 10s. a week.

The parties were married in 1882 and lived together till July, 1887, when a deed of separation was executed and the wife left for America, where she remained till August, 1899, when she returned, and on going to her husband's house was refused access. She then took out the necessary summons under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, and on the 27th of December, 1899, the justices, after hearing both the husband and wife, made the order appealed against on the ground of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for the wife, and by such neglect caused her to leave and live separate and apart from him.

Barnard, for the husband, in support of the appeal, submitted (1) that there was no evidence that the appellant had wilfully neglected to provide reasonable maintenance for his wife and by such neglect had caused her to live separate and apart from him; (2) that there was evidence that the appellant and respondent were living apart under an agreement for a separation; (3) and that the complaint had not been made within six calendar months from the time when the matter of complaint arose. The offence of neglect is not a continuing offence (Ellis v. Ellis, 45 W. R. 144, [1896] P. 251), therefore the six months elapsed before summons. If anything was paid under the separation deed that makes it binding. The deed was evidence of the separation by consent and afterwards the husband was not bound to receive her back.

Macoun, for the wife, said the neglect to support began in August, 1899.

Barnard in reply.

JEUNE, P.—In this case, to my mind, this marital agreement lies at the root of the whole matter. The only charge is that the appellant wilfully neglected to provide reasonable maintenance for the respondent, and by such neglect caused her to leave and live separately and apart from him. If the charge was intended to be that he did that in 1887, an application founded thereon would be out of time. Ellis v. Ellis decided that point, and I think rightly. Therefore, unless there was some other occasion upon which the ground of complaint can be justly fixed, the application of the wife must necessarily fail. But that depends upon the memorandum of agreement. If it be the case that the wife left the husband by mutual consent, but only temporarily, if it was not settled between them in 1887 that there was to be a final separation, I do not see why she necessarily forfeited her right, at any time when that temporary arrangement came to an end, to return to him; and when she did return and he shut the door in her face, it might fairly be contended that at the time there was neglect by him to provide maintenance for her, and by such neglect caused her to leave and live separately and apart from him. It all depends upon the agreement. I am reluctant to say that the justices who saw the parties and heard their evidence were wrong in accepting the wife's story, extraordinary though it be, as against that of the husband.

But the justices had not all the evidence before them, they had not the solicitor who attested the document, and whose evidence should be conclusive. If he, being called as a witness, were to say that the consideration money was paid, and if he were to deny, saying that the document was not worth the paper it was written on, that would be conclusive against the wife on this summons. I think, therefore, that this case must be remitted to the justices, with the expression of opinion that the document is conclusive, one way or the other, when the whole available evidence as to it shall have been given. If the document is invalid, then, in my opinion, the wife has a good ground of complaint; if valid, the husband has a complete answer.

BARNES, J.—I am of the same opinion. It is impossible to decide this case properly without knowing whether there is a binding agreement or not. Although the justices have decided upon the evidence of the wife that it is not, it is, in my judgment, desirable that the case should be sent back to them in order that the whole of the evidence on the subject may be given.

Macoun asked for the wife's costs.

JEUNE, P.—The rule that we have already laid down and acted upon is that, where a wife has obtained a decision in her favour and comes here to support it, she ought to have her costs. The appellant must, therefore, be ordered to pay the costs of the respondent upon this appeal.

Solicitors for the appellant, Riddell & Co., for Lewis & Pocock, Cardiff.

Solicitor for the respondent, B. Walker Kemp.

(a.) Reported by J. GERARD LAING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

---

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. } Feb. 6.
Divorce. }

WALTON v. WALTON. (a.)

Practice—Appeal—Notes of proceedings in court below—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39).

Upon appeals under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, two copies of the notes of proceedings in the court below ought to be provided for the use of this court by the appellant, and the costs will be allowed on taxation.

Appeal by the husband from an order made under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895.

Barnard, for the appellant.

JEUNE, J.—Only one copy of the notes taken by the clerk in the court below has been supplied for our use. I wish it to be known that in future two copies will be required, and should be furnished in every case by the appellant. The costs thereof will be allowed on taxation.

BARNES, J.—I quite agree two copies should be supplied.

(a.) Reported by J. GERARD LAING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The case was ultimately adjourned on other grounds not necessary to report.

Solicitors, Pitman & Sons.

---

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Admiralty. } May 21.

"THE CRIMDON." (a.)

Practice — Caveat warrant — Arrest — Personal undertaking to put in bail — Release — Condemnation in damages and costs occasioned by arrest — Rules of the Supreme Court, ord. 29, r. 18.

The plaintiffs in an action in rem against a foreign vessel caused the vessel to be arrested by the marshal, notwithstanding that a caveat warrant had been taken out and an undertaking given by the defendants' solicitors to put in bail in the suit or pay money into court within three days of its institution. At the time of the arrest the vessel was not under the arrest of the court in any other action, and was about to leave the port where she was then lying.

The defendants, on the day after the arrest, applied to the court for the vessel to be released and that the plaintiffs should be condemned in damages and costs. At the hearing of the application the plaintiffs never objected in any way that the personal security of the defendants' solicitors was inadequate.

Held, that the vessel must be released and the plaintiffs condemned in the damages and costs occasioned by the arrest.

This was an action of salvage instituted on behalf of the owners, master, and crew of The Helene Woermann in rem against the foreign steamship Crimdon, her cargo and freight.

Previously to the institution of the action a caveat warrant had been entered by Messrs. Downing, Bolam, & Co., solicitors for the owners of The Crimdon, but notwithstanding this caveat the plaintiffs on the 26th of March last took out a warrant of arrest under which The Crimdon, her cargo and freight, were arrested on the 27th of March at Plymouth, where she had been brought in after the salvage services proceeded on in the action, and from which, but for the arrest, she would have been removed.

On the 28th of March last the solicitors for the defendants applied to the judge in chambers to order the release of The Crimdon and to condemn the plaintiffs in damages and in the costs of and incidental to the arrest, release, and detention of the said vessel, her cargo and freight, and the judge, no objection having been raised by the plaintiffs to the personal security of the defendants' solicitors, who had in due course undertaken, in pursuance of ord. 9, r. 12, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, to enter an appearance in the action and give bail therein in three days after notice in a sum not to exceed the value of The Crimdon, her cargo and freight, or to pay such sum into the Admiralty Registry—(see Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, Appendix A, Part II., Form No. 18)—the judge ordered The Crimdon, her cargo and freight, to be released, and directed the rest of the application to stand over until the trial of the action.

Bail having been perfected in accordance with the above undertaking of the defendants' solicitors, the action came on on the 17th of May to be heard before the judge in court (Mr. Justice Barnes), when the court awarded salvage remuneration to the plaintiffs and further adjourned the plaintiffs' application for the condemnation of the defendants in the costs and damages occasioned by the arrest.

May 21.—On this day the adjourned application came on to be heard before the judge in court.

Aspinall, Q.C., and Noad, for the defendants, in support of the application.—There was no reason alleged by the plaintiffs for even supposing that the defendants' solicitors would not perform their undertaking or that if they failed in so doing they were not sufficiently solvent to meet any liability they might become subject to by reason of such failure. The defendants cannot therefore show any "good and sufficient reason" within the meaning of the Rules of the Supreme Court, ord. 29, r. 18, for having arrested The Crimdon. The wording of the rule is quite wide enough to include cases like the present, where the vessel arrested was not arrested in any other action, and was at the time of the arrest not in a dock or dismantled but ready to proceed on her voyage. The court has a discretion where there has, as in this case, been a disregard of a rule of practice to condemn, not only in costs, but also in damages. In some cases a condemnation in costs would be sufficient (The Johann Benjamin, Pritchard's Admiralty Digest, vol. 1, p. 370), here it is submitted there should also be a condemnation in damages.

Scrutton and Chaytor, for the plaintiffs, contra.—Ord. 29, r. 18, cannot extend the jurisdiction of the court to condemn in damages, which jurisdiction is confined to cases where there has been, as has not been the case here, crassa negligentia—[They referred to The Don Ricardo, 28 W. R. 431, 5 P. D. 121; The Evangelismos, Swa. 378; The Kate, Br. & Lush. 218, 12 W. R. Adm. Dig. 32; The Volant, Br. & Lush. 321; The Strathnaver, 1 App. Cas. 58, 24 W. R Dig. 281; The British South Africa Co. v. Campanhia Moçambigue, [1893] A. C. 628.] A plaintiff who has a claim in rem has a right to have the res detained under the hand of the law (see The Corner, Br. & Lub. 161, 12 W. R. Adm. Dig. 27) until money sufficient to answer the claim has been paid into court or adequate bail by two sureties has been put in. Moreover, in a salvage suit the plaintiff is entitled to have the vessel proceeded against kept under arrest until the nature of the res has been ascertained. Ord. 29, r. 5, and the rule as to damages on which the defendants rely ought not to be strained to take away that right. A failure by a solicitor to perform his undertaking may indeed subject him to be attached, but the rules will be construed most strongly in favour of the liberty of the subject, and in all probability a plaintiff who has been compelled to part with the security of the res before bail has been perfected may in the result find himself without any security for his claim at all: The Anna and Bertha, 7 Asp. Mar. Law Cases, N. S. 31, 39 W. R. Dig. 8; Williams and Bruce's Admiralty Practice (2nd ed.), pp. 281-282.*

---

(a.) Reported by C. F. JEMMETT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

* Ord. 29, r. 18, is a reproduction of one of the Admiralty Court Rules of 1859 to the same effect, and, although general in terms, and capable (as the case of The Crimdon shows) of being applied where there has only been the issue of one warrant of arrest, was, it would seem, probably framed merely for the purpose of altering the practice which, up to its introduction, prevailed of a claimant in rem being able to insist on his right of arresting the property he proceeded against, notwithstanding that at the time the same property was already under the arrest of the court in other actions: see The Europa, 13 Jur. 856.

BARNES, J.—The question is whether the plaintiffs are liable, in the circumstances, to be condemned in costs and damages, under the Rules of the Supreme Court, ord. 29, r. 18, for proceeding to arrest The Crimdon after a caveat warrant had been filed by the solicitors for the defendants.

The writ in the action was issued against the vessel on the 26th of March in the district registry of Plymouth. On the same day the warrant of arrest was extracted out of the same registry. Before the warrant was issued, the agents of the plaintiffs and the district registrar inquired, in accordance with the practice, whether a caveat had been filed against the arrest of The Crimdon; and the principal registry communicated by telegram the fact that there had been a caveat against the arrest already entered. It appears that on the same day, the 26th of March, Messrs. Downing, Bolam, & Co. filed the usual undertaking, which is termed the præcipe for caveat warrant. It was signed by Messrs. Downing, Bolam, & Co. without any qualification. The plaintiffs, however, according to the correspondence, were not satisfied with the undertaking of the solicitors—although their own solicitors appear to have been satisfied with it—and decided that the ship should be arrested. The ship was arrested on the following day, the 27th, and she remained under arrest until the evening of the 28th of March. In the meantime, on the 28th of March, on an application made to me to direct the ship to be released from arrest, I ordered that the warrant should be discharged, and The Crimdon was accordingly released. At the time, according to my recollection, no objection was made to the solicitors who had signed the undertaking. Then the question comes to this, whether for the day's detention, from the 27th to the 28th of March, which has been proved to have involved the defendants in expenses amounting to about £18 and costs, the plaintiffs ought to be held responsible.

Counsel for the plaintiffs raised an objection to the form of the undertaking, and argued that the solicitor does not render himself personally liable by signing such a document; but there is no substance in the objection to the form of the undertaking, which is in accordance with the rules, and my opinion is that if a solicitor himself signs an undertaking of this kind, without any qualification, he is personally responsible to see that it is carried out.

The next point taken on behalf of the plaintiffs is that it is not unreasonable to object to the substitution of a personal undertaking for the security of the ship, and that the plaintiffs were, therefore, entitled to insist upon the arrest. On this point rule 18 of order 29 of the Rules of the Supreme Court is material. It provides as follows:

"Nothing in this order shall prevent a solicitor taking out a warrant for the arrest of any property notwithstanding the entry of a caveat in the 'Caveat Warrant Book,' but the party at whose instance any property in respect of which a caveat is entered shall be arrested shall be liable to have the warrant discharged and to be condemned in costs and damages unless he shall show to the satisfaction of the judge good and sufficient reason for having so done."

Now, "the good and sufficient reason" referred to in that rule, which the plaintiffs have to show to my satisfaction, is stated by them to be that they were not bound to accept a solicitor's undertaking, and were entitled to arrest the ship. I think that that is an erroneous position to take up, having regard to the rules and practice of this court. It seems to me that the position arrived at by these rules is analogous to that of bail being tendered. In the case of bail tendered names have to be given, and the other party has twenty-four hours to consider whether he will object to the bail or not, and if he objects to the bail he can do so; but I think he objects more or less at his peril, for in the case of The Corner, after objection had been taken and found to be unfounded, the party objecting was held liable in damages. It seems to me that a similar class of considerations comes in in this case. There is an undertaking and the object of it is to prevent a ship being arrested by providing other adequate security.

If the undertaking is given it appears to me that the opposite party is to have a reasonable opportunity of seeing whether he ought to accept or not; and if he does not accept and shows to the satisfaction of the court good and sufficient reason for objecting, then he will not be condemned in the costs and damages.

I think in this case if the plaintiffs had said, "We have not time to act," or "We are not satisfied on some grounds that there is adequate security," the point would have been a perfectly good one to take; but neither of those points were raised. The plaintiffs themselves—not their solicitors—said, "No; we will not have this undertaking at all, we will have the security of the ship," and they never raised any question as to requiring time to investigate. The only ground really taken now is that the plaintiffs are entitled to have the security of the ship; but the rules say, "No; if you have adequate security otherwise." That is the real principle, and I think it is right from a business point of view. The whole object of the rules and of the practice in this court is to facilitate business, and if a solicitor can give an undertaking which is satisfactory, then business will proceed easily and satisfactorily. On the other hand, if no facilities of this kind are to be allowed, the rules are rendered practically nugatory, and the argument put forward on behalf of the plaintiffs is that the rules are practically useless. To my mind, however, there was reasonable time—because there was practically a day—and if the point had been taken and inquiry made into the standing of the parties it would have been found that there was no reason for arresting the vessel.

It seems to me that no ground has been shown for objecting to this undertaking, and, therefore, that the plaintiffs are liable for the costs and damages occasioned by the arrest. So far as the damages are concerned, I think that they ought to be fixed at £18, and the costs must be a matter for taxation.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Botterell & Roche.

Solicitors for the defendants, Downing, Bolam, & Co.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Lord Alverstone, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) — July 2, 3.

LADY BATEMAN v. FABER AND OTHERS. (a.)

Settlement — Construction — Meaning of "income"— Tithes—Rent-charges under the Improvement of Land Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 114)—Voluntary abatements to tenants—Unlet property—Personal occupation of unlet property.

In calculating the amount of "income"—as the word is used in a popular sense—actually derived from landed estates for any particular year, it is right to deduct from the gross receipts sums payable by way of tithe and of rent-charges under the Improvement of Land Act, 1864, created by the predecessor in title of the person whose "income" is being calculated; and also such voluntary abatements of rent to tenants as are fairly necessitated by the circumstances of the case. The owner of the "income" is not to be credited with rent for any part of the property which happens to be unlet during the particular year.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (ante, p. 165), affirmed.

Appeal from a decision of Kekewich, J., (ante, p. 165).

By an indenture dated the 26th of June, 1867, and made between Lord Bateman of the one part and Sir Edward C. Kerrison and R. Ellice of the other part, after certain recitals from which it appeared that Sir Edward C. Kerrison and R. Ellice had agreed to lend Lord Bateman the sum of £11,430 on the condition (inter alia) that the provision thereinafter appearing should be made for Lady Bateman, Lord Bateman, in consideration of the said loan, conveyed to Sir Edward C. Kerrison and R. Ellice his life interest in certain freehold estates upon trust as a security for the due performance by him of certain covenants relating to the loan, and subject thereto upon further trust to pay the rents and profits of the said estate to Lady Bateman for the term of her life. The deed, however, contained a proviso that if at any time Lady Bateman should "succeed to an income in her own right of £8,000 or more per annum for her separate use, then, and in such case, the trust" thereinbefore declared on her behalf should "absolutely cease and determine." After such determination of the said trust the property was to be held in trust for Lord Bateman. Lord Bateman subsequently mortgaged his interest in the estates to one Andrew Montagu, who died on the 8th of October, 1895, leaving the defendant, G. D. Faber, his sole executor and residuary legatee.

Sir Edward C. Kerrison died in 1886, and on his death Lady Bateman became entitled to a life estate in certain properties in Norfolk, Suffolk, and Middlesex. A question having arisen as to whether Lady Bateman, after her succession to these estates, had not become entitled to an income in her own right and for her separate use of £8,000 or more per annum, the present action was commenced by her against G. D. Faber and others, claiming (inter alia) a declaration that she had not at any time since the execution of the indenture of 1867 succeeded to an "income" of £8,000 or more per annum.

On the trial of the action before Kekewich, J., on the 24th of June, 1897, it was ordered that an inquiry should be held in chambers as to whether the plaintiff had at any time since the 31st of December, 1885, succeeded to an income of £8,000 or more a year, and the further consideration of the action was reserved. An inquiry having been held in chambers, the master found that in no year subsequent to the said 31st of December, 1885, had Lady Bateman's income from the Kerrison estates exceeded the sum of £8,000. He found, however, that her income for the single year from the 11th of October, 1886, to the 11th of October, 1887 (which had been agreed on by the parties for taking the account), had amounted to £7,750 12s. The defendants thereupon issued a summons to vary the master's certificate on the grounds that in calculating the lady's income for the year in question the master had wrongly deducted from the gross amount received by her—(1) certain payments for tithe; (2) certain rent-charges made by a predecessor in title under the Improvement of Land Act, 1864; and also (3) certain voluntary abatements of rent made by her to tenants. The master had also failed (4) with respect to certain property called Oakley Hall, which had been unlet during a portion of the year in question, to credit Lady Bateman with the estimated rental value during the unlet period; and had further neglected (5) to credit her with an adequate occupation rent for Broome Hall, which she had personally occupied during the whole year in question, though he had, in fact, credited her with an occupation rent calculated on the basis of six months' occupation only. He had also (6) taken account only of copyhold fines actually received by her during the particular year. It would have been fairer to have taken an average for the past eleven years.

Kekewich, J., on the 29th of November, refused, however, to vary the master's certificate, and from this decision the defendants now appealed.

Swinfen Eady, Q.C., Butcher, Q.C., and Brabant, for the appellants, used arguments generally similar to those employed in the court below.

The only authority cited by them was Reg. v. Commissioners of Southampton, 18 W. R. 1171, L. R. 4 H. L. 449.

Warrington, Q.C., and Beaumont, for the respondents, were not called upon.

Lord ALVERSTONE, M.R.—First of all with regard to tithe, the deduction of which is objected to. I cannot see that there is any reasonable doubt about it. Whether you regard the tithe as payable by the landlord instead of by the tenant under the Act of 1890, or whether you regard it as a right against the land which the clergy have, I think it is impossible, in the construction which we must put upon this covenant, to assume that Lady Bateman succeeded to an "income" in respect of the £1,000 that she has had to hand over for tithe during the year in question. In the same way with regard to the charges under the Improvement of Land Act, 1864. They were not created by Lady Bateman herself, or else very different considerations might possibly arise. They were created by her predecessor, and lasted for a number of years, and when she came into the enjoyment of these estates the income was already charged by statute with these annual payments. It is said that we ought to dissect these payments, and see how much was principal and how much interest; and it is said that to the extent that they were principal the property was gradually getting richer. That may be perfectly true; and it may very possibly anticipate or accelerate the time when Lady Bateman will succeed to an income of £8,000 a year; but I cannot consider that we are entitled in the year when these particular charges were paid to assume that she was in receipt of them as income, because part of the charges would improve and benefit the estate.

(a.) Reported by J. E. MORRIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

I now come to Oakley Hall; and I confess that, if we were dealing with Oakley Hall upon an average of years, I should have felt a very great difficulty in the matter, because it does seem to me there is very substantial evidence that Oakley Hall, with the shooting, is worth a considerable sum of money—£900 or £1,000 a year—and in this particular year £250 only is credited for it. But that really depends upon the basis upon which this year has been selected, and in the year which was taken it is not really disputed that all that Lady Bateman received was this proportionate amount of rent, £250. Therefore, adopting the principle of treating this year as being the best year for the defendants' purpose, I do not think we shall be justified in setting aside the master's finding that £250 was the amount of income that year, because she was possessed of a house and shooting which could be let in other years for a larger sum.

I have had some difficulty, speaking for myself, about Broome Hall; and if I could see any substantial evidence that the correction with respect to Broome Hall alone would turn the scale, I should desire to hear what counsel for the respondent had to say on the subject, but I think, for reasons which I will shortly explain, that it will not really avail the defendants. It appears that the master has only allowed £125 as representing six months' occupation rent, whereas there is no doubt that Lady Bateman was in occupation for the whole twelve months; and I am not prepared to say that, if the account even for that year were taken in the strictest way, you ought not to charge another £125. But that, of course, will not be enough for the defendants. They would still require £225 to make up the required total. Can we increase—have we materials on which we should be justified in increasing—the annual amount which has been allowed for Broome Hall? I think we have not. There was evidence, upon which the master may have acted, that the cheapest thing for Lady Bateman to do was to go into that house herself. It is said we ought to act upon an advertisement in which they had asked £500 a year for the house and shooting. I think we ought not to act upon a mere expectation, when the question is upon this basis, what was the income to which Lady Bateman actually succeeded? I really think we have not the materials before us, and I do not think we ought to disturb such a finding as that of the master. With regard to the allowances, it would be idle to suggest that allowances made in this class of tenancy are really charitable or gifts of bounty. If there had been an occasion of a son coming of age, and every tenant had been allowed a quarter of a year's rent; or if there had been a deduction of 10 per cent. in consequence of some great victory; or if a beneficent landlord had returned to his tenants a certain sum of money; nobody would contend, I suppose, that payments such as these would not have been a part of the income that the landlord enjoyed. But in the present case it is clearly established that, in the case of a large estate which it is not suggested has been improperly managed, these payments were simply ordinary allowances made off rents fixed some time beforehand in order to maintain good relations between landlord and tenant; and I think it would be extremely wrong to take the view that Lady Bateman, because she might have distrained in law, or because she might have brought an action for recovery of arrears of rent, must therefore be assumed to have made a voluntary gift out of her own income in respect of money which never came into her pocket at all.

With regard to the copyhold fines, the question stands or falls upon the basis of taking the average of years or the single year.

For these reasons I have come to the conclusion that we cannot overrule the judgment of Kekewich, J., or vary the master's certificate.

RIGBY, L.J.—I cannot think that this is a question of gross income. Lady Bateman is to receive the income in her own right and for her separate use. Take the case of tithes. Did she receive that part of the income which was necessarily paid away for the tithe rent-charge due to the parson for her separate use? I do not think she received it in that sense at all; and I think we must take a reasonable view and satisfy ourselves as to whether the lady ever had a spending income of £8,000. If we do this the items of tithe rent-charge must, of course, be deducted, as also the items of the other charges upon the property which were created, not by her, but by her predecessor, and were at the time payable.

But there is a more formidable question, What is meant by an income of £8,000 a year? That does not primâ facie mean an income of £8,000 for one year; it is "per annum," and there might very well be in the first year in which Lady Bateman came into the enjoyment of the property a smaller receipt for her separate use than in subsequent years; and if the defendants had claimed to have an average taken, I am not at all sure that they would not have done rightly. It would have been rather difficult to say over how many years such an average should go; but it would be very plausible and probably right to say that at any rate a fair average should be taken. But for reasons best known to themselves the defendants have chosen to go upon the first year; and I understood their counsel to explain that they thought that that was the best year for their purpose. That at once does away with all idea of charging Lady Bateman with any income that she did not actually receive, on the ground that in subsequent years she might have received something. Even if the Oakley Park property might have been let in subsequent years, yet non constat that all the farms which are now reckoned at the rate they were paying in that first year would have been let in other years for the same rents. In fact we know nothing about it. We have nothing to go upon except the items of the receipts and disbursements for that first year which the parties have treated as binding.

Now, with regard to Broome Hall we have not heard the argument on the other side. We do not know what might have been said. It appears primâ facie perfectly correct that Lady Bateman should be charged with an occupation rent of certain properties, but we do not know what might have been said to the contrary effect. I shall, however, assume, without deciding it, that an occupation rent of some kind was payable in cases where there was occupation. Now, Broome Hall is such a case; and, if it were made out that so much extra occupation rent ought to be charged against Lady Bateman in respect of that property as would bring her income over £8,000 a year, I should have considered that at any rate we should call upon counsel for the respondent, but I am also satisfied that that result cannot be reasonably expected. I will assume, although we have not heard the argument, that it would be reasonable to charge Lady Bateman for a whole year, she having practically been in actual occupation for the whole of that period. Sir Edward Kerrison died on the 12th of July. When precisely this lady went into occupation has not been called to our attention, but assuming she went into possession at once, and assuming further that, by virtue of that entry into possession and subsequent occupation during the whole time she was chargeable with the year's rent, yet even that fact would only make the charge, according to the master's view of the evidence, £250 instead of £125, and that would not alter the merits of the case between the parties. I do not see in any of the evidence a sufficient primâ facie reason for charging Lady Bateman with as much money as would bring the total amount of her income up to £8,000 a year. Therefore, I concur, and having read very carefully the judgment of Kekewich, J., I say that I concur generally with all that he says, and I have only been left in doubt upon this question of Broome Hall, which I do not think can be, upon the evidence the parties have given, the basis of a judgment making the charge by way of occupation rent so large as to bring Lady Bateman's income above the total of £8,000 a year.

COLLINS, L.J.—Concurring, as I do in all points, with the judgment of Kekewich, J., I have nothing to add to the judgments which have been already given.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Greenfield & Cracknall; Hudson, Matthews, & Co.

---

App. Bankruptcy.
(Lord Alverstone, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) June 29.

In re WENHAM.
Ex parte BATTAMS. (a.)

Bankruptcy — Practice — Partnership — Dissolution of partnership—Judgment against dissolved partnership —Bankruptcy notice addressed to dissolved partnership — Petition against late partners separately— Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 4 (1) (g), 115, 143—Bankruptcy Rules, rr. 136, 262— Bankruptcy Forms, Form 6—Rules of the Supreme Court, ord. 48a, rr. 1, 4.

A creditor issued a writ for the recovery of a sum of money against a recently-dissolved firm of partners. The writ was served personally on each of the late partners, and judgment was obtained against the late firm. The creditor subsequently served a bankruptcy notice addressed to the late firm on each of the two former partners, but neither of them complied with its terms, and he thereupon presented separate petitions against them, addressed to each in his individual name.

Held, that, even if the bankruptcy notice was technically incorrect and insufficient, yet that this was a case in which the court might overlook the defect under the terms of section 143 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883; but

Held (Collins, L.J., dissenting) that the bankruptcy notice was, as a matter of fact, technically correct and sufficient within the terms of section 115 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

Per Rigby, L.J.—The general rule of law or equity embodied in order 48a, though not the order itself, is applicable in bankruptcy.

Decision of the Divisional Court (Wright and Darling, JJ.) (44 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, 468) affirmed.

Appeal from the decision of a Divisional Court (Wright and Darling, JJ.), reported in 44 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, 468.

The debtor, John Wenham, and his brother, T. R. Wenham, formerly traded in partnership, under the style of "Wenham Brothers," as butchers, at Woking and elsewhere, down to the 18th of November, 1899, when the partnership was dissolved by an order of the Chancery Division.

On the 8th of December the petitioning creditors, Battams & Co., issued a writ against "Wenham Brothers" for goods supplied to the firm during the currency of the partnership. This writ was personally served on both John and T. R. Wenham, but they entered no appearance, and allowed judgment to be given against them by default on the 30th of December.

On the 8th of January Battams & Co. issued a bankruptcy notice founded on the judgment, and addressed to "Wenham Brothers." This notice was served personally on both the brothers on the 9th of January. Neither of them complied with its requirements; and on the 30th of January Battams & Co. presented separate petitions against the brothers Wenham addressed to each of them in his own name, alleging as the act of bankruptcy relied on their respective non-compliance with the requirements of the bankruptcy notice addressed to "Wenham Brothers."

The petitions came on for hearing on the 20th of March, when T. R. Wenham consented to a receiving order being made against him; but John Wenham took the technical objection that he had not committed any act of bankruptcy by non-compliance with a bankruptcy notice addressed to "Wenham Brothers."

The registrar of the county court of Guildford accordingly dismissed the petition; but his decision was reversed by the Divisional Court on the 14th of May.

From this decision of the Divisional Court John Wenham now appealed.

Cooper Willis and Tyndal Davies, for the appellant.—Even assuming that the judgment recovered against "Wenham Brothers" is good as against "John Wenham" under ord. 48, rr. 1 and 3, and that he is consequently liable to execution under ord. 48, r. 8, yet bankruptcy is governed by a code of its own (In re Gyll, Ex parte The Board of Trade, 37 W. R. 164, 5 Morr. 272), and the Rules of the Supreme Court do not apply. This petition could only be presented against John Wenham under the terms of section 115 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and those terms have not been complied with, having regard to the terms of rule 262 of the Bankruptcy Rules, which must be read in close connection with the section: Ex parte Young, In re Young, 30 W. R. 330, 19 Ch. D. 124; In re Howes, Ex parte Hughes, 40 W. R. 647, [1892] 2 Q. B. 628; In re Collier, Ex parte Dan Rylands (Limited), 8 Morr. 80. Technical defects such as this are insuperable in bankruptcy, especially in the initiation of the proceedings. The only course now open to the respondent is to commence proceedings over again and to recover judgment against John Wenham under his own name. Jackson v. Litchfield, 30 W. R. 531, 8 Q. B. D. 474, and Ex parte Ide, In re Ide, 35 W. R. 20, 17 Q. B. D. 755, are distinguishable cases.

George Wallace and H. C. Davenport, for the respondent.—These proceedings are valid within the conditions laid down by section 4 (1) (g) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. A number of cases collected in Lindley's Partnership in a note on p. 217 (5th ed., 1888)—e.g., Ex parte Williams, 11 Ves. 3; Crawshay v. Collins, 15 Ves. 218; and Butchart v. Dresser, 4 De G. M. & G. 542, show that the dissolution of a partnership cannot get rid of obligations incurred during its continuance. This principle was codified by section 38 of the Partnership Act, 1890. Anyhow, any formal defect is covered by section 143 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

(a.) Reported by J. E. MORRIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Cooper Willis, in reply.—Section 143 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, was never meant to cure a defect so radical as this.

Lord ALVERSTONE, M.R.—Upon the first point in this case—namely, as to whether or not there was a good judgment against John Wenham, there really is no doubt. Ord. 48*a*, rr. 1 and 4, establish to my mind perfectly clearly that where you have served a partner and obtained judgment after proper service, or where he has appeared in person, then judgment against the firm is a judgment which can be enforced against the partner. Then there remains the perhaps more important point, whether or not there was a defect in the bankruptcy notice, founded on the judgment, which prevents the bankruptcy proceedings from being good. Speaking for myself, I have no doubt that these proceedings are strictly in order, in accordance with the true and real meaning of section 115. I think that the words of that section, "being partners," are intended to mean "those who have carried on business in partnership for the purpose of the liability which is sought to be enforced." I do not think that any dissolution would enable partners to get rid of the liability to have proceedings taken against them under that section when such proceedings are intended to enforce against them, and against the members of the firm, a partnership debt. For this purpose, I think the true meaning of section 115 is this—that if persons are partners in a business, then bankruptcy proceedings can be taken against them in the partnership name. It is said that that is not the meaning of the section because of rule 262, which provides that a receiving order made against a firm shall operate as though it were made against each of the partners who at the date of the order was a partner in that firm. I think that is not the effect of the rule, and that it does not lead to the conclusion which is now contended for. Rule 262 is an enabling rule, enabling you to get a separate receiving order against individual partners. I think it cannot be held to cut down the rights and liabilities which arise from the language of section 115. Therefore, so far as these proceedings are concerned, I think that there is no objection to their having been headed, or directed, to "Wenham Brothers," although as a matter of fact at the time when the notice was issued "Wenham Brothers" no longer existed. It does not matter for this purpose whether the creditors were aware of that fact or not; though it would be a strange thing if any private dissolution could put an end to their rights. The claim was against the debtors while they were partners, "being partners" meaning "being in partnership for the purpose of their liability to have bankruptcy proceedings taken against them." Then we come for one moment to the preceding section (section 4, subsection 1 (g), of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883), under which the bankruptcy notice was issued. It is true that there has been a practice that the notice should follow the judgment, but it has not been sufficiently borne in mind that under the terms of rule 136 a bankruptcy notice ought to be in accordance with Form 6 in the Appendix, with such variations as circumstances may require. If we turn to Form 6 we find that it may be addressed to "A. B. or A. B. & Co.," and that it then provides that it shall be stated that judgment has been obtained. I can see no reason why it should not be indicated, if necessary, on the face of the bankruptcy notice, that it is directed to the members of the firm by name, although the body of it must, of course, follow the judgment. I should have thought that that was possibly the variation contemplated by the rules. It is quite clear, however, that, so far as the following out of this form is concerned, there is no substance in the objection now taken, because the judgment in the bankruptcy notice was in this case a judgment which had been actually obtained, and because it was a judgment which, as I have already pointed out, could be enforced against John Wenham. The only point about the notice which, it is suggested, might possibly be misleading is a point in connection with its heading, where it is addressed to "Wenham Brothers." It was served personally, and, if the view I take of section 115 is incorrect, counsel for the appellant is driven to contend there ought to have been separate proceedings on a separate notice, possibly involving a separate action and judgment, and that no person having properly obtained the judgment against "Wenham Brothers," although it was binding against individual partners, could lodge a bankruptcy notice addressed to the individual. In one breath he says, "You must follow the judgment; yet you must not make it clear that the judgment is going to be enforced against the individual." I also think that, under the circumstances of the case, this was a defect, if defect indeed it be, which could have been cured under section 143. There was a liability by John Wenham to satisfy this judgment. He was personally served. He was told it was in respect of a debt incurred whilst he was a partner of "Wenham Brothers." In the language of section 143 no "substantial injustice has been caused by the defect or irregularity complained of." Under all these circumstances I see no reason why the heading (if that is the proper designation to be given to the words) should not be amended. I think, however, that there is no substance in the technical objection raised; and I think that the Divisional Court was right in the decision to which they came.

RIGBY, L.J.—From the first I have been unable to see what ground of complaint John Wenham could possibly have under the circumstances of this case, meaning by "ground of complaint" any difficulty or perplexity or trouble in which he might possibly be involved. There have, of course, been general suggestions, but I have not heard a particular difficulty explained in a manner that I can understand. It is easy, it is true, to imagine cases in which, though there might be no solid ground of complaint, yet it would be quite enough under certain circumstances if you could show that the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, and the rules made under it, had not been complied with. But that is not the case here. Technically, no doubt, an objection of a sort is open to John Wenham here. But what does it amount to when we look at its substance? Persons who carry on business under the name of a firm hold out in effect to those with whom they deal, "You can have your rights against us enforced on the basis of the firm." It has under many circumstances been held that they are not at liberty by a dissolution effectually to alter that state of things. I need only refer here to that particular rule 48*a*, which does not appear to lay down anything new, but to recognize effectually what was well known law before—i.e., that people cannot alter in substance their relations to their creditors on the ground that they have dissolved partnership. That is a general principle of law as I understand it. Rule 48*a* is, no doubt, a particular application of it for the purposes of the High Court, and I quite agree with counsel for the appellant that, qua rule, it cannot be introduced into bankruptcy. It was not intended for that purpose. Bankruptcy has its own rules of procedure; but the rule which is the foundation, and I may say, in a sense, the justification, of order 48*a*, is a rule of equity—at any rate, a rule of general law—and general rules of law and of equity are perpetually dealt with in bankruptcy though not repeated in the Bankruptcy Acts or in any of the bankruptcy rules. Now, we are justified in saying that the judgment against "Wenham Brothers" operated under the circumstances to charge John Wenham separately. Why, then, there should not be a bankruptcy notice founded on that judgment I am unable to see. For my part I think that counsel for the appellant is right in saying that we must follow the judgment. It would not be wise, or perhaps even permissible, to vary so much from the judgment as to include in the notice the individual names of the partners, but I think it must be right to issue a notice to "Wenham Brothers" and to call upon "Wenham Brothers" to defend that notice in such a way as is pointed out by the notice itself and by the decisions upon it. I am unable myself to see that there is any technical difficulty when the matter is thoroughly considered, and, therefore, I am constrained to say that in my opinion the judgment of the court below is quite right, and that this appeal fails.

COLLINS, L.J.—I cannot say that I feel so clear upon the question of the technical difficulty as do my learned brothers It seems to me there is a primâ facie technical difficulty; but I think it is one which comes within the amending section, and I think that obviously no sort of injustice will be done by using that section against John Wenham. But, apart from that, I have not altogether got over my misgivings as to the technical difficulty itself. In my opinion there was a perfectly good judgment obtained under the rules against John Wenham and his brother, they having been members of a firm which was subsequently dissolved. But then, when we come to the bankruptcy proceedings, we get into a new code. We leave the old rules of procedure behind us, and we are governed thenceforth by whatever principle the statute has thought proper to prescribe. We find the bankruptcy statute dealing with the case of a desire on the part of partners to make another person bankrupt; or on the part of somebody else to make partners bankrupt. The statute provides certain machinery for effecting this purpose; and without that machinery you cannot accomplish that end. It must be done under the machinery of the Bankruptcy Act, or it cannot be done at all. It seems to me that the machinery of section 115, whether by oversight or not, only contemplates proceedings by or against those who are partners at the time of the proceedings. Rule 262, again, contemplates proceedings only against persons who are partners at the time. It is only by putting some slight strain on the words of section 115 that you can get it to mean "persons who are partners at one time, but who are not at the time the proceedings were taken." But whether this is so or not, I think that this is obviously a case in which the court should exercise the power of amendment, if it has that power. It seems to me that section 143 amply covers this particular case. Therefore, for these reasons, I agree with my learned brothers that this decision must be affirmed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Mann & Crimp; H. J. V. Philpott.

---

From Chan. Div. (Lord Alverstone, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) — June 26, 27.

RICE v. NOAKES & CO. (a.)

Mortgage—Public-house—Leasehold—"Tied house"—Clogging redemption—Once a mortgage always a mortgage.

The principle of equity that nothing in a mortgage transaction will be permitted to clog, fetter, or impede the borrower's right to redeem is still valid and unimpaired.

A covenant in a mortgage of a leasehold public-house that the mortgagor shall, during the continuance of the lease, buy his beer only from the mortgagees, is a clog on the equity of redemption, inasmuch as it prevents the mortgagor from getting back the property unimpaired. The mortgagor is therefore entitled on redemption to an assignment of the premises free from the covenant.

Santley v. Wilde, ante, p. 90, [1899] 2 Ch. 474, distinguished.

This was an appeal from a decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. (reported ante, p. 110).

In 1897 the plaintiff, a licensed victualler, purchased the lease of a public-house, known as the King's Arms, Camberwell, from the second mortgagees for £6,800. The term created by the lease would expire Christmas 1923.

The defendants, who were brewers, were first mortgagees under a mortgage which contained provisions almost identical with those of the mortgage next mentioned.

The defendants released their security to enable the sale to the purchaser to be made.

On the sale the plaintiff borrowed £4,850 of the purchase-money from the defendants upon the security of a first mortgage of the premises, dated the 7th of October, 1897.

By the mortgage deed the plaintiff demised the leasehold premises and fixtures and the goodwill of the business and benefit of the licences to the defendants, subject to the proviso for redemption.

The proviso for redemption declared that if the plaintiff should, either on demand by the defendants left at the demised messuage, or without such demand, pay to them the principal and interest to be then due on the security, then the defendants would at the request of the plaintiff surrender or reconvey the premises to the plaintiff or as he should direct; and the plaintiff covenanted to pay the principal sum and interest, and all further sums due for money advanced, and for goods sold and delivered by the defendants to the plaintiff. And the deed also contained the following provision: "And for the considerations aforesaid the mortgagor, so as to charge the premises hereby demised, into whosesoever possession the same may come, whether by act of the party or by operation of law or by any other ways or means however, and to the further intent that the obligation of this covenant may run with the land, doth hereby covenant with the company that the mortgagor shall not, nor will at any time during the continuance of the term aforesaid, and whether any principal moneys or interest shall or shall not be owing upon the security of these presents, use or sell, or permit to be used or sold, in, upon, or about the said demised premises any malt liquors except such as shall be bonâ fide purchased by the mortgagor of the company. And, further, that if and whenever there shall be a breach of the said covenant, he, the mortgagor, shall and will pay to the said company the sum of £1,000 as and for ascertained liquidated damages for each such breach, and will sell all such malt liquors pure, unadulterated, and unmixed, and of the like strength, character, and quality in all respects as the same shall be supplied to him." It was also declared that the words "the mortgagor" and "the company," except when otherwise controlled by the context, should, throughout the deed, include all persons deriving title under them respectively.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The plaintiff was willing to pay off all moneys due to the defendants under the mortgage, and required them, on payment being made, to reconvey the leasehold property to him, and to release him from the covenant by which the house purported to be "tied" to the defendants during the whole currency of the lease, or to transfer the mortgage to him and the benefit of the covenant to his nominee. The defendants were willing to reconvey or transfer the property but not to release or assign the covenant. The present action was brought that the plaintiff might obtain a declaration that he was entitled, not only to a reconveyance or transfer of the property, but also to a release or re-assignment of the covenant.

Cozens-Hardy, J., held that the "tie," though valid during the continuance of the security, could not be maintained after payment of all moneys due on the security, and granted the declaration asked for.

The defendants appealed.

Haldane, Q.C., Eve, Q.C., and Stanley Fisher, for the appeal.—The two early rules of equity are—(1) There must be no clog on equity of redemption; (2) a mortgagee must not stipulate for collateral advantage to himself. Our contention is that we have here two quite separate transactions, though both are put on a single piece of paper. Hence not within the mischief of above two rules. Point still open, though some recent cases come near it: Biggs v. Hoddinott, 47 W. R. 84, [1898] 2 Ch. 307. [Lord ALVERSTONE, M.R.—Since Mainland v. Upjohn, 37 W. R. 411, 41 Ch. D. 126, it is no longer possible to say you may not stipulate for a bonus.] Yes, that case shows that collateral stipulation is now bad only if unconscionable. [Lord ALVERSTONE, M.R.—But how if collateral advantage continue after mortgage is paid off?] That is immaterial if the bargain not unconscionable. Here the "clog" is not on the equity of redemption, but on the property itself. This case is exactly covered by Santley v. Wilde, ante, p. 90, [1899] 2 Ch. 474, but is more in the favour of the mortgagor. The old doctrine of clogging has been cut down. The thin edge of the wedge was inserted in Mainland v. Upjohn. Since that case it has been open to the parties to make any bargain they like, provided it is not unconscionable. Prior to that, I admit, it was not open to a mortgagee to get more than his principal, interest, and costs.

They also referred to Teevan v. Smith, 30 W. R. 716, 20 Ch. D. 724.

Astbury, Q.C., and Beaumont, contra. — Salt v. Marquis of Northampton, 40 W. R. 529, [1892] A. C. 1, shows that it is wrong to say that interest could be raised now, though it could not have been before Mainland v. Upjohn. In Santley v. Wilde two of the judges were under the impression that they were following Biggs v. Hoddinott, but Santley v. Wilde is distinguishable. In Jennings v. Ward, 2 Vern. 520, there was no very atrocious hardship, but the decision, it is submitted, was right. The rule as to clogging the equity of redemption has never been "blown upon" in Santley v. Wilde or any other case. There used to be three old rules: (1) There must be no clog on the equity; (2) there must be no collateral advantage; (3) no larger sum must be recoverable than principal and interest. Of these three rules 2 and 3 are undoubtedly gone. But there is no authority whatever for saying that 1 is gone.

Haldane, Q.C., replied.

Lord ALVERSTONE, M.R.—This case is one of very great importance, and I am glad to think that the parties have such an interest and are in such a position that in all probability we shall have the guidance of the House of Lords in future upon it.

Having regard to one argument addressed to us, it is, I think, desirable that I should very briefly state the facts. [His lordship stated the facts, and continued:] The question is whether or not the covenant not to use malt liquors except those purchased from the defendants in this mortgage deed can stand. I have endeavoured to make myself acquainted with what I may call the history of the matter, and, speaking for myself, it seems to me quite impossible to say that this doctrine, which has been spoken of as "clogging the equity," is one which can be disregarded by the courts in the present day, or which has disappeared in consequence of any decisions. It is fair to say that the defendants did not contend that. The main argument is that this covenant was not a clog on the equity, but for the purposes of my judgment I will read the way in which the rule as to clogging was expressed by a great common law judge (Bowen, L.J.), who was the dissentient judge in the case of Marquis of Northampton v. Pollock, 39 W. R. 66, 45 Ch. D. 190, but whose expression of the rule was approved of by the House of Lords when the same case was before them under the title of Salt v. Marquis of Northampton. He said: "Whenever a transaction is in reality one of mortgage equity regards the mortgaged property as security only for money and will permit of no attempt to clog, fetter, or impede the borrower's right to redeem and to rescue what was and still remains in equity his own." I could not, of course, hope to express the proposition more clearly. I understand it to mean that the mortgagor is entitled to have back what he mortgaged, and that anything which would prevent his getting back what he mortgaged when the obligation as mortgagor is fulfilled will not be allowed to be good upon the ground that it fetters or impedes his right to redeem. It has been pointed out in the course of the argument that that language of Bowen, L.J., is expressly approved by Lord Bramwell, who stated the same proposition in somewhat different language, and therefore I need not quote the expressions that he used, but it is most important to observe that in Salt v. Marquis of Northampton no doubt whatever is thrown upon the general principle, and so much is it taken for granted that Lord Selborne in his judgment practically does not discuss it at all, and the whole discussion seems to have proceeded upon the question whether or not under the very peculiar and special circumstances of that case the rule did apply. Therefore I approach the consideration of this case from the point of view that the rule as stated by Bowen, L.J., still applies.

Now, in this case is it true that this covenant does not impair the property which the mortgagor is entitled to have back? If I may venture to use the expression, Does it or does it not clog the equity? What is the position? I should think in all probability, upon the authorities, it was a stipulation or a covenant that would run with the land in ordinary circumstances; but, in any event, if it is held to be binding, it provides that up to 1923—and assuming the money to be now paid off, that is for a period of twenty-four years—the owner of the property is not to be able to use it as a public-house, obtaining beer in the best market, but he is to be bound to obtain beer from the mortgagees. However you regard it, it seems to me impossible to come to the conclusion that that is not a stipulation which diminishes the property which was originally mortgaged and which is intended to be reconveyed on repayment of the mortgage money. Whatever may be the proper mode of expressing it, in my opinion it is something which impairs or affects the property so that the mortgagor does not get it back. It is something which impedes the borrower's right to redeem and rescue that which was his own at the time that he mortgaged it. Now, that being so, apart from any alteration of the rule by any special case which has been decided by some authority binding upon us, I should have thought that the case was fairly clear. I will note in passing that as far as I can gather from the notes to Howard v. Harris, 2 Wh. & Tu. L. C. 11, there are a number of other cases in which this principle has been applied, so that I think it would be very difficult, even if there were not the judgment of the House of Lords as recently as the year 1892, to contend that that principle does not still apply.

Now, it is said that a course of decisions ending with Santley v. Wilde has laid down certain rules binding upon us which show that this particular contract is not one which affects the equity of redemption, but must be regarded as a collateral bargain, and therefore one which could be enforced. I think I may dismiss with a word the case of Mainland v. Upjohn, as to which I do not really know whether in early days such a stipulation would have been held to be legal. Probably before the usury laws were abolished it would not, and I am not sure that the courts of equity would many years ago have decided all these cases exactly as they have been decided. But I do not consider, taking these cases and seeing what they do decide, that I am in any way departing from those decisions. Mainland v. Upjohn was a case in which the mortgagee obtained further advantages in the shape of commissions and bonuses out of the property or out of the dealings with the property which was mortgaged to him, and is clearly distinguishable on the ground that it was a further money consideration in respect of the transactions of mortgage. Biggs v. Hoddinott, it has been suggested, carried the matter further. I doubt myself whether it did. There the stipulation was that the money should not be called in for four or five years. Again, whether or not that provision would have been considered in old days to be one which could be inserted, I do not think it is worth while stopping to consider. The Court of Appeal have decided that such a stipulation is good, and I should, speaking for myself, in that case see no reason at all to express the slightest dissent. It was a perfectly reasonable bargain that there should be a term fixed within which the money should not be called in, and during that time it was perfectly proper that the mortgagor should agree to purchase his beer from the mortgagee during the continuance of the mortgage, but if I have correctly stated the facts of the case, it is obvious that it was not a contract which affected the property when redeemed, or which could in any way be said to clog the equity of redemption or to interfere with the rights of the mortgagor.

Now, when we come to Santley v. Wilde, I admit it is very much more difficult, and if Santley v. Wilde had decided that such a contract as this did not clog the equity of redemption, of course we should be bound by it. Speaking for myself, I do not know that I should have come to the same decision as the Court of Appeal in Santley v. Wilde on the facts there without some difficulty. But for the purposes of to-day it is only important that we should see that we are not departing from any rule or material principle laid down in Santley v. Wilde, because it, of course, is binding upon us, and if we could have protected ourselves under that judgment it would have been a very easy way of disposing of this case. But when that judgment of the Court of Appeal is understood, certainly it did not purport to, and I do not think it did infringe in any way on the doctrine laid down by the House of Lords in Salt v. Marquis of Northampton. In that case Miss Santley, who was going to open a theatre, by the terms of her mortgage agreed that she would pay the principal amount back by instalments running over five years and would give a certain share of the profits for the remaining five years, the total term being ten years. There is no doubt that the profits would issue or might issue out of the property after the time when the mortgage money had been repaid, but it is clear that the Court of Appeal, as I read that judgment, considered that that was not in any way something which issued out of the equity of redemption, but they thought it was a term of the mortgage that the property should be mortgaged as security for the profits as well as for the £2,000. Lindley, M.R., says: "The principle is this: a mortgage is a conveyance of land or an assignment of chattels as a security for the payment of a debt or the discharge of some other obligation for which it is given. This is the idea of a mortgage and the security is redeemable on the payment or discharge of such debt or obligation, any provision to the contrary notwithstanding. That, in my opinion, is the law." After referring to the terms of the agreement in that case, he says: "That means that this lease is granted or assigned by the mortgagor to the mortgagee as security not only for the payment of the £2,000 and interest, but also for the payment of the one-third of the net profit rents to the end of the term. If I am right in the principles I have laid down, that does not clog the right of redemption upon the performance of the obligation for which the security was given." The declaration—which I confess at first, until I had studied the case, I did not immediately understand—was that the defendant was entitled to hold the mortgage during the residue of the term notwithstanding all the principal and interest had been paid, or, in other words, the court has construed that contract as a contract that the property should be charged for a period of ten years with an obligation to pay the profits as well as the security. Now, if that be so, one sees at once that there was no attempt there to infringe or to do away with the main principle, and that Lindley, M.R., came to the conclusion that on the face of that contract the lease was intended to be security for the profits, but he did not intend to say that, the mortgagor having discharged all her obligation, the property could still be held for the benefit of the mortgagee. That that is the correct view of the case is made clear, at any rate so far as the other two members of the court, Sir F. Jeune and Romer, L.J., are concerned, because they both decided that they were following Biggs v. Hoddinott, which, as I have already pointed out, was a case in which the collateral privilege given to the mortgagee was only to enure during the term of the mortgage. This distinction is a distinction which my brother Cozens-Hardy, J., has pointed out. He says at the end of his reference to Santley v. Wilde, "If I rightly understand the judgment of the Court of Appeal, it established that a mortgage of leasehold property expressed to be a security for the due discharge of future recurring obligations cannot be redeemed before those obligations have matured, even though the period covered by the obligations may or must exceed the duration of the lease. I do not think any other or larger principle can be extracted from that case." That is the learned judge's view of what the principle of the decision was in Santley v. Wilde, which I have endeavoured to express from my own point of view, of course somewhat differently in language though not in principle. In my judgment Santley v. Wilde, rightly understood, does not afford any authority to the appellants here, for the proposition that such a contract as this, which, as I have already said, in my opinion does affect the equity of redemption and prevent the mortgagor getting his property back, is one which can stand having regard to the principle which the House of Lords so emphatically recognized in Salt v. Marquis of Northampton.

It remains only to say one word upon the point which at one time seemed to me to create some difficulty. It was said that this was really a tied house all the time, and that the substance of the transaction is that Rice, having bought a tied house, only mortgaged a tied house, and, therefore, only got back, or was entitled to get back, a tied house. On the face of the deed it is treated as being a free property, but I do not think this contention would help the defendants in this case, because even assuming that there had been this original contract, and the defendants were entitled to refer to it, if I am right it was a stipulation which could have been got rid of by the original mortgagor. I do not think that, that being the nature of the stipulation, the defendants are entitled to say Rice is to be considered as having taken the property subject to a restriction that he could not get rid of, and, therefore, I do not think the defendants' position would be better even assuming that they are entitled to go to a certain extent behind the terms of the deed, and say it must be considered to be a tied house all the time, and to be mortgaged as a tied house.

I need scarcely say that, dealing with a subject with which I am not and do not pretend to be very familiar, and having to deal with principles which I have not often had to apply, and with authorities which I have not often had to consider, I express my judgment with some doubt—not doubt as to the decision but doubt as to whether I have properly appreciated all the arguments put forward before us, but I do come to a very clear opinion in the end that the doctrine as to clogging the equity still stands, and this clause would be an infringement of it, and that the judgment of Cozens-Hardy, J., was right, and that this appeal ought to be dismissed.

RIGBY, L.J.—I agree entirely with what the Master of the Rolls has said, which to me appears in substance to recognize and affirm what has been said by Cozens-Hardy, J. I will not go into detail at all. I will only say something to indicate the principles which I conceive to be underlying this and similar cases. I would say first that the maxim, Once a mortgage always a mortgage, has not been in any degree infringed upon. Of course a maxim of that sort is a convenient thing to refer to, but it must be applied very carefully to the facts in each case. That maxim no doubt came indirectly under review in Salt v. Marquis of Northampton, and I venture to say, after reading the report again to remind myself of what actually took place, that the only branch of that maxim which was under discussion really was whether the transaction in that case was once a mortgage, and the majority of the judges, Lord Hannen dissenting, came to the conclusion that it was ab initio a mortgage. The other maxim, that it was always a mortgage, was taken for granted by everybody, and therefore I consider Salt v. Marquis of Northampton is a clear recognition and an undoubted enforcement of that maxim. There is another way of expressing the same principle that you shall not clog the redemption. Again, the maxim requires expansion, and is not always easy of application, but when you say you shall not clog the redemption, I think that you must understand that there shall be a redemption of the property in substance which was mortgaged, and that the property that comes back to you shall not be worse than it was when it was mortgaged, and that the mortgagee shall not, either by express language or by implication, reserve to himself any hold upon that property after the time for redemption has arrived, and the redemption has been put in force.

Now, if—and I do not entertain a doubt about it—those maxims are still in force to their full extent, it would be idle, for instance, to talk about not clogging the redemption when the property is taken back as a tied house when it had been a free house. The redemption is clogged to an extent which it would be almost impossible to exaggerate in the case of a public-house in London. The difference of value approaches very nearly to the whole value of the property, because if a man cannot borrow money from a brewer upon it upon the terms that it shall be a tied house during the existence of the security there is very little he can do and the property is next door to valueless. I take it, therefore, that if we can treat the property as a free house before the mortgage it must come back as a free and not as a tied house. The argument, however, was raised—that it was a tied house ab initio. I do not think that that argument can be maintained upon the facts. No doubt there was a tie upon the whole term in the hands of the preceding tenant. If our judgment in this case is correct, though the tie existed it was illegal, and might have been satisfied. Supposing that Rice had gone to the former tenant and bargained with her, as he might have done, that she should transfer the mortgage and the property, I do not see how, consistently with the judgment that we are giving, there could be any doubt that he would have been able to get rid of the covenant tieing the property during the term exactly as he seeks now to do; and I do not think the fact that the transaction was carried out somewhat differently as a matter of conveyancing can possibly make any difference in favour of the brewers. I think, then, that the property is to be treated as having been free at the time of the mortgage, and has been, by means of terms introduced into the mortgage, rendered a tied house possibly for many years after the mortgage would come to an end, and that therefore we cannot support that tie for all that time without doing violence to the two maxims that I have referred to.

It was said, and I do not quarrel with the statement, that unless there is something unconscionable a collateral bargain is perfectly legal. I must say I was very much struck with the argument of Mr. Beaumont on that point. This is deliberately made a mortgage on demand. It was a mortgage on demand—not an unusual mortgage with brewers, I should think, but I do not know. At any rate, I am not going to suggest that the defendants would have done a shabby thing and that they would have turned the man out and used their money to get a similar tie upon another house. It would have been shabby, but I think it would have been quite within their power and quite within what they bargained for, and if we had had to decide whether or not this is an unconscionable collateral advantage, though I do not think it is necessary to decide that point, I do not know that we should have been in favour of the brewers.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I think the question is comparatively simple when the facts are understood. Nothing, so far as I see, has been said in any of the authorities which have dealt with collateral bargains as between mortgagor and mortgagee which has altered the rule compendiously stated by Cozens-Hardy, J., which is this: "'Once a mortgage always a mortgage' is still a sound maxim. Anything which is comprised in a mortgage security must, when the debt is paid or the obligation is discharged, be returned to the mortgagor. It must be returned in its entirety. No part of it can be retained by the mortgagee." Now, the principle is quite unaffected by those cases in which the point was what was secured by the mortgage; for instance, in the case—last and most important—of Santley v. Wilde the real decision was that the profits likely to accrue or capable of accruing during the whole term were secured by the mortgage quite as much as the lump sum advanced of £2,000. That was the ground upon which Lindley, M.R., distinctly rests his judgment. After reading the terms of the deed, he says: "That means this, that this lease is granted or assigned by the mortgagor to the mortgagee as security, not only for the payment of the £2,000 and interest, but also for the payment of the one-third of the net profit rents to the end of the term. If I am right in the principle which I have laid down that does not clog the right of redemption upon the performance of the obligation for which the security was given."

Now, that term in itself constituting these rents as part of the security certainly could not be a clog upon that which by its contemplation could not come into existence until those rents as well as the lump sum were paid. It is true that incidentally the effect was in the circumstances of that particular case that there could never be a right of redemption, but that only arose just as it might arise from a stipulation defining the time within which the redemption could not be asked for. It is not a clog on the equity of redemption, and that is made clear because the equity of redemption could only be exercised upon payment of the sum charged on the security. It was a mere collateral incident that the amount for which the property granted did stand as security could not be ascertained until an event which would be coterminous with the expiration of the interest of the mortgagor in the term. That is merely a collateral incident of the case, and it does not in the slightest degree affect the only matter we have to decide now—namely, whether or not there was anything between the parties which on payment of all that was secured would debar the mortgagors from getting back the whole subject-matter of the security. Those decisions as to collateral contracts which have been considered both in Santley v. Wilde and in Biggs v. Hoddinott appear to me not to be very relevant to the decision in this case, nor to impair in the slightest degree the principle stated by Cozens-Hardy, J. Therefore it seems to me that when you come to deal with this case the one and only question in it is, what was that which was secured by the mortgage, and what was granted as security? Now, what was granted? It seems to me when you look at the mortgage deed that which was granted was the unincumbered term—a term less one day, which the mortgagor was possessed of. That is what he grants. What he grants it as a security for is the advance of money. Therefore it follows when the money is repaid that which stood as security for it was to be handed over unimpaired. Now, in that deed there is a contract which imposes a tie upon the covenant—not a personal tie upon the mortgagor. The result is that if I am right in saying that what was the subject-matter of the security was the unincumbered term this covenant which is introduced puts it out of the power of the mortgagee to assign back to the mortgagor that which he was bound to assign to him—namely, the unincumbered term. The mortgagee can only assign back a term which in a sense is not an unincumbered term, but a term that would be bound in the hands of everyone to whom it comes during its existence by this equitable obligation imposed by the covenant. Therefore it comes back to this question: Aye or no, was the thing granted as a security a term with the tie, or a term without the tie? It is contended that the only thing granted was the term with the tie, but the defendants were obliged to say that because in one and the same deed by the terms of which without any qualifications the term unincumbered is made the mortgage security you find a covenant which is intended to be a clog on the term itself, you must assume that the contract of mortgage is one coming after and independently of and collateral to this covenant, so that the thing mortgaged is not the term without the covenant, but the term with the covenant. It seems to me impossible to isolate that transaction of the covenant from the transaction of the mortgage. It seems to me that it is one and the same transaction and that the mortgage is what the deed purports, a mortgage of the unincumbered term with the superadded provision which has the effect (whether it was contemplated or not) of making it impossible to comply with the rule laid down by Cozens-Hardy, J., that "no part of it"—that is, the mortgage security—"can be retained by the mortgagee. It must be returned in its entirety." I give this opinion treating the rule laid down by Cozens-Hardy, J., as being a rule by which I am bound. I do not think anything in any of the cases in the slightest degree, so far as I see, impairs it, and it is the basis of the decision in the case in the House of Lords which has been so much referred to. Whether or not it ought ever to have been brought into existence is a matter which I am not competent to pronounce an opinion upon. I take it as it is, and taking it as it is, I am bound to apply it to this case unless I could arrive at the conclusion that what was mortgaged was the term with the tie and not the term without the tie.

It was also suggested that we might look behind the deed itself, and might look at the whole transaction from its inception. The transaction at its inception found a publican holding a term which was mortgaged and tied. If the transaction of mortgage had purported to be one mortgaging the tenant's interest as it then stood, I do not feel quite clear whether as between the parties to such a mortgage, where both thought they were dealing with and intended to deal with the term as it stood, such a mortgage would be effectual to give to the mortgagee the tie he thought he had or not. If that was the subject-matter of the bargain and the subsequent transaction was between the parties to that bargain who intended to mortgage that and nothing else, I am not quite sure whether the argument might not have been sound that the mortgagee would not have been bound to return to the mortgagor more than as between him and the mortgagee it was intended he should return, but I do not think that that question arises here to-day because the transaction was such at the inception of the matter as between these two parties that the term was untied and free, and it is the free and untied term that was made subject to the tie.

Therefore for the reasons I have given I think this appeal must be dismissed.

Solicitors, Fishers; Sandilands & Co.

App. Bankruptcy.
(Lord Alverstone, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) June 15, 22.

In re PLUMMER.
Ex parte THE TRUSTEE. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Voluntary settlement—Fluctuating business—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 47.

A gift of money does not constitute a "settlement" within the meaning of section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, unless it is the intention of the giver that the money shall be invested in some form which will enable it subsequently to be traced.

The decision in In re Player, 15 Q. B. D. 682, 34 W. R. Dig. 170, discussed and approved.

Where a father released certain debts and securities due to him from a trading company as a part of the consideration received by the company for the sale of their business to his son, and it appeared that, at the time of the father's subsequent bankruptcy, the stock-in-trade of the business as it came to the son had been entirely altered, with a few trifling exceptions,

Held, that there was no gift to the son with the intention that what was given him should be invested in some form which would enable it subsequently to be traced.

Decision of Wright, J., affirmed.

Appeal from a decision of Wright, J., given on the 30th of April, 1900.

The bankrupt William Plummer formerly carried on business as a draper at Lewisham, in Kent; and on the 20th of May, 1896, he converted his business into a limited company under the style of Plummer's Stores (Limited).

The company issued a series of 160 debentures of the value of £50 each; and of these debentures, at the time of the transaction which it was now sought to set aside, 100 were registered in the company's books in the name of William Plummer, whilst 60 others had been deposited by him with Messrs. Barclay & Co., the bankers, as security for certain advances, amounting in all to the sum of £3,500, made by them to the company. In the event of the sum not being repaid to the bank, William Plummer would become a creditor of the company to that amount.

The company was unsuccessful in its trading, and on the 26th of May, 1898, a debenture-holder's action was commenced against it, and a receiver was appointed, at the suit of William Plummer.

On the 3rd of June the company passed a resolution for voluntary winding up.

On the 13th of July the company agreed to sell its undertaking to Frederick G. Plummer, the son of William Plummer, as from the 25th of June, 1898, for the consideration that the said Frederick G. Plummer should pay the company £13,000 in manner therein more particularly provided, and should pay the trade creditors of the company the further sum of £5,700; that William Plummer should surrender to the company 60 of the 100 debentures already mentioned as registered in his name, and should release the company from all claims against them in respect of the sum of £3,500 already referred to, and in respect of a further sum of £688 then actually owing to him by the company; and that William and Frederick G. Plummer should together undertake the the joint payment of any trade debts owing by the company, but unknown at the time to its receiver and liquidator. This arrangement was duly carried out by a deed of covenant and indemnity executed on the 15th of August, 1898.

(a.) Reported by J. E. MORRIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It was admitted that William Plummer, in making these releases and in undertaking this joint liability, was partly actuated, apart altogether from any desire to establish his son in business, by anxiety to save his own credit and reputation as an otherwise successful trader, and to escape from being involved in the downfall of a company which was unable to pay even its debts.

On the 25th of March, 1899, William Plummer filed his petition in bankruptcy; and on the 28th of February, 1900, his trustee moved before Wright, J., for (1) a declaration that the transfer of the business of the company to Frederick G. Plummer, and the payments made, and releases given, by the bankrupt for the purpose of effecting the same, constituted a voluntary "settlement" within the meaning of section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883; or (2) in the alternative, for a declaration that all gifts and payments made, and all claims released, by the bankrupt to or for the benefit of his son Frederick G. Plummer were void as against the trustee.

Section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, enacts that: "(1) Any settlement of property, not being a settlement made before or in consideration of marriage, or made in favour of a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith and for valuable consideration, or a settlement made on or for the wife or children of the settlor of property which has accrued to the settlor after marriage in right of his wife, shall, if the settlor becomes bankrupt within two years after the date of the settlement, be void against the trustee in bankruptcy, and shall, if the settlor becomes bankrupt at any subsequent time within ten years after the date of the settlement, be void against the trustee in the bankruptcy, unless the parties claiming under the settlement can prove that the settlor was at the time of making the settlement able to pay all his debts without the aid of the property comprised in the settlement, and that the interest of the settlor in such property had passed to the trustee of such settlement on the execution thereof."

"(3) 'Settlement' shall for the purposes of this section include any conveyance or transfer of property."

It was admitted that all the stock-in-trade of the business, as it came to Frederick G. Plummer on the 25th of June, 1898, had since been sold, with the exception of a few insignificant items; and that the existing stock had been subsequently purchased in the usual course of business.

On the 30th of April, 1900, Wright, J., came to the conclusion that the consideration received by William Plummer in respect of which he surrendered his debentures was not so fictitious or unreal as to make the transaction one that could be impeached under section 47.

From this decision the trustee now appealed.

Younger, Q.C., and A. H. Dennis, for the appellant.—The release of the debentures was made without consideration, and is accordingly a voluntary settlement on his son by the bankrupt under section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883: In re Vansittart, Ex parte Brown, 41 W. R. 32, [1893] 1 Q. B. 181. The only difficulty in the way of this contention is the decision in In re Player, Ex parte Harvey, 15 Q. B. D. 682, 34 W. R. Dig. 170, in which it was held that, in order to constitute a settlement under section 47, it is necessary that the retention of the property should be contemplated, and not its immediate alienation or consumption. The authority of that case, however, is much diminished by certain observations of Lindley, L.J., in In re Farnham, [1895] 2 Ch. 799, at the bottom of p. 807, 44 W. R. Dig. 98, as was pointed out by Wright, J., in In re Tankard, Ex parte Official Receiver, 47 W. R. 624, [1899] 2 Q. B. 57. Similarly, in In re Carter and Kenderdine's Contract, 45 W. R. 484, [1897] 1 Ch. 776, Lindley, L.J., again remarks on p. 485 (45 W. R.): "This section 47, according to its terms, limits a conveyance or transfer of property of any sort." The decision in In re Player ought now to be definitely overruled by the Court of Appeal.

Herbert Reed, Q.C., and Muir Mackenzie, for the respondents.—The settlement was made for valuable consideration: Hance v. Harding, 36 W. R. 629, 20 Q. B. D. 732. But even supposing this were not the case, the stock-in-trade has long since been sold, and the principle in In re Player is applicable. That case is good law. In Ex parte Bishop, In re Tönnies, 21 W. R. 716, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 718, it was held that a covenant for payment of a sum of money not specifically ear-marked was not a "settlement" within the meaning of section 91 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. Similarly it has been held that money, not being a subject of conveyance, was not within the meaning of section 126 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1849: Griffith and Holmes on Bankruptcy, 1867, at p. 438.

Younger, Q.C., in reply.—If this settlement were made for valuable consideration at all, the consideration was clearly inadequate, and this has been held sufficient to upset a transaction under statute 13 Elizabeth, c. 5: Matthews v. Feaver, 1 Cox Ch. Cas. 278. Similarly, it was sufficient to avoid a settlement under section 91 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869: Ex parte Hillman, In re Pumfrey, 27 W. R. 567, 10 Ch. D. 622. The release of the debentures was clearly made by William Plummer for the benefit of his son; Christy v. Courtenay, 13 Beav. 96; Wray v. Steele, 2 Ves. & B. 388. As to the alteration in the nature of the settled property, there is no such change as to hinder the trustee from following it: In re Mouat, Kingston Cotton Mills Co. v. Mouat, 47 W. R. 506, [1899] 1 Ch. 831; Dowse v. Gorton, 40 W. R. 17, [1891] A. C. 190.

Lord ALVERSTONE, M.R.—In this case we have received much assistance from the arguments of counsel. The question is whether certain transactions are void as against the trustee in bankruptcy on the ground that they constituted "a settlement" within section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. Before dealing with the facts it will perhaps be convenient to state my view on the law. It seems that there have always been two classes of cases both under the old statutes and under section 47 of the Act of 1883. (1) If a gift were intended to be invested in something that could be traced it remained the property of the trustee and constituted "a settlement." On the other hand, we have a class of cases in which we have a gift of money which was not intended to be invested in something that could be traced; and in such cases the gift of money has not been held to be "a settlement." The two separate cases entitled In re Player happen to illustrate both these classes—the case reported in 15 Q. B. D. at p. 682 illustrating a gift which does not constitute "a settlement"; that reported in 2 Morrell at p. 261 illustrating a gift which does. I think that Vaughan Williams, J., in In re Vansittart and Wright, J., in In re Tankard, expressed the same principle in different words. I could not myself use better language than that of Wright, J., in In re Tankard, at p. 625 (47 W. R.). "I conceive," he says, "though there seems to be no authority on the point, that neither the original alienee, nor the transferee from him, could be required to restore money which he has spent or property which he has aliened before the bankruptcy, and without notice of any act of bankruptcy (or, perhaps, without knowledge of insolvency), though the alienee probably is liable to account for any proceeds which remain in his hands at the time of the bankruptcy—at any rate, if the acquisition by him of those proceeds was an object of the gift to him so that the proceeds can properly be said to represent the gift." It seems to me, then, that there are two clear classes of cases—two distinct lines of thought running through them all. Having thus stated my view as to the principles of law, it will now be convenient if, at this point, I briefly summarize the facts. [His lordship summarized them briefly.] Now in the first place it is admitted that, from beginning to end, the whole basis of this action lies in the fact that there was nothing improper or fraudulent in these transactions. The whole question is whether, William Plummer having since become bankrupt, these transactions are accordingly void under section 47. It is not argued that any money passed from the father to the son. But it is said that the result of the father surrendering his debentures and withdrawing his claim for the £688, for which he was a simple contract creditor, was to improve the position of the son. I am not myself disposed to dispute that result. I am not concerned to dispute that these transactions may have resulted in the son getting some greater benefit than he might otherwise have got. But I do not think that that fact is by itself enough. The learned judge in the court below found that he was "quite unable to say that the consideration received by the father in respect of which he made his contribution—i.e., the son undertaking the paying of creditors—was so fictitious or unreal as to make the transaction one that should be impeached on that ground." In my opinion also the son was a purchaser for adequate value, and I think he must therefore be deemed a purchaser for the purposes of section 47. But secondly, even if this were not so, there still remains the question whether the transaction could properly be called a "settlement." We are asked by the appellant to say that the trustee is entitled, at any rate to the extent to which these releases were made by the father in favour of his son, to claim this business on behalf of the bankrupt's estate. It is not disputed, however, that there is no authority on the construction of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, for the application of the principle of section 47 to a fluctuating business such as this. All those authorities in which moneys have been accounted for are cases in which gifts have been given in the shape of investment or mortgage—are cases in which there was something which could justly be thought to represent the actual proceeds of the present. That, however, is not the case here.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I accept as adequate and correct the statement of facts made by the Master of the Rolls, and I arrive from them at the same conclusion. All I wish to add is that I do not think that the authority of In re Player has been successfully impeached. The judgments in that case, both of Mathew and Cave, JJ., proceeded on the very intelligible principle that a gift of money which was not hedged about with conditions to the effect that it was to be invested and kept in a certain state could not be called "a settlement" within the meaning of section 47. Some of the criticisms of that judgment in the present case were based on a misunderstanding. It was not there pretended that money could never be settled, but it was said that section 47 could never have been intended to cover a case such as this. The authority of that case has not been impeached by any of the other authorities referred to. As to the other point of the present case, my short opinion is this: that though William Plummer certainly released his debentures to the company, yet he did not do it with any view of making a settlement on, or assignment to, his son, though he undoubtedly did effect that his son should become a purchaser on terms which would have been impossible had he himself insisted on his strict rights. Indeed, had he insisted on them I doubt whether the sale would ever have taken place at all.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The point, I think, is one of fact. I should be sorry to say that when a father buys a business for a son it might not be a settlement under section 47. I think it would depend on the character of the business. But when it is impossible to trace the business afterwards, it is clear that it is not a settlement of the kind which the Legislature intended to include in the section in question.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors. Marshall & Pridham, for Cripps, Son, & Daish, Tunbridge Wells; Phelps, Sidgwick, & Biddle.

---

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } May 31.

METROPOLITAN BANK OF ENGLAND AND WALES (LIMITED) v. H. H. VIVIAN & CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Debentures—Floating security—Sale of part of the securities—Injunction.

The holders of debentures in a company had a floating security over the property of the company, which consisted of a business carried on in three distinct branches. Power was reserved to the company in the trust deed to sell the business carried on at one of the three branches, and to take shares in other similar companies.

Held, that the debenture-holders could not restrain the company from getting rid of one of the three businesses, as it was being done in good faith and for the benefit of the company.

This was a motion on behalf of the Metropolitan Bank of England and Wales, suing for itself and the other debenture-holders for an injunction to restrain the defendant company, Messrs. H. H. Vivian & Co. (Limited), from selling to the Anglo-French Nickel Co. (Limited), or otherwise disposing of the business of the defendant company carried on at Swansea, without first making due provision for the payment of outstanding debentures issued by the defendant company, and secured by an indenture dated the 24th of June, 1898.

H. H. Vivian & Co. was formed in 1882 to carry on a smelting business in three distinct branches, two of which were at Birmingham, and one at Swansea.

In 1890 the Metropolitan Bank advanced the sum of £80,000 on the security of debentures, and this charge was intended to be a floating security.

The company reserved a power in the trust deed to lease the Swansea premises for three years and by the articles and memorandum of association it had power to sell the property and to take shares in other similar companies.

The Swansea business not being a success, the company proposed to dispose of it to the Anglo-French Nickel Co. for the sum of £25,000 in shares, and to lease the hereditaments to the same company for three years at a rent of £1,000 a year.

The shareholders in Messrs. H. H. Vivian & Co. passed a resolution agreeing to the proposed sale on the 5th of April, but the consent of the plaintiff bank to the sale had not been obtained.

The Anglo-French Nickel Co. (Limited) intended, so it appeared, to raise £25,000 by the issue of debentures on the Swansea business, which formed part of the security of the plaintiff bank.

Eve, Q.C., and W. R. Sheldon, for plaintiffs, contended that if the sale took place there would be a discontinuance of the business which the company had covenanted to carry on, and that it was not in the ordinary course of the company's business to promote the sale: In re Borax Co., [1899] 2 Ch. 130, 47 W. R. Dig. 29.

Macnaghten, Q.C., and G. P. Lawrence, for defendants, referred to Hubbuck v. Helms, 35 W. R. 574.

Martelli, for trustees of the covering deed.

COZENS-HARDY, J.—I think this motion fails. The plaintiffs have a floating security. What are the rights of the holders of debentures in that class of securities? It cannot be more accurately described than in the words of Lord Macnaghten in the case of The Government Stock and Other Securities Investment Co. (Limited) v. The Manila Railway Co. (Limited), 45 W. R. 353, [1897] A. C. 81: "A floating security is an equitable charge on the assets for the time being of a going concern. It attaches to the subject charged in the varying condition in which it happens to be from time to time. It is of the essence of such a charge that it remains dormant until the undertaking charged ceases to be a going concern, or until the person in whose favour the charge is created intervenes. His right to intervene may, of course, be suspended by agreement. But if there is no agreement for suspension he may exercise his right whenever he pleases after default." It is said there are three businesses but only one undertaking. What is the business of the company? It consists of three branches, all parts of one business, carried on by a company as covenanted by the trust deed. Is it consistent with the carrying on of the business to dispose of the stock-in-trade of one branch? The directors have come to the conclusion that it is to their interest to get rid of the Swansea property. They propose to sell it to the Anglo-French Nickel Co. The company had power to sell and also to invest in the shares of another company, and there is nothing in the debentures or in the trust deed to prevent the directors from doing what they now propose to do in good faith and for the benefit of the company. No doubt it is depriving the debenture-holders of part of their security, but they have not guarded against this. I think the motion is wrong, and dismiss it with costs.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Burton, Yeates, & Hart, for Johnson, Barclay, & Lowe, Birmingham.

Solicitors for the defendants, Hollams, Sons, Coward, & Hawksley.

---

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Chan. Div. Buckley, J. } June 28, 29; July 3.

BUCKLAND v. BUCKLAND. (a.)

Married woman—Infant—Marriage settlement—Implied covenant by husband—Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 19.

An ante-nuptial settlement entered into in 1891 by the intending wife (an infant), the intending husband, and trustees, recited that it was agreed that a legacy to which the lady was entitled, but not given for her separate use, should be settled upon the trusts thereinafter declared. The testatum was that, in pursuance of the agreement, the lady, with the privity and approbation of the intending husband, declared that the legacy should be held upon certain trusts. There was not any express agreement by the husband. The lady repudiated the settlement when of age.

Held, that a covenant would be implied on the part of the husband to do what was necessary to give effect to the settlement, and that therefore the instrument would have barred the marital right of the husband if the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, had not been passed, and was a settlement under section 19 of that Act, and consequently remained unaffected.

James Cockle, who died in 1875, by his will, after appointing his wife and the defendants Cockle and Blackett his executors, bequeathed (among others) a legacy of £1,000 and some shares in a company to his daughter, the plaintiff Jeanette E. Buckland, then Jeanette E. Cockle, and he directed his trustees to invest the legacies of the females who were under twenty-one years or unmarried, and apply the income for their maintenance until twenty-one years or marriage.

There was no direction that the legacy should be for the separate use of the daughter.

In 1891, Miss Buckland, still an infant of about eighteen years, married the plaintiff, Felix Buckland.

Prior to the marriage, an indenture was made between Miss Cockle of the first part, Mr. Buckland of the second part, and the defendants Cockle and Blackett of the third part, and executed by all parties, which recited the will of James Cockle, that Miss Cockle was an infant, and that a marriage was intended between Miss Cockle and Mr. Buckland, and that upon the treaty for the intended marriage it had been agreed that the legacy should be settled upon the trusts thereinafter declared. The testatum was that in pursuance of the said agreement, and in consideration of the said intended marriage the lady, with the privity and approbation of Mr. Buckland, declared that the trustees of the will of James Cockle should stand possessed of the legacy upon trust after the marriage for the lady for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, and after her death upon the usual trusts for the children of the marriage and for other persons in default of such children.

Upon attaining twenty-one Mrs. Buckland repudiated the settlement and claimed the legacy as her own freed from the trusts. She later desired the trustees to pay the legacy over to her, but they refused to do so without the authority of the court.

This action was thereupon brought by Mr. and Mrs. Buckland against the trustees and the two children of the marriage, asking a declaration that the settlement was not binding upon the plaintiffs, and that the legacy should be paid to the wife. The question was as to the effect of section 19 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, which says: "Nothing in this Act contained shall interfere with or affect any settlement or agreement for a settlement made or to be made, whether before or after marriage, respecting the property of any married woman."

Attwater, for the plaintiffs.—As Mrs. Buckland repudiated the settlement the legacy became her separate property under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, and nothing that the husband could do would affect it. This case is distinguishable from Hancock v. Hancock, 36 W. R. 417, 38 Ch. D. 78, as there was a subsisting settlement there, and so also in Stevens v. Trevor-Garrick, 41 W. R. 412, [1893] 2 Ch. 307, and the question was as to its effect. Here, since the repudiation there is no settlement. I rely on In re Queade's Trusts, 33 W. R. 816, upon which see observations in Wolstenholme's Settled Land Acts (8th ed.), pp. 286, 287. The only agreement in the settlement was between all three parties. There was none between the husband and the trustees. The husband only joined to show his consent, and negative allegation of fraud on his marital right. It thus neither bound the husband nor the wife, and has no effect.

St. John Clerke, for the defendants.—The case is covered by Stevens v. Trevor-Garrick. There have been a series of cases, from In re Stonor's Trusts, 24 Ch. D. 195, 31 W. R. Dig. 169, and In re Whitaker, 35 W. R. 217, 34 Ch. D. 227, to that case, showing that section 19 applies whenever the wife's property would have been affected if the Act had not been passed. Here that would be the case, for the husband is bound by the recital. In Dawes v. Tredwell, 29 W. R. 793, 18 Ch. D. 354, and in Young v. Smith, L. R. 1 Eq. 180, 14 W. R. Ch. Dig. 44, there were express covenants by the husband. Here, there being none, a covenant on his part will be implied.

The following cases were also cited: In re Armstrong, Ex parte Boyd, 36 W. R. 772, 21 Q. B. D. 264; In re Lumley, 45 W. R. 147, [1896] 2 Ch. 690; and Pimm v. Insall, 1 Mac. & G. 449.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 3.—BUCKLEY, J.—In In re Queade's Trusts the settlement was a post-nuptial settlement made in the year 1847 between the wife, who was an infant, the husband, and the trustees. It contained an agreement and declaration by the parties, and a covenant by the husband, that all future property by the wife should be settled. In 1883—that is to say, after the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882—the wife became entitled as one of next-of-kin to a share of undisposed-of residuary estate. There, as here, the wife was at the date of the deed an infant, and there was, therefore, no settlement by her. Chitty, J., held that section 5 of the Act of 1882 was operative in those circumstances, and that the wife was entitled. In Hancock v. Hancock that case was disapproved. The Court of Appeal held that according to its true construction the 19th section of the Act of 1882 prevents section 5 from interfering with any settlement which would have bound the property if the Act had not been passed. The argument that "settlement" in section 19 must mean a settlement which is binding upon the wife was advanced and failed. The settlement in that case did not contain any covenant by the wife or any joint declaration or agreement. Subsequently in Stevens v. Trevor-Garrick Chitty, J., held that in a case where not section 5 of the Act but section 2 was the relevant section, the principle of the decision of the Court of Appeal was equally applicable. In this state of things it appears to me that the decision in In re Queade's Trusts is gone altogether, and that it cannot be maintained, as was argued before me, that the effect of section 19 is merely to provide that the construction of the settlement is not to be affected and that the Act does not apply except where the wife is bound by or has assented to the settlement. I conceive that I must deal with the present case upon the footing that section 2 is not to interfere with the settlement, if it be a settlement which would have bound the property if the Act of 1882 had not been passed. What then would have been the effect of the settlement of the 8th of December, 1891, if the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, had not been passed? At the date of the marriage in December, 1891, the lady was entitled to a legacy of £1,000 under the will of her father, who had died in 1875. It was not given for her separate use. It was therefore a sum to which the husband would after the marriage have been entitled by virtue of his marital right upon reducing it into possession. In that state of things a deed was executed to which the lady (then an infant), the intended husband, and certain trustees were parties. Now, seeing that the lady was at this date an infant, the agreement recited in this deed cannot have been with her. It must have been an agreement between the intended husband and the trustees for the beneficiaries, including the children of the marriage if there should be such. In pursuance therefore of this agreement between the intended husband and the trustees, the intended wife with the privity of the intended husband declares that the legacy shall be held upon certain trusts. As a declaration by the infant this of course had no effect at all, so that, unless the recital of the agreement is to be operative as between the parties who are recited to have agreed, the instrument will have been wholly inoperative as to the property purporting to be settled. The case therefore seems to me parallel with that of Hollis v. Carr, 2 Freem. 3, 3 Swanst. 638, referred to by Lord Romilly in Young v. Smith. There is a plain recital of an agreement that the legacy shall be settled upon trusts which are in the instrument after declared, and no subsequent operative part to give effect to that agreement, unless it be found in implying a covenant on the part of the husband to do such things as are necessary to give effect to the settlement which the infant purports to make with his privity and approbation. Under these circumstances it appears to me that there is in this instrument an agreement by the husband which binds the marital right which is his upon the footing that the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, has not been passed. In other words, I think that, as in Hancock v. Hancock, the agreement by the husband to settle, although unaccompanied by any obligation binding the infant wife, is an agreement which would have bound the property if the Act of 1882 had not been passed, and that upon the true construction of that Act section 19 prevents section 2 from interfering with it. I may add that, as a matter of fact, it is plain from the evidence which was given before me that the guardian of the lady, who was one of the trustees, stipulated for the execution of the settlement as a condition of approving the marriage, and that there was in fact an agreement as between the husband and Mr. H. F. Cockle, the trustee, that the property should be settled as appears by the instrument of the 8th of December, 1891.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Action dismissed.

Solicitor for all parties, C. N. Dodd, Lewisham.

---

(1901) A.C. 505.

Q. B. Div.
(Bigham and Phillimore, JJ.) June 16, 21.

BOOTS' CASH CHEMISTS (LANCASHIRE) (LIMITED) AND OTHERS v. GRUNDY AND ANOTHER.

Action, cause of—Trade combination—Circular—Interference with business—Inducing persons not to deal with the plaintiffs.

A statement of claim in effect stated that the defendants, in combination with others, had maliciously interfered with the plaintiffs in carrying on their business by issuing a circular asking persons not to deal with them.

It was alleged that the intention of the defendants and other signatories to the circular was to induce printsellers to refrain altogether from dealing with any print publisher who might sell any goods to the plaintiffs, and to coerce printsellers into refusing to supply the plaintiffs with any goods; that the defendants had so coerced the majority of the printsellers in this country, and that the plaintiffs had suffered damage in consequence.

Held, by Bigham, J. (Phillimore, J., dissenting), that, as an action would not lie against persons who, for their own benefit, combined to induce others to refrain from dealing with a particular person, the plaintiffs' statement of claim disclosed no cause of action, since the acts complained of, if done by an individual, would have been lawful, and they did not become tortious because they were done by several in combination.

This was a motion by the defendants to have the action dismissed on the ground that the statement of claim disclosed no cause of action.

The plaintiffs and the defendants both sold etchings and engravings, and the plaintiffs in their statement of claim alleged that the defendants in combination with others had maliciously and without just cause or excuse interfered with them in carrying on their business by inducing customers not to deal with them by issuing a circular which was in these terms:

"In view of the combination of several of the London publishers, it is time that all bonâ fide printsellers throughout the provinces became united to defend themselves. It is known that two or three firms have admitted that they supply Boots & Co., stores, drapers, and others (who are non-subscribers to the Printsellers' Association) at half-price, and we think it very unfair, when they know that these people want them to sell to the public at 25 per cent. off the published price, and advertise the fact. If the provincial trade will all agree not to order any goods from travellers representing houses whose publications are systematically shown and offered by these notorious undersellers, then their reports and non-success would show their principals how very seriously we take it; and although the measured proposal at the general meeting of the Printsellers' Association will not go to the root of the evil, we feel sure it is bringing the aggressors into a smaller radius, and will to some extent mitigate the pernicious system of underselling. This matter is becoming so serious throughout the provinces that we venture to bring this suggestion before your notice in the hope that by your assistance it will have the desired effect.—We are, yours faithfully."

Then followed the names of twenty-one signatories.

The defendants and the signatories were all members of the Printsellers' Association.

The plaintiffs alleged that the intention of the defendants and the signatories was to induce printsellers to refrain altogether from dealing with any printseller who might sell any goods to the plaintiffs, and to coerce printsellers into refusing altogether to supply the plaintiffs with any goods at all. That the defendants had coerced the majority of printsellers in this country into refusing to sell any of their publications or any goods at all to the plaintiffs, and that the plaintiffs had suffered damage through their acts.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The plaintiffs accordingly claimed an injunction to restrain the defendants from wrongfully and maliciously interfering with the plaintiffs in the free conduct of their business, and from continuing to do so by repeating the acts complained of.

They also claimed damages.

Rufus Isaacs, Q.C., and T. E. Scrutton, for the defendants.—The issue of this circular by a trade combination is not an actionable conspiracy, for even if the defendants by means which are not unlawful succeed in inducing others to do an act injurious to the plaintiffs, no action will lie against them. All that the circular alleged against the plaintiffs is that they compete unfairly with other sellers, and it asks those who take that view of the way the plaintiffs trade not to assist them in their unfair dealing. That is a perfectly lawful act: Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, Gow, & Co., 40 W. R. 337, 23 Q. B. D. 598, [1892] A. C. 25. This would not become unlawful if done by one person with a malicious motive (Allen v. Flood, 46 W. R. 258, [1898] A. C. 1), nor yet if done by many: Kearney v. Lloyd, 26 L. R. Ir. 268; Huttley v. Simmons, [1898] 1 Q. B. 181, 46 W. R. Dig. 35; Scottish Co-operative Society (Limited) v. Glasgow Fleshers' Association, 35 Scottish Law Reporter 645. A mere combination to do an innocent act only becomes an unlawful combination if the act done is done by illegal means.

They also cited Reg. v Warburton, 19 W. R. 165, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 274; Reg. v Aspinall, 25 W. R. 283, 2 Q. B. D. 48; Rex. v. Turner, 13 East 228; Temperton v. Russell, 41 W. R. 565, [1893] 1 Q. B. 715.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and Arthur Colefax, for the plaintiffs. — The statement of claim discloses a perfectly good cause of action since it alleges a trade conspiracy to injure the plaintiffs in their trading. An act done by an individual which would be innocent may well become illegal if done in combination by many. Allen v. Flood does not deal with this class of act, but it was recognized as actionable in the Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, [1892] A. C. 25, and Lord Halsbury deals with it at p. 38 and Lord Bramwell at p. 45. This is a far stronger case than that of the plaintiffs in the Mogul case, and the action should be allowed to go to trial.

Rufus Isaacs, in reply, cited Tarleton v. M'Gawley, 1 Peake N. P. C. 270. The court cannot examine the reasonableness of a trade competition, and that is what the court is asked to do here by the plaintiffs, for they say that nothing short of a tort in attaining a legal object would make its attainment unlawful.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 21.—THE COURT differed in opinion.

PHILLIMORE, J.—The motion before us is to strike out the statement of claim as disclosing no cause of action, and the only cause of action upon which in the argument before us the plaintiffs placed reliance may be summed up in these words. The plaintiffs complain that the defendants have combined with others to prevent them from carrying on their trade by effectually inducing third parties not to sell to them, and that they have done this maliciously without just cause or excuse. The words "maliciously without just cause or excuse" probably add nothing to the strength of the plaintiffs' complaint; but they anticipate, and by anticipation repel, that which, if alleged and proved, would be a sufficient defence—namely, that the acts of the defendants were acts of trade competition and in furtherance of their own trade: see Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor. When regard is had to the detailed allegations with which this framework of complaint is clothed in the statement of claim, it seems not improbable that the defendants would, if the case went to trial, prove this defence and win the cause. But for the moment we have not to consider this. The question for us appears to be whether a combination by several against one, not for their own advantage, but for the purpose of depriving him of his trade or doing him some other pecuniary injury, gives to the person so injured a cause of action against the confederates. That any single person can use his utmost endeavour to prevent third persons from dealing with another man, and thus deprive him of his trade and even of his means of livelihood, is settled by the decision of the House of Lords in Allen v. Flood, and I presume that what one could do any number of persons acting separately and without concert could equally do. But the effectual strength of one, or even of a number acting separately, is as nothing compared with the force of a combination which may be irresistible. If in such a case the injured person has no cause of action either for damages or an injunction he is without remedy; for if the combination be not actionable, it certainly is not criminal, and, conversely, wherever an act is criminal the person injured has (subject to the rule of public policy which postpones civil proceedings for a felony) a right of action for the civil injury. Now there are certainly some injurious acts which one person may do towards another without committing a crime, and which when done by several persons in combination become criminal. The books give several classes of indictable conspiracy. Some of them may be obsolete, or may, upon a more careful analysis, appear to be not substantive crimes, but only modes of looking at other crimes, or the evidence of an attempt to commit crimes. But when all deduction is made there remain some cases of conspiracy which are criminal solely because of the combination. Knowingly to charge a man falsely with the commission of a crime is cruel and wicked, but if the accuser avoids giving evidence and committing perjury he will escape the criminal laws. The combination, however, of several to charge an innocent person with a crime is laid down to be an indictable conspiracy. The books also say that a combination to injure a man by fraud is an indictable conspiracy; and, though it seems difficult to say, with the modern improvements in our criminal law, that there are many cases in which a single person can injure another by fraud without committing a crime, still there are some, and at one time there were more, and to them, when done in combination, the law of conspiracy was applied. Reg. v. Robinson, 1 Leach, 37, is a case in point; and in the more modern case of Reg. v. Warburton, the Court for Crown Cases Reserved assumed that for the act charged at the time it was committed an individual would have been scatheless, but held confederates liable. If and where the practice of boycotting "maliciously and without just cause or excuse" was carried on to such an extent as to deprive a man or woman of the means of livelihood it would be a blot upon our law if the confederate boycotters could not be punished. In these instances, therefore, confederacy would be indictable and therefore actionable. Now that the case of Rex. v. Turner, has been disapproved, and the authority of it, I think, destroyed by Reg. v. Rowlands, 17

Q. B. 671, I should hold that all confederacies to injure a man by committing torts, which would be actionable against individuals committing them separately, become indictable by reason of the combination. It seems, further, that confederacies to injure without committing actionable torts, but by doing acts punishable only in the Ecclesiastical Court, are also indictable conspiracies: Reg. v. Best, 2 Ld. Raym. 1167; Rex. v. Lord Grey, 9 St. Tr. 127. It remains to consider whether a confederacy to injure, which can be carried out without the commission of any tort actionable against an individual and without any breach of the old ecclesiastical law, may not, nevertheless, be a conspiracy. I say the old ecclesiastical law because it may be that the abolition of the ecclesiastical jurisdiction in defamation has made what was relied upon in Reg. v. Best as an ecclesiastical offence one no longer. It is true that the language of the judges who charged the jury in Reg. v. Parnell, 14 Cox C. C. 508, is, with regard to their third division of the crime of conspiracy, hesitating and varying, and even the same might be said of the judgment of Bowen, L.J., in The Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, 37 W. R. 756, 23 Q. B. D. 598. Sometimes the learned judges speak in the most general language of any combination to do any form of injury, and sometimes they seem to speak of combinations to commit actionable wrongs. But the observations of Lords Bramwell, Hannen, and Field when deciding the last-named case in the House of Lords, and the reservation of Lords Herschell and Macnaghten when giving their decision in Allen v. Flood, lead me to conclude that they recognized the wider view of conspiracy taken in the older cases. I do not see that in Reg. v. Robinson there was any actionable wrong, or that in Reg. v. Warburton the injured partner would have had any civil remedy except in the Court of Chancery. I have made my observation on Reg. v. Best, and I can see that in a conspiracy falsely to charge a man with crime some at least of the conspirators might take an effectual share without uttering slander or committing any actionable wrong. I think, therefore, that if the confederacy in this case for the motives and purposes alleged in the statement of claim were proved as laid it would be indictable, and at least equally, if not a fortiori, actionable. In other words, given the confederacy, the motive and purpose make all the difference. If a number of persons, because of political or religious hatred, or from a spirit of revenge for previous real or fancied injury, combine to oppress a man and deprive him of his means of livelihood for the mere purpose of so-called punishment, I think the sufferer has his remedy. If the combination be to further their own prosperity, if it be constructive, or destructive only as a means to being constructive, the case is otherwise.

BIGHAM, J., read the following judgment: It is necessary to read this statement of claim with care in order to ascertain its true legal effect. It begins by alleging that the plaintiffs and the defendants are both engaged in the trade of printsellers, and it proceeds to state that the defendants "with others" (which I take to mean with the co-operation of others) issued to a number of persons in the trade, both printsellers and print publishers, the circular set out in paragraph 2. The pleader then goes on to impute to the defendants and to the other signatories of the circular an intention in issuing the circular "to induce printsellers to refrain altogether from dealing with any print publisher who might sell any goods to the plaintiffs, and to coerce print publishers into refusing altogether to supply the plaintiffs with any goods at all." This intention is alleged to be expressed in the circular itself, but for my part I do not find it there. The only intention I find is an intention to induce printsellers to refrain from dealing with publishers who continue to supply the plaintiffs on such terms or at such prices as will enable the latter to resell at the low prices objected to, and in that way, and to that extent only, to coerce such publishers to refuse to supply the plaintiffs. No intention is expressed in the circular to coerce publishers to refuse altogether to supply the plaintiffs. I do not, however, rely on this distinction for the purpose of my judgment. The fifth paragraph alleges that the defendants have, by means of the said circular, in concert with the other signatories, induced persons not to buy from publishers willing to sell to the plaintiffs, and have thereby "coerced" the publishers into refusing altogether to sell any publications at all to the plaintiffs, to the damage of the plaintiffs in their business. The only meaning of this paragraph is that the object with which the circular was issued has been attained, and that loss has resulted to the plaintiffs. It is not suggested that the defendants have done more than issue the circular and abstain themselves from buying of the offending publishers; and, if it be true (as for the present purpose I must assume) that the publishers have refrained altogether from dealing with the plaintiffs, I doubt if such action on their part can be said to flow naturally from the acts of the defendants. So far the statement of claim amounts to nothing more than a charge against the defendants of requesting a particular body of traders not to give orders for goods to another body of traders—the "provincial trade" is requested not to give orders to those publishers who supply the plaintiffs—and an allegation that the request has been followed by compliance. In my opinion, the charge amounts to nothing which can be described as a wrong done to the plaintiffs. If true it does not violate any right of the plaintiffs, and, therefore, it affords them no cause of action, for one man is entitled as against all the world to ask another to refrain from doing an act which that other may lawfully omit to do. But it is said that the defendants' acts were calculated to damage and were done with the intention of damaging the plaintiffs in their business, and, further, that they were unlawful and in restraint of the plaintiffs' right to trade freely, and were done maliciously and without just cause or excuse. These allegations do not better the plaintiffs' position. The intention is immaterial if the acts themselves are not wrongful, and merely to say they are unlawful does not make them so. That they resulted in loss to the plaintiffs or in a restriction of their trade is equally immaterial, for no one is responsible to another for the consequence of a lawful act. It is useless to say that lawful acts are malicious or are done without just cause or excuse, for no lawful act can be malicious in a legal sense nor does it require to be defended by any just cause or excuse. It carries its just cause or excuse with it. Causes of action arise out of acts done, not out of intentions, nor out of consequences; and though morally a man may be blameable for exercising his rights for the mere purpose of hurting his neighbour, it is better, in my view, that he should be condemned in the tribunal of public opinion than that his intention should be the subject of inquiry in a court of law. With reference to the intention with which the acts charged against the defendants were done, I notice that the statement of claim does not allege that it was merely to damage the plaintiffs. The allegation of intention is consistent with a concurrent intention to benefit the defendants' own trade. I draw attention to this, not because I think it makes any difference in point of law, but because it has in some cases been said (I think erroneously) that when a right is exercised for the mere purpose of damaging another the act may become a tort. It was, however, upon the concluding words of paragraph 6 of the statement of claim that the plaintiffs really relied. Those words are as follows: "Further, the defendants have, as the aforesaid acts show, maliciously combined with one another and with others to induce the publishers of engravings not to enter into contracts or deal with the plaintiffs, and to induce others not to deal (except upon terms which did not allow the plaintiffs to do profitable business) with the plaintiffs. Such combination was unlawful, without just cause or excuse, and has occasioned damage to the plaintiffs." The plaintiffs' counsel admitted that upon the authorities the statement of claim probably disclosed no cause of action apart from the allegations of combination and conspiracy. It remains, therefore, only to consider whether in the present case the acts, being lawful if done by one, become tortious if done by several in combination. It is necessary, in my opinion, to define the word "conspiracy." A conspiracy exists when two or more combine to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act by unlawful means. No conspiracy is, in my opinion, known to the law which has not for its object the accomplishment of an unlawful act (not necessarily a criminal act), or which does not involve the use of unlawful means. This, I think, is the result of the judgments in Kearney v. Lloyd and Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor. Further, I think that, though probably all conspiracies, as I define them, are criminal, and therefore indictable, no conspiracy can give rise to a civil action unless it violates, or threatens to violate, the rights of an individual as distinguished from the rights of the public at large. If it does violate the rights of an individual, he may sue for damages; if it threatens such a violation, he may sue for an injunction. But before any action can lie a right in the individual must be violated or threatened. To use the words of Lord Halsbury in Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, [1892] A. C., at p. 38: "If no legal right has been interfered with, and no legal injury inflicted, it is vain to say that the thing might have been done by an individual, but cannot be done by a combination of persons." In the same case Lord Watson says, at p. 41, speaking of the combined action of the defendants: "I apprehend that in order to substantiate their claim the plaintiffs must show either that the object of the agreement was unlawful or that illegal methods were resorted to in its prosecution. If neither the end contemplated by the agreement nor the means used for its attainment were contrary to law, the loss suffered by the plaintiffs was damnum sine injuria." I ought, I think, to refer to the judgment of Lord Hannen in the same case. He says, at p. 59: "I arrive at the conclusion, therefore, that the objects sought and the means used by the defendants did not exceed the limits of allowable trade competition, and I know of no restriction imposed by law on competition by one trader with another with the sole object of benefiting himself. I consider that a different case would have arisen if the evidence had shown that the object of the defendants was a malicious one—viz., to injure the plaintiffs, whether the defendants should be benefited or not. That is a question on which it is unnecessary to express an opinion." As to this part of the judgment, I think, for reasons which will be found in Lord Herschell's judgment in Allen v. Flood—first, that the fact that the case was one of trade competition is of no significance; and, secondly, that the acts complained of being lawful the object with which they were done could in no case be material. In the present case I can find no act alleged against the defendants which amounts to a violation of any right in the plaintiffs nor can I find any act alleged against the defendants which is unlawful as against any other individual or against the public at large, and I come, therefore, to the conclusion that the statement of claim discloses no cause of action. I am, moreover, quite satisfied that to allow such an action as this to go to trial would merely cause unnecessary loss to the parties and a waste of public time.

As their lordships differed, Phillimore, J., withdrew his judgment, and accordingly the action was ordered to be dismissed.

Leave to appeal was granted.

Solicitor for the defendants, Lewis W. Taylor.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Tyrrell Lewis, Lewis, & Broadbent.

---

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div.
(Earl of Halsbury, L.C., and A. L. Smith and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) — July 24.

BARON v. PORTSLADE-BY-SEA URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL. (a.)

Local government—Sewers—Neglect to cleanse sewers—Nuisance—Action against local authority—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 19, 299.

Where a local authority has neglected to perform the duty imposed upon them by section 19 of the Public Health Act, 1875, of properly cleansing the sewers vested in them, and damage is thereby caused to an individual, an action will lie against the local authority at the suit of the person injured.

Appeal from the judgment of Mathew, J., after the trial of the action with a jury.

The action was brought to recover damages for a nuisance.

The plaintiff was the occupier of land in the defendants' district. An open sewer ran through the plaintiffs' land, the sewer having been made by a private individual for the purpose of draining a brewery and some cottages not on the plaintiff's land.

The sewer became vested in the defendants under the Public Health Act, 1875.

Formerly by arrangement between the plaintiff and the defendants the sewer was cleaned out periodically, and the defendants paid for the expense thereof.

In 1898 a dispute arose between the plaintiff and the defendants, and the result was that the sewer was not cleaned out. In consequence thereof quantities of sewage and filth overflowed on to the plaintiff's land and caused a nuisance and damage to him. The defendants contended that the plaintiff's only remedy was by complaint to the Local Government Board under section 299 of the Public Health Act, 1875.

At the trial the jury assessed the damages at £75. The learned judge held that an action would lie for neglect of the duty imposed on the defendants by section 19 of the Public Health Act, 1875, of properly cleansing the sewer, and he accordingly gave judgment for the plaintiff.

The defendants appealed.

Macmorran, Q.C., and Thorn Drury, for the defendants.—The plaintiff's sole remedy for the neglect by the defendants of the duty of properly cleansing the sewer imposed upon them by section 19 of the Public Health Act, 1875, is by complaint to the Local Government Board under section 299: Pasmore v. Oswaldtwistle Urban Council, [1898] A. C. 387, 46 W. R. Dig. 107; Robinson v. Workington Corporation, 45 W. R. 453, [1897] 1 Q. B. 619. The cases of Bateman v. Poplar District Board of Works, 36 W. R. 501, 37 Ch. D. 272; and Hammond v. St. Pancras Vestry, 22 W. R. 826, L. R. 9 C. P. 316, are not in point, as there is no section in the Metropolis Management Acts similar to section 299 of the Public Health Act, 1875. Further, the defendants, as they did not make the sewer, have only been guilty of nonfeasance, for which no action will lie: Attorney-General v. Dorking Union, 30 W. R. 579, 20 Ch. D. 595; Brown v. Dunstable Corporation, 47 W. R. 538, [1899] 2 Ch. 378; Dent v. Bournemouth Corporation, 66 L. J. Q. B. 395, 45 W. R. Dig. 90.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

J. G. Witt, Q.C., and Sinclair Cox, for the plaintiff, were not called upon.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—I entirely adopt the law laid down in the various cases which have been cited, but in my opinion they are all beside the present question. The sewer in question is vested in the defendants, and according to the practice previously followed it was cleansed at stated intervals, with the result that no nuisance was created. The defendants, however, discontinued that ordinary and natural mode of dealing with the sewer, and thereby a nuisance was created which occasioned damage to the land of a private citizen. There is all the difference possible between the jurisdiction to call upon a local authority to make new sewers or a new system of drainage, and the jurisdiction to call upon them to deal with the existing sewers in a reasonable and proper manner. There is no question in the present case of making a new sewer. The plaintiff's complaint is, that the sewer, which is vested in the defendants, and which the defendants have hitherto dealt with in a reasonable and proper manner, has been allowed by the defendants to become a nuisance by reason of the neglect of the duty imposed upon them by section 19 of the Public Health Act, 1875. I fail to see why that obligation should not be enforced by action. The earlier words of section 299 of the Act of 1875, which speak of default in providing the district with sufficient sewers, manifestly have reference to the creation of new works. The only difficulty arises with reference to the succeeding words, as to default in the maintenance of existing sewers. But when one looks at the context with which those words are associated, it seems to me that they refer to default in the performance of a duty of a kind somewhat similar to that dealt with in the preceding words. The section does not mean that every time a local authority neglect to use proper diligence in the management of existing sewers, the only remedy to the person injured thereby is by complaint to the Local Government Board. Where there is neglect by the local authority in the management of existing sewers, and damage results therefrom to a private citizen, there is nothing in the statute which takes away the ordinary common law right of action. The judgment of the learned judge was therefore right.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. Section 19 of the Public Health Act, 1875, imposes the duty on the local authority of keeping the sewers belonging to them so as not to be a nuisance or injurious to health, and of properly cleansing and emptying them. Why has not the person injured by the neglect of that duty a cause of action? None of the authorities cited go anywhere near saying that when a local authority does not properly cleanse their sewers, the only remedy is by complaint to the Local Government Board under section 299.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., agreed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Rodgers & Gilbert.

Solicitors for the defendants, Biggs-Roche, Sawyer, & Co., for Buckwell & Berkeley, Brighton.

---

From Q. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) July 17.

COHEN v. TANNAR. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Lease—Underlease—Covenant for quiet enjoyment—"Without any interruption by the landlord or any person claiming through him"—Original lease with covenant not to assign or underlet—Grant of underlease in breach of covenant—Subsequent assignment of reversion—Action of ejectment by assignees of reversion—Consent of underlessor to judgment.

The defendant, being the lessee of a shop which he covenanted not to assign or underlet without the approval of the landlord, let the premises to the plaintiff for the residue of the term without having obtained such approval. The sub-lease contained a covenant by the defendant that the plaintiff should hold and enjoy the premises without any interruption by the defendant or any person lawfully claiming through him. Subsequently the superior landlord assigned the reversion, and the assignees brought an action of ejectment against the defendant, on the ground that he had forfeited his lease by breach of covenant. The defendant consented to judgment being signed against him, and the plaintiff was obliged to go out of possession. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant for breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment, Ridley, J., gave judgment for the plaintiff.

Held, on appeal, that there was evidence that the interruption of the plaintiff's tenancy was caused by the act of the defendant in consenting to a judgment being signed against him which he might have resisted; and that, therefore, the appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal from the judgment of Ridley, J., on further consideration after the trial of an action with a jury.

The action was brought by a tenant against his landlord to recover damages for breach of a covenant for quiet enjoyment.

By an agreement dated the 7th of September, 1897, George Cunningham Smith let a shop in Cheapside in the City of London, to the defendant for a term of three years from the 29th of September, 1897. The defendant agreed, inter alia, not to assign, underlet, or part with the possession of the premises without the written approval of the landlord. The agreement contained a condition for re-entry on breach of any covenant by the defendant.

By an agreement dated the 16th of November, 1898, the defendant, without obtaining the approval of his landlord, let the said premises to the plaintiff for the residue of the term. This agreement contained the following clause: "The landlord agrees that the tenant paying the rent hereby reserved and performing and observing the conditions of this agreement on the part of the tenant herein contained may peaceably hold and enjoy the said premises during the tenancy without any interruption by the landlord or any person lawfully claiming through him."

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On the 25th of November, 1898, the superior landlord, George Cunningham Smith, assigned the reversion to Ezekiel Levy and Henry Franks.

On the 16th of December, 1898, Levy and Franks served on the defendant a notice that he had forfeited his lease by parting with the possession of the premises without the written approval of the landlords.

On the 10th of January, 1899, Levy and Franks commenced an action against the defendant to recover possession of the premises, and on the 1st of February the defendant's solicitor signed a consent to judgment in that action being signed against the defendant, and judgment was signed accordingly; and, a writ of possession having been directed to the sheriff, the plaintiff was obliged to go out of possession.

The plaintiff thereupon commenced this action for breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment.

At the trial the jury assessed the damages at £160, and Ridley, J., on further consideration, gave judgment for the plaintiff for that amount.

The defendant appealed.

Rawlinson, Q.C., and F. Shewell Cooper, for the defendant.—There has been no breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment. The interruption which the plaintiff has suffered was not the act of the defendant or of any person claiming through him, but was the act of the superior landlord: see Kelly v. Rogers, 40 W. R. 516, [1892] 1 Q. B. 910.

Robert Wallace, Q.C., and H. S. Simmons, for the plaintiff.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—It is clear that Levy and Franks were not entitled to bring an action of ejectment against the defendant. The defendant's breach of his covenant against assignment happened before the reversion was assigned to Levy and Franks; and there was therefore no breach of covenant conferring on them a right of re-entry. But the defendant consented to judgment for possession being signed against him, and in consequence of that the plaintiff had to go out. Ridley, J., thought that the interruption of the plaintiff's tenancy was caused by the act of the defendant in consenting to a judgment being signed against him, which he might have resisted. I am of opinion that there was evidence on which the learned judge might so find, and therefore I think that the appeal must be dismissed.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS and ROMER, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Nordon & De Frece.

Solicitors for the defendant, Swann, Green, & Co.

---

From Q. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) June 21, 22.

BURGER v. INDEMNITY MUTUAL MARINE ASSURANCE CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Insurance, marine—Collision clause—"Injury to the other ship or vessel itself"—Wreck—Cost of removal.

A policy of marine insurance on hull and machinery contained a collision clause which covered sums paid by the assured in the event of a collision with another vessel "in respect of injury to the other ship or vessel itself." The insured ship came into collision with a tug in a river and sank it. The wreck of the tug was removed by a conservancy board under their statutory powers, and the cost of doing so was paid to the board by the owners of the tug and recovered by them from the assured in a collision action.

Held, that the cost of removing the wreck was not recoverable by the assured under the policy.

Appeal of the defendants from the judgment of Mathew, J., in an action tried without a jury in the Commercial Court.

The action was brought on a policy of marine insurance granted by the defendants and dated the 1st of April, 1897, for £3,500 on the hull and machinery of the plaintiff's steamship Durward for twelve months from the 1st of April, 1897.

The policy contained the following clause: "Collision clause.—Cross-liability.—And we further agree that if the ship hereby assured shall come into collision with any other ship or vessel, and the assured shall in consequence thereof be found liable to pay, and shall pay, any sums (not exceeding the value of the ship hereby assured) in respect of injury to such other ship or vessel itself, or to the goods and effects on board thereof, or for loss of freight then being earned by such other ship or vessel, we will severally pay the assured such proportion of three-fourth parts of said sums as our respective subscriptions hereto bear to the value of the ship hereby assured. . . . But this agreement is in no case to be construed as extending to any sums the assured may become liable to pay, or shall pay, in respect to loss of life or personal injury to individuals from any cause whatever."

On the 25th of November, 1897, The Durward came into collision with, and sank, the tug Victory in the River Tees, and The Victory became a wreck, which was subsequently dispersed by the River Tees Conservancy Board acting under their statutory powers.

The costs of dispersing the wreck, £1,178 19s. 10d., were claimed by the board under their statutory powers, and were duly paid by the owners of The Victory.

In an action arising out of the collision, brought in the Admiralty Court, The Durward was held alone to blame, and her owner was found liable to pay, and did pay, to the owners of The Victory the sum of £1,178 19s. 10d.

The plaintiff claimed from the defendants their proportion of that sum. The defendants pleaded that the payment was not a sum paid in respect of injury to The Victory itself within the meaning of the collision clause.

Mathew, J., gave judgment for the plaintiffs.

The defendants appealed.

Carver, Q.C., and Scrutton, for the defendants.—The cost of removing the wreck was not an injury to the tug itself within the meaning of the clause in the policy. The clause clearly does not cover all the damages recoverable in a collision action, because in such an action freight to be earned can be recovered (The Argentino, 37 W. R. 210, 14 App. Cas. 519), whereas this clause only covers freight being earned at the time of the collision. But if the clause covers the cost of removing the wreck, it would also cover freight then being earned, and the express stipulation as to freight would be unnecessary. The use of the word "itself" after the word "vessel" shows that the underwriter's liability is to be limited: The North Britain, 42 W. R. 243; The Engineer, 46 W. R. 530, [1898] A. C. 382. The proviso excluding liability to pay for loss of life or personal injury is not inconsistent with this view. That proviso was inserted because of the conflict of opinion between England and Scotland as to whether damages for loss of life or personal injuries could be recovered in a collision action: Taylor v. Dewar, 12 W. R. 579, 5 B. & S. 58; Coey v. Smith, 22 Court of Sess. Cas. (2nd series) 955.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and J. A. Hamilton, for the plaintiff.—The decision of Mathew, J., was right. The word "itself" is used in contradistinction to the words "goods and effects on board" and "the freight then being earned," and has not the effect of limiting the underwriter's liability to the cost of repairing the vessel, as contended for by the defendants. If "vessel itself" means the vessel, and nothing but the vessel, the proviso as to loss of life and personal injury was not required.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—In this case I dissent with diffidence from the judgment of Mathew, J. The facts are as follows: The owner of The Durward insured his vessel in a policy containing the clause in question. That vessel collided with the tug Victory and sent it to the bottom, the collision being due entirely to the negligence of The Durward, whose owner has paid all the damages, some £3,330, which the owner of The Victory sustained. The wreck being in the fairway of the River Tees Navigation, the conservators under their statutory powers dispersed it by explosives at a cost of £1,178, which they claimed from the owners of the tug. They in their turn claimed and received the same amount from the owner of The Durward, who in this action claims a proportion of that sum from the underwriters contending that his liability is covered by the collision clause. The whole question is whether it is covered or not. Mathew, J., has held that it is, and the underwriters appeal from his judgment. Now, the clause in question runs thus: [His lordship read the collision clause set out above.] Thus the obligation of the underwriters is limited to three subject-matters—(a) in respect of injury to the other ship or vessel itself, (b) in respect of injury to goods and effects on board thereof, (c) for loss of freight then being earned by such other ship or vessel. Those are the three subject-matters. The underwriters have to pay such proportion of three-fourths of the amount paid in respect of them as their several subscriptions bear to the value of The Durward, the ship insured. Now, pausing there, with all deference to Mathew, J., I think the construction of this clause is reasonably clear. I am not disposed to alter the words "in respect of" into "in consequence of," as suggested in the argument on behalf of the respondents, or into any other words. The words are "in respect of injury to such other ship or vessel itself." The word "itself" is, I think, strongly in favour of the appellants' contention. The sums paid by the owner of The Durward in respect of injury to The Victory itself have already been paid by the underwriters. The £1,178 paid for clearing away the wreck is not, in my opinion, a sum paid in respect of injury to the tug itself. It is contended for the respondent that the third heading, "loss of freight then being earned by such other ship or vessel," does not create a liability on the underwriters, but limits an existing liability wide enough to cover it. However that may be, it does not conclude the question. But it is said in addition there is the proviso, "This agreement shall in no case be construed as extending to any sums the assured may become liable to pay in respect to loss of life or personal injury to individuals from any cause whatever." It is contended that this proviso limits a liability, which, but for the proviso, the clause would have imposed upon the underwriters. But that is not, in my opinion, the real object of the proviso. The underwriters have not inserted a clause imposing a liability to pay in the widest sense all sums paid by the assured consequent upon any injury to the other vessel, and then excepted from such liability any sums paid in respect to loss of life or personal injury to individuals. The proviso is, in my opinion, added ex abundanti cautelâ. This argument of the respondent is not strong enough to induce me to hold that the earlier part of the clause imposes a liability to pay the sums claimed in this action. The appeal will therefore be allowed.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The assured has been obliged to pay to the owners of The Victory the expenses of dispersing the wreck. He now claims to recover those expenses from the underwriters. Whether he can do so depends on the construction of the words "in respect of injury to such other ship or vessel itself or to the goods and effects on board thereof, or for loss of freight then being earned by such other ship or vessel." Those words seem to me so clear as to require no explanation whatever. They catalogue the injuries in respect of which the underwriters undertake to pay the assured if the assured has to pay. Primâ facie it is impossible to say that the sum of money which the assured paid for clearing the tideway of the River Tees was a sum paid "in respect of injury to such other ship or vessel itself." But we are invited to put that meaning on those words because of the proviso that "this agreement shall in no case be construed as extending to any sums the assured may become liable to pay in respect to loss of life or personal injury to individuals from any cause whatever." If the words defining the subject-matter of the insurance are clear one cannot alter them because of a proviso which is in its very nature one which a prudent underwriter might think it advisable to introduce into every policy. I do not think Mathew, J., relied much on this proviso. His judgment was based on the construction of the earlier part of the clause, and I cannot agree with the view he took of its meaning.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree. One thing is clear—viz., that the collision clause was not intended to make the underwriters liable to pay money for every injury or loss in consequence of a collision. Their liability is limited to three heads—injury to the vessel, injury to goods, and loss of freight. The last proviso with regard to loss of life is, in my opinion, quite useless, and is only added out of superabundant caution; but a mere addition, however useless, is not enough to alter the natural construction. If the construction proposed by the respondent is adopted, if, that is, "in respect of" is to be read as "in consequence of," there is this additional difficulty, that there would then be no use in adding "injury to goods" or "loss of freight." For there could hardly be an injury to goods or a loss of freight, through a collision, which would not be in consequence of an injury to the ship itself. So that the same difficulty which arises on the appellants' construction would arise on the respondent's also, except that there would be two useless clauses instead of one.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, William A. Crump & Son.

Solicitors for the defendants, Waltons, Johnson, Bubb, & Whatton.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Stirling, J. } June 19; July 12.

In re DE WILTON.
DE WILTON v. MONTEFIORE. (a.)

Married woman—Marriage—Capacity—Uncle and niece—Celebration abroad—Domicil—Jews—Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85), s. 2—Marriage Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 72), s. 5—Marriage Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54).

A marriage between a niece and an uncle, who are members of the Jewish faith and domiciled British subjects, is invalid, although celebrated abroad where such a marriage would be legal.

This was a summons raising a question as to the shares into which, in the events which had happened, the residuary estate of the testatrix, Mrs. Laura Judith De Wilton, was divisible.

This involved a further question as to the validity of a marriage contracted between a daughter of the testatrix and her maternal uncle, both of the parties being of the Jewish faith and the marriage having been solemnized according to the rights and usages of the Jews at Wiesbaden, where such a marriage would have been legal.

The testatrix by her will dated the 30th of July, 1889, gave certain stocks and securities to her trustees upon trust to divide the same into three equal shares, and declared that her trustees should stand possessed of one of such shares upon trust to pay the income thereof to her daughter, Consueloe, during her life, and after her death to stand possessed of such share in trust for the children or remoter issue of such daughter born or to be born during her life, or within twenty-one years after her death, as the daughter should appoint, and in default of appointment in trust for all the children of the daughter, who being sons should attain twenty-one or being daughters should attain that age or marry. And if there should be no child or other issue of such daughter who should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should marry, then after the death of the daughter and default or failure of children or issue, the testatrix declared that the said share of the trust fund should accrue to the shares of any other daughter or daughters who should be living at her death in equal shares. And the testatrix further declared that the trustees should stand possessed of another of such one-third shares upon the like trusts in favour of her daughter Eugenie and her issue.

After disposing of the remaining one-third share the testatrix gave her residuary estate to the trustees in trust for all her children, including any who might have died in her lifetime leaving issue living at the death of the testatrix, and so that the share of any child who might have died in her lifetime leaving issue as aforesaid should devolve on his or her representatives in the same manner as if he or she had survived the testatrix and died immediately after her. And she directed that the trustees should retain the share of each daughter in the residuary trust fund and hold the same upon the like trusts in favour of each such daughter, her children, or issue, as were thereinbefore declared of and concerning their said respective one-third share of the before-mentioned trust fund.

By a codicil dated the 12th of June, 1893, the testatrix, after reciting that her daughter Eugenie had recently died, revoked the trusts in favour of Eugenie and her issue, of and concerning the one-third share of the first-mentioned trust fund, and disposed of it otherwise, and in all other respects she confirmed her will. She afterwards made further codicils, which did not affect the present question.

On the 30th of January, 1899, the testatrix died.

The question arose as to the share which would have come to the daughter Eugenie if she had survived her mother. Mrs. De Wilton was by birth a Jewess, but married a Christian in accordance with the rites of the Church of England. Her daughter Eugenie was brought up as a Christian. In 1876 Eugene De Wilton became engaged to be married to her maternal uncle, Joseph Gompertz Montefiore. Both were British subjects domiciled in England. Mr. Montefiore was an adherent of the Jewish faith. Miss De Wilton was desirous of being admitted to the same faith, but could not be so admitted according to the rules of the synagogue to which Mr. Montefiore belonged, nor could she be married. They therefore went to Wiesbaden, in Germany, where, on the 20th of August, 1876, they went through the form of civil marriage, and afterwards of marriage according to the custom and practice of the Jews. At that time Miss De Wilton had not been formally admitted into the Jewish faith, but she was so admitted at Paris on the 17th of September, 1876; and afterwards, on the same day, she there went through the form of marriage with Mr. Montefiore according to the Jewish custom and practice. The evidence showed that such a marriage was valid according to the law in force at Wiesbaden. There were issue of the marriage five children, of whom four were still living. The testatrix appeared in her lifetime to have recognized them as children of her daughter. The question was whether the testatrix's daughter Eugenie left children or issue within the meaning of the will of the testatrix.

Dicey, Q.C., and B. Cohen, appeared for the children of the daughter.

Henriques, for other parties.

STIRLING, J., after stating the facts, said that two contentions were raised on behalf of the children—(1) that the marriage was valid; if so, they were children of the testatrix's daughter according to the strictest construction of the word; and (2) that, even if the marriage were invalid, the language of the will was such as to include them under the designation "children" as used in the will of the testatrix. Considering the second point first, it was based on the doctrine laid down by Lord Cairns in Hill v. Crook, 22 W. R. 137, L. R. 6 H. L. 265, and by the Court of Appeal in In re Jodrell, 38 W. R. 721, 44 Ch. D. 590—viz., that the will was to be taken as a dictionary to find the meaning of the terms used by the testatrix. If, for example, the testatrix had referred to her daughter Eugenie as the wife of Mr. Montefiore (as she had done with respect to her two sisters), there would have been no difficulty in holding that the children of Eugenie must include those who had sprung from the union referred to. Unfortunately, nothing of the kind was found in the testamentary dispositions of the testatrix. What were relied on were the expressions found in the codicil, and particularly the confirmation of the will found in it. If in the will or codicil anything had been found showing an indication in the will that the testatrix regarded her daughter Eugenie as having left children or issue her surviving, I would willingly have applied the rule to which I have referred; but after careful examination of those instruments I have failed to find anything which satisfies me that the testatrix used the word "issue" or "children" otherwise than in their proper legal meaning, and I am unable to decide on that ground in favour of the children.

(a.) Reported by PAUL STRICKLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

I have now to consider the first point—viz., the validity of the marriage. It was not disputed that the marriage of an uncle and niece, being British subjects domiciled in England, was void under the statute 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54. That depended on the enactments contained in 32 Hen. 8, c. 38, as judicially interpreted, the leading authorities being Coke's 2nd Inst., p. 683; Reg. v. Chadwick, 11 Q. B. 173; and Brook v. Brook, 9 W. R. 461, 9 H. L. Cas. 193. The last-mentioned case established that such a marriage was void although celebrated in a country where it would be legal as between persons domiciled there. It was said, however, that none of those statutes had any application to Jews, and it was contended that two such persons, if of the Jewish persuasion, might according to English law contract a valid marriage. There was no decision to that effect. The argument was based on the language of Lord Stowell in the case of Lindo v. Belisario, 1 Hagg. Cons. 216, and on that of the Legislature in various Acts of Parliament dealing with the subject of marriage. The history of the Jews in this country, so far as it was material to the present question, was given in a note to the report of Lindo v. Belisario, 1 Hagg. Cons. 217. From that time forward (1673) the Jews appeared to have been permitted to reside in England and to practise the rites of their religion, and in particular to solemnize marriages according to their own usages. For a long time no legislative provision was made on the subject of their marriages; but by section 18 of Lord Hardwicke's Act (26 Geo. 2, c. 33), intituled "An Act for the better preventing of clandestine marriages," it was enacted that "nothing in this Act contained shall extend to that part of Great Britain called Scotland, nor to any marriages among the people called Quakers, or amongst the persons professing the Jewish religion, where both the parties to any such marriage shall be of the people called Quakers, or persons professing the Jewish religion respectively, nor to any marriages solemnized beyond the seas." In that state of things the case of Lindo v. Belisario was decided. It was the first case in which the validity of a Jewish marriage was considered by an ecclesiastical court. In dealing with it Lord Stowell used language which would not have been inappropriate if the question before him had related to the capacity of the contracting parties as well as to the formalities of the marriage. In fact, however, the question related to the formalities only; it was one of intricacy and difficulty, and I am unable to find anything in the judgments which indicated that the observations to which I have referred were directed to anything beyond that which the learned judge was called on to decide; certainly I cannot look on them as an authority for the proposition that the capacity of members of the Jewish faith to contract marriage was regulated by their own law and not by the law of this country. The question in Reg. v. Millis, 10 Cl. & Fin. 534, was also one of form, and to it the remarks of Lord Brougham (see p. 736) and Lord Campbell (see p. 794), cited in argument, appear to have been addressed.

I now turn to the language of the statutes. Reliance was chiefly placed on that found in 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 2, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 72, s. 5, where it was enacted that persons professing the Jewish religion may continue to contract and solemnize marriage according to the usages of the said persons. It was contended that, inasmuch as contract was spoken of in addition to solemnization, it must be taken that the Legislature had treated as valid, marriages contracted in accordance with the rules of the Jewish law, not merely as regards the form of marriage, but also as to the capacity of the contracting parties. I am unable to arrive at that conclusion. In the first place, the word "usages" was more apt with regard to matters of form than in relation to capacity of parties. Next, both these statutes (like 26 Geo. 2, c. 33) dealt with the formalities of marriage, and an enactment with respect to capacity was, primâ facie at least, beyond the purview of them. Again, in the statute 10 & 11 Vict. c. 58, passed for the express purpose of removing doubts as to the validity of the marriages of Quakers and Jews "solemnized according to the usages of those denominations respectively," it was declared and enacted "that all marriages so solemnized as aforesaid were and are good in law to all intents and purposes whatsoever"; that declaration and enactment related to form only. It was further to be remarked that, although in the statutes just mentioned, as in many others relating to formalities of marriage (as, for example, 4 Geo. 4, c. 76; 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119; and 61 & 62 Vict. c. 58), there was found an express exception of Jewish marriages, there was no such exception in 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54, which dealt with capacity. In my opinion, therefore, the marriage in question was not valid according to the law of England, and the fund must be distributed on the footing of the testatrix's daughter Eugenie having died in her lifetime without leaving issue.

Solicitors, Emanuel & Simmonds.

---

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } May 29; June 1.

In re CHANT.
CHANT v. LEMON. (a.)

Will—Construction—"Die unmarried"—Secondary meaning.

Testatrix by her will directed her trustees to divide a certain fund between two beneficiaries if her brother "shall die unmarried and without leaving any children or a child who shall attain twenty-one years." The brother died leaving a widow, but no child, surviving him.

Held, that, in this case, the words "die unmarried" meant "die without leaving a wife," and that there was, therefore, an intestacy.

Summons.

The testatrix A. M. Chant by her will gave a life interest in her residuary real and personal estate (subject to the discretion of trustees) to her brother Frederick Chant, and after his death for his children, "but if he shall die unmarried and without leaving any children or a child who shall attain twenty-one years," then the trust fund was to be divided between Kitty Lemon and Sarah Hawkins. Frederick Chant, who survived the testatrix, died leaving a widow but never having had a child.

The question to be decided was whether there was an intestacy or whether Kitty Lemon and Sarah Hawkins were entitled to the contingent gift.

R. J. Parker, for next-of-kin.—It is clear that the meaning of the words "die unmarried" here is "die without having a wife at the time of death." By adopting this reading only can the phrase be made intelligible.

He referred to the cases of Doe v. Cooke, 7 East 269;

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Doe v. Rawding, 2 B. & Ald. 441; In re Sander's Trusts, 14 W. R. 576, L. R. 1 Eq. 675.

Ingle Joyce, for the representative of Kitty Lemon.

Lightwood, for the representative of Sarah Hawkins.—The primary meaning of "die unmarried" is "die without having been married." This case is covered by Maberley v. Strode, 3 Ves. 450; Bell v. Phyn, 7 Ves. 453; In re Sergeant, 32 W. R. 987, 26 Ch. D. 575; Grey v. Pearson, 5 W. R. 454, 6 H. L. Cas. 61.

COZENS-HARDY, J.—Two meanings might be attached to the words "die unmarried." The primary meaning was "die having never been married." That meaning did not fit in with the context in the will before the court. The secondary meaning was "die without leaving a wife." This appeared to be the correct reading in the present case, as it made clear the meaning of all the words in the clause. There was, therefore, an intestacy, and there must be a declaration accordingly.

Solicitors for the applicants, Geare, Son, & Pease.

Solicitors for the respondents, Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co.; Sole, Turner, & Knight, for Blake, Reed, & Lapthorn, Portsmouth.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Grantham and Channell, JJ.) June 14.

BENNETT (Appellant) v. HARDING (Respondent). (a.)

Metropolis — Public health — Sanitary conveniences — Stableyard — "Workplace" — Persons "in attendance" — Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 38.

Section 38 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, provides that every factory, workshop, and workplace shall be provided with sufficient and suitable accommodation in the way of sanitary conveniences, regard being had to the number of persons employed in or in attendance at such building.

Held, that the stable-yard and stables of a cab proprietor, where a number of men were employed as horse-keepers and cab-cleaners, and where cabdrivers were daily in attendance for the hiring of cabs and horses, constituted a "workplace" within the meaning of the section, and that the cabdrivers were "in attendance" at the premises, and that sanitary conveniences must be provided for the persons employed in the premises and for the cabdrivers who came there to hire cabs.

Case stated by Mr. Bros, metropolitan police magistrate sitting at Clerkenwell police-court.

The respondent Harding was summoned to answer the complaint made by the appellant Bennett, sanitary inspector to the Holborn District Board of Works, which charged that the respondent, being the occupier or owner of the premises 9, 10, 16, 17, 18, 27, 35, 38, and 44, Ormond-yard, within the district of the board, did, on the 1st of January, 1900, unlawfully fail to provide sufficient and suitable accommodation in the way of sanitary conveniences for the persons employed in or in attendance at the above-mentioned premises, contrary to the provisions of section 38 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891.

The magistrate dismissed the complaint, but without costs.

Section 38 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), is as follows: "Every factory, workshop, and workplace, whether erected before or after the passing of this Act, shall be provided with sufficient and suitable accommodation in the way of sanitary conveniences, regard being had to the number of persons employed in or in attendance at such building . . ."

(2) "Where it appears to a sanitary authority that this section is not complied with in the case of any factory, workshop, or workplace, the sanitary authority shall, by notice served on the owner or occupier of such factory, workshop, or workplace, require him to make the alterations and additions necessary to secure such compliance, and if the person served with such notice fails to comply therewith he shall be liable to a fine not exceeding twenty pounds, and to a fine not exceeding forty shillings for every day after conviction during which the non-compliance continues."

At the hearing of the complaint the following facts were proved or admitted:

That the appellant was the sanitary inspector to the Holborn Board of Works.

That the board of works was the sanitary authority for the Holborn district, and had duly authorized the appellant to serve a notice as required by section 38 (2) of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, upon the respondent, and to make the complaint.

That the premises consisted of ten stables and a stable-yard, and were in the occupation of the respondent, who is a cab proprietor in a large way of business.

That the respondent kept upon these premises 110 horses and a large number of cabs of which he was the owner.

That the respondent employed upon the premises a number of men as horse-keepers and cab-cleaners for the purpose of attending to the horses and cabs.

That the business of the respondent consisted in letting out these cabs and horses by the day to drivers, and that the cabdrivers were daily in attendance at the premises for the purpose of hiring the horses and cabs, changing horses and returning the horses and cabs after use.

That the horse-keepers and cab-cleaners when not at work lived with their respective families in different rooms having sanitary conveniences, situate over different portions of the premises.

That in the stables and stable-yard there was no accommodation in the way of sanitary conveniences for the horse-keepers and cab-cleaners employed therein.

That many complaints of the want of sanitary conveniences had been made to the appellant and to the board.

It was contended before the magistrate on behalf of the appellant (a) that the premises were a "workplace" within the meaning of section 38 (1) of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891; and (b) that as the respondent had after receiving the notice required by section 38 (2) failed to comply therewith, or to provide any accommodation at the premises for the use of persons employed in, or in attendance thereat, he was liable to the penalties imposed by section 38 (2) of the Act.

It was contended on behalf of the respondent (a) that the premises were not a "workplace" within the meaning of the Act; and (b) that if, contrary to the respondent's contention, the premises were a "workplace" within the meaning of the Act, then that the cabdrivers were not "in attendance" at the premises within the meaning of the Act.

The magistrate dismissed the complaint, as he was of opinion that the premises were not a "workplace" ejusdem generis with factory or workshop; and further, that cabdrivers were only in attendance as customers, and there was no duty thrown upon the respondent to provide sanitary conveniences for them.

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., Barrister-at-Law.

The questions for the opinion of the court were: first, whether the stables and stable-yard were a "workplace" within the meaning of the Act; and, secondly, whether cabdrivers were persons "in attendance at such building" within the meaning of the Act.

The arguments were similar to those before the magistrate.

Courthope Munroe (W. Leese with him), for the appellant.

Macmorran, Q.C. (Ellis Griffiths with him), for the respondent.

GRANTHAM, J.—In my judgment the learned magistrate was wrong as to the meaning of the expression "workplace," and as to those "in attendance" there. We think he ought to have convicted the respondent. The magistrate has found in the case that these cabdrivers were daily in attendance at the premises. We all know that a business of this kind does not consist merely in the cabdriver taking out one horse and one cab in the morning and not coming back with the horse and cab till the night. The cabdriver requires a change of horses during the day. He goes in the morning, goes back again during the day, and returns in the evening, and so on. I cannot suggest any class of men who would be more likely to need this accommodation than these cabdrivers while waiting about in the stable-yard. I think they were in attendance there, and I think the magistrate was right in so holding, but I think he was wrong when he said that because they were in attendance as customers they were not in attendance within the meaning of the Act. They were in attendance there, and sanitary conveniences ought to have been provided for them. The other question is whether this was a "workplace" or not. I think it was, and I cannot imagine a word more suitable to describe this place than the term "workplace." Horse-keepers and cab-cleaners come there and work there all day, and the work is all done in a limited area. In my opinion this was no ground for saying that to be a workplace it must be ejusdem generis with the two things before it—namely, factory and workshop, and that it must be a place where something is manufactured. To adopt that view would be to largely take away the value of the section. In my judgment these premises were a workplace, and the cabdrivers were in attendance there within the meaning of this section. The respondent ought therefore to have been convicted.

CHANNELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. The first question is whether this stable-yard is a workplace. Even assuming that the doctrine of ejusdem generis applies—and I do not feel sure that it does apply—but assuming that it does apply, that does not mean a similarity with a factory or workshop in the work that is done there, but it must mean a similarity with reference to the objects of the Act of Parliament, a similarity in keeping persons employed on the premises for a considerable length of time, but not a similarity in respect of the work done in a factory or workshop. A workplace must be a place where work is done permanently and where persons assemble together to do work permanently. That being so, these stables are, as it seems to me, a workplace within the meaning of this section. Then someone or other—it is not clear from the Act whether it is to be the magistrate or the sanitary authority—has to judge of the sufficiency of the accommodation in the way of these sanitary conveniences. He has, in the first place, to take into account all the persons who are employed there, and when he has considered the sufficiency of the accommodation for those employed there, then he has to consider the number of those who are in attendance there, and who are likely to be there for a considerable length of time, so as to be likely to use these conveniences. Those "in attendance" mean persons who are in fact upon the premises for a considerable length of time, and they are not the less in attendance because they are there as customers. The purpose or object for which they are on the premises does not seem to me to affect the question whether they are in attendance there or not. I had some doubt as to whether the case finds that these cabdrivers were on the premises for a sufficient length of time to entitle us to say that they were in attendance, but the purpose of their being there as customers does not prevent them from being in attendance if they otherwise would be so. I think, therefore, that the magistrate ought to have convicted the respondent.

Appeal allowed. Case remitted to the magistrate.

Solicitor for the appellant, Matthew H. Hale.

Solicitors for the respondent, Marpole & Marpole.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Grantham and Channell, JJ.) June 12.

MACKRELL AND ANOTHER v. JUSTICES OF BRENTFORD DIVISION OF MIDDLESEX. (a.)

Licensing law—Beerhouse—Licence—Privileged house—No beer sold in beerhouse—Application to renew licence—Jurisdiction of justices to refuse renewal—Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 27), ss. 8, 19.

A beerhouse was licensed prior to May, 1869, and remained continuously licensed down to 1898, but no beer had been sold in the house for many years. A new tenant, who had become the occupier of the premises and who intended to carry on the business of the beerhouse, but to whom a transfer of the licence had been refused, applied at the annual licensing meeting for a renewal of the licence.

Held, that the justices had no jurisdiction to refuse the renewal on the ground that no beer had been sold in the house or that the house was not required by the neighbourhood, but that they were limited by section 19 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, to the four grounds specified in section 8 of that Act.

Case stated by the court of quarter sessions for the county of Middlesex.

An appeal was heard by the court of quarter sessions against a refusal of the licensing justices for the Brentford Division to grant by way of renewal a beerhouse certificate in respect of the Brittania Tap beerhouse, Twickenham, to one Shepherd, the occupier of the premises. On this appeal Mackrell, the owner of the premises, and Shepherd, the occupier, were the appellants, and the licensing justices of the Brentford division were the respondents.

The following facts were proved or admitted:

The premises were premises in respect of which a beerhouse licence for the sale by retail of beer and cider to be consumed on the premises was in force on the 1st of May, 1869, and such licence had been (within the meaning of section 7 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1870) continuously renewed from time to time down to and including the year

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., Barrister-at-Law.

1898, but, notwithstanding such constant renewals, no beer had been sold on the premises for at least twenty-eight years. No signboard was exhibited, nor was there any indication of a licence except that the words "Licensed, &c.," were printed in small letters over the door. The premises were thirty yards back from the high road in an enclosed yard, and there were no fittings on the premises for the sale of beer.

The licence for the premises had from the year 1895 been held by one Harbor, the then resident occupier, but no beer had been sold there by Harbor, nor had any beer been sold by retail for many years before. He was not expected to trade there and had no instructions to do so, but he acted as manager for his employers, who were brewers of Twickenham.

Harbor sought to transfer his licence to one Shepherd in January, 1899, at special transfer sessions, and the licensing justices then first became aware that the licensee (Harbor) had failed to exercise his rights as to the sale of beer on the premises. The transfer was refused as not coming within section 4 of the Alehouse Act, 1828, by which the justices are to licence such persons intending to keep inns theretofore kept by other persons being about to remove from such inns."

The occupation of the premises by Harbor was as tenant to the lessees of the premises, who were brewers, and for whom he acted as manager. These brewers were the owners of other licensed premises, and the Britannia Tap beerhouse was for many years used only as a residence for their managers, and since 1895 as the sole residence of Harbor, and as a wholesale store for beer of his employers. No information was ever given to the justices of these facts, and the renewals were granted in ignorance of the fact that no trade was carried on.

In 1898 the lease of the brewers expired, and the appellant Mackrell became by purchase the owner of the premises; and on the 4th of January, 1899, Mackrell let the premises at the rent of £30 per annum upon a yearly tenancy to the appellant Shepherd, who entered into occupation of the premises (which were vacated by Harbor) under the lease, and was at the time of the refusal of the certificate, and still is, the occupier.

In January, 1899, an application for the transfer of the licence was made, and on the above facts being known, was refused, on the authority of Reg. v. Cotham, 46 W. R. 512, [1898] 1 Q. B. 802.

At the general annual licensing meeting for the Brentford division on the 7th of March, 1899, the appellant Shepherd applied for a renewal to himself, as real resident holder and occupier of the premises, of the certificate previously granted to and held by Harbor.

Notice of objection to such renewal was given by direction of the justices on the grounds that no beer had been sold on the premises for many years, and that the beerhouse was not required for the needs of the neighbourhood.

No objection was made on any of the four grounds applicable under the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, s. 8, to beerhouse licences granted prior to the year 1869.

The application for the renewal was refused by the licensing justices at their adjourned meeting on the 30th of March, and the appellants appealed to the quarter sessions against the refusal of the renewal of the certificate.

It was contended by the respondents (1) that the application of Shepherd, being one for the renewal of the certificate, the appellant or his predecessor must be a person "keeping" an inn within section 1 of the Alehouse Act, 1828, and that this applicant was not such a person; (2) that the matter was governed by the case of Reg. v. Cotham; (3) that as no beer had been sold upon the premises by the previous occupiers, there was no jurisdiction under the Alehouse Act, 1828, or under the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, to grant to the appellant Shepherd a renewal of the certificate; (4) that the previous renewal purporting to be granted under section 1 of the Alehouse Act, 1828, at the annual licensing sessions in 1898, was a void and empty form, and in law could not be renewed in 1899; (5) that there must be some actual keeping or user, without which the licensing justices had no jurisdiction to exercise their powers under the Licensing Act, and that it was against public policy to renew the form of a certificate to exercise a privileged trade when it was not intended to be exercised.

It was contended for the appellants that the premises were a privileged beerhouse within the meaning of sections 8 and 19 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, and section 7 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1870, and that a renewal could only be lawfully refused on one or more of the four grounds mentioned in section 8 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869; that the case of Reg. v. Cotham was not applicable, as there the application was made, not for a renewal under section 1 of the Alehouse Act, 1828, but for a transfer under section 4 of that Act, which requires a transferor to have been a person about to remove from premises kept as licensed premises, and in the case of Reg v. Cotham the transferor had not lived in the licensed premises for many years, such premises being kept by other persons as a draper's shop.

The appellants therefore alleged that the present application was distinguishable from the above case as made under a different section of the Act of 1828, and by a person duly qualified by residence.

The justices found as a fact that no beer had been sold by retail, and that the successive licensees had not carried on, nor had they the intention, nor could they have, carried on an inn on the premises as licensed, and that such licence was merely colourable.

The justices were of opinion that Reg. v. Cotham was, notwithstanding the difference as to occupation, in principle applicable to this case, and they held that as no beer had been sold on the premises under previous certificates for so long a time, such premises had not been kept as a beerhouse, that no use had been made of the licence, that the successive transferees had not intended to keep, and had not kept, an inn, and that therefore there was no jurisdiction to grant a certificate by way of renewal to the applicant Shepherd, notwithstanding that he was the occupier of the premises at the time of the application.

The quarter sessions, therefore, dismissed the appeal.

The question for the court was whether the justices were right in so holding, or whether they were limited in refusing the renewal of the certificate to the four grounds specified in section 8 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, or whether they were justified in law in dismissing the appeal.

Bruce Williamson, for the appellants.—The quarter sessions decided the case entirely on Reg. v. Cotham. They were wrong in so doing, as that case has no application at all to a case like the present. In Reg. v. Cotham the application was made, not for a renewal as in the present case, but for a transfer under section 4 of the Act of 1828, and the licence had previously been held in the name of a person who had not resided in the premises for ten years; so that the previous holder of the licence did not reside on the premises at all, so as to bring his case within section 4. The present is a totally different case, as the applicant is the resident occupier, and the application is not for a transfer, but for a renewal. It is made by a person to whom a transfer was refused. He was not the holder of the previous licence, and it is not necessary that he should be so. He was the tenant and occupier, and as such he was entitled to apply for a renewal though he was not the licensed person and though a transfer had been refused to him: Symons v. Wedmore, 42 W. R. 301, [1894] 1 Q. B. 401. This was a privileged beerhouse, so that section 19 of the Act of 1869 applies, and the justices therefore have no option, but are bound to renew the licence unless on one or more of the four grounds specified in section 8. Not selling beer on the premises is not one of those grounds, and is therefore not a ground on which the renewal can be refused. The case clearly comes within Symons v. Wedmore, which shows that Shepherd was entitled to the renewal although he was not the holder of the licence, and a transfer to him had been refused.

The respondent justices did not appear.

GRANTHAM, J.—In this case it is strange that the licensing laws should have left altogether out of sight a case of this kind, whether the licensing justices are bound to renew a beerhouse licence year after year, although no beer is sold on the premises, and although the holder of the licence may not intend to sell beer there. That, however, is not exactly this case, and we have to determine this case upon its own particular facts. The question is, when a house has been licensed as a beerhouse in 1869, and has been continuously licensed ever since, and a person applies for the renewal of the licence who bonâ fide intends to carry on the business there, whether or not the justices have power to go outside the four grounds specified in section 8 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, and refuse the renewal because no beer has been sold there for a long period, or because the house is not required for the needs of the neighbourhood. In my judgment they have no power to refuse the renewal on any such grounds. Section 19 is clear to show that in the case of these privileged beerhouses the renewals cannot be refused except on one or more of the four grounds. I refer to the case to see the grounds on which this licence was refused. It says: "Notice of objection to such renewal was given by the direction of the justices on the grounds that no beer had been sold on the premises for many years, and that the beerhouse was not required for the needs of the neighbourhood. No objection was made on any of the four grounds applicable under the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, s. 8." Suppose that only one year, or even a few months only, had elapsed since the sale of beer on the premises, could the justices have refused the licence on that ground? I think it would not have been a ground for refusing, and they have weakened their case by saying that the house was not required by the neighbourhood. That is not a reason which they can properly take into account. I think the case comes under section 19, and that we are bound by section 19. That section has created a class of privileged houses, and I see no reason for holding that this house has forfeited that privilege. I think, therefore, that both the licensing justices and the quarter sessions were wrong in refusing this licence. They ought to have granted the renewal, and this appeal will therefore be allowed.

CHANNELL, J.—I have come to the same conclusion. It seems to me that the applicants are entitled, by section 19 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, to have the renewal. That section provided that in the case of these beerhouses the renewal should not be refused except on the four grounds mentioned in section 8. That section preserved those rights for one year only, but in the following year the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1870, in section 7, applies the provisions of section 19 to cases where the licences have been continuously renewed from year to year. Since that Act it seems to me that a person who has got a privileged licence under the Act of 1869, which has been continuously renewed, can come and ask for a renewal, and that such renewal can only be refused on one or more of the four grounds. The fact that no beer has been sold on the premises for a long period is not one of those grounds, and is not a ground for refusing the renewal. On the authority of Symons v. Wedmore the present tenant of this house was in a position to come at the end of the year and ask for a renewal, though he was not in a position to get a transfer. I think his rights were preserved, and that he could come under section 19 of the Act of 1869, as extended by section 7 of the Act of 1870, and ask for a renewal, which could only be refused on the four grounds. The justices were therefore wrong in refusing it upon other grounds. I think they were also mistaken in holding that Reg. v. Cotham applied. That case merely shows that the transfer machinery does not apply to such a case as the present.

Appeal allowed. Case remitted to the justices.

Solicitors for the appellants, Charles Robinson & Co.

---

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Q. B. Div. (Wright, J.) — June 12.

In re LANE-FOX.
Ex parte THE TRUSTEE. (a.)

Bankruptcy — Voluntary settlement — 13 Eliz. c. 5— Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 47.

Where a voluntary settlement has been executed more than two years prior to the bankruptcy, and the settlor was at the time of the execution of such settlement able to pay all his debts without the aid of the property comprised in the settlement, it will not be set aside, except upon proof of actual intent to defraud future creditors on the part of the settlor or the trustees of the settlement.

Motion by the trustee in the bankruptcy of Miss Louisa Emma Lane-Fox to set aside a settlement executed by the bankrupt on the 30th of January, 1891.

Miss Lane-Fox came of age upon the 25th of January, 1891, and thereupon became entitled to about £15,000, not subject to the control of any settlement or any trustee. She was recommended by her uncle, with whom she resided, and by other relatives to make a settlement for her own benefit, and she accordingly executed the deed now sought to be avoided upon the 30th of January, 1891. By this deed she conveyed to trustees the stocks, funds, and securities set out in the schedule thereto annexed, upon trust at their discretion to convert and invest as therein mentioned, and out of the moneys coming to their hands, whether capital or income, to pay her present and future debts as they might think fit, and during her life, in their absolute discretion, pay and apply the income of the trust premises to or for her benefit or the benefit of any husband or issue of hers. Any surplus income was to be accumulated. After her death the trust premises were to be held in trust for her issue attaining twenty-one or marrying as she should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment for all her children, and in default of children for such persons as she should when discovert by deed or will, or when covert by will, appoint, and in default of appointment for her next-of-kin according to the Statutes of Distribution.

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The settlement contained a power of revocation, with the consent of the trustees, of all or any of the trusts.

At the time of the execution of the settlement sufficient money was kept out of settlement to enable Miss Lane-Fox to pay her then existing debts, so she was absolutely solvent when she executed the deed without the aid of the money thereby settled. She subsequently became very extravagant, and the trustees on two occasions consented to revocation of the trusts, and raised sums out of the settled funds to pay the debts. Finally they refused to raise any more sums out of the settled funds, and on the 14th of February, 1900, Miss Lane-Fox filed her own petition with the object, as she admitted, of avoiding the settlement.

She was adjudicated bankrupt, and a trustee was appointed who moved to set aside the deed under section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, but upon it being proved that Miss Lane-Fox was solvent when she executed the deed in 1891, the trustee obtained leave to amend his notice of motion and sought to avoid the settlement as fraudulent within 13 Eliz. c. 5 as having been made with intent to defeat or hinder creditors.

Muir Mackenzie, for the trustee in bankruptcy.

P. M. Francke, for Miss Lane-Fox.

Reed, Q.C., and Carrington, for the trustees of the settlement.

WRIGHT, J.—This is a somewhat remarkable case. The trustee in the bankruptcy of Miss Lane-Fox seeks to have it declared that as against him a settlement which she made upon trusts for her own benefit in 1891 is to be treated as void. One of the curious circumstances of the case is that the receiving order was made upon the petition of the lady herself, and her object in making herself bankrupt was to get rid of this settlement; for what reason I need not inquire, whether it is her dislike to her trustees, or her desire to pay her debts, or to get control of her money; but the question is whether this settlement ought to be treated as void or voidable against the trustee. He based his case, in the first instance, on section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, which, however, turned out to have no application whatever, because at the time the settlement was made the lady had, in point of fact, enough money to pay her debts without the aid of the property comprised in the settlement, and the settlement was more than two years old. Then, by leave of the court, the application has been turned into one to avoid the settlement under the statute of Elizabeth or the common law which that statute restated. It seems to me that the law on the subject is this: that in a case like the present—one where there are no existing creditors at the time of the settlement for whom sufficient provision did not remain outside the settlement—it is necessary, in order to avoid the settlement, to show that there was an actual intention to defeat, delay, or hinder future creditors. I think that the law is best laid down in the judgment by Lord Westbury—a great authority in these matters—in the case of Spirett v. Willows, 13 W. R. 329, 34 L. J. Ch. 365, where he lays down two propositions, the first of which has been questioned by Lord Selborne in Freeman v. Pope, 18 W. R. 906, L. R. 5 Ch. App. 538, as being too wide, but the other has not been questioned so far as I am aware.

The first proposition which has been deemed to be too wide is this—I am reading from 34 L. J. Ch., p. 365—"If the debt of the creditor by whom the voluntary settlement is impeached existed at the date of the settlement, and it is shown that the remedy of the creditor is defeated or delayed by the existence of the settlement, it is immaterial whether the debtor was or was not solvent after making the settlement." That has been thought too wide. It does not apply here because the creditors here were not creditors at the date of the settlement. But then comes this passage: "But if a voluntary settlement or deed of gift is impeached by subsequent creditors, whose debts had not been contracted at the date of the settlement, then it is necessary to show either that the settlor made the settlement with express intent to delay, hinder, or defraud creditors, or that after the settlement the settlor had no sufficient means or reasonable anticipation of being able to pay his then existing debts; that is to say, was reduced to a state of insolvency, in which case the law infers that the settlement was made with intent to hinder or defraud the creditors, and is therefore fraudulent and void." I think no decision can be found anywhere inconsistent with the proposition that an honest settlement affirmatively proved to be honest ought not to be set aside merely because some years afterwards it is proved to have the effect of defeating or delaying subsequent creditors. Here the case was one of an inexperienced and probably impulsive young woman just come of age possessed of considerable means—some £15,000, I think—which through one accident or another had come into her control without being under the protection of any settlement or of any trustee. Under those circumstances her friends and relations most properly, most wisely, and most prudently prevailed upon her, and she most properly, wisely, and prudently consented that the money should be put into a kind of settlement. Everything was open, everything was in the ordinary form and in perfect good faith, and to my mind it is affirmatively proved that this was a perfectly honest arrangement, and it is proved before me that there were no debts at the time beyond the amount of the moneys which were in hand to meet them. I think it would be outrageous if a settlement of such a description were to be set aside because afterwards the lady turns out to have become more extravagant than was supposed. Not merely were there no existing debts unprovided for at the time, but there was no reason to apprehend any future embarrassments. The income which she would derive under the settlement would be sufficient for all the probable expenses of a young girl of that class, who might be supposed to be unlikely to wantonly throw away her means. She had no intention of trading, nor is there any circumstance to show that she is within one or other of the very few exceptions which have been established under the general rule as laid down in such cases as Spirett v. Willows and Freeman v. Pope. I think all the cases that have been cited are consistent with what I have said but perhaps the language of the Court of Appeal in the case of Ex parte Mercer, In re Wise, 17 Q. B. D. 290, 34 W. R. Dig. 169, is as strong as any. To the same effect was Vice-Chancellor Kindersley's judgment as far back as the case of Jenkyn v. Vaughan, 4 W. R. 214, 3 Drew. 419; and I think there are many other similar cases.

To my mind the application of the trustee in bankruptcy fails, but it is a case in which I cannot say that he was wrong to investigate the matter. If he had made his application in proper form I do not think he ought to have been made to pay any costs; but here he based his application upon section 47 of the Act of 1883, and he has no evidence to sustain his case under that section, and I think, as he obtained leave to amend only on terms as to costs remaining in my discretion, he ought to pay the costs of this application.

Solicitor for Miss Lane-Fox, F. C. Sydney.

Solicitors for the trustee in bankruptcy, Colyer & Colyer.

Solicitors for the settlement trustees, Darley & Cumberland.

---

Q. B. Div. (Wright, J.) May 21, 28.

In re VAUTIN.

Ex parte THE TRUSTEE. (a.)

Bankruptcy — Fraudulent preference — Repayment of money lent for a special purpose—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 48.

When a debtor, though knowing himself to be insolvent, repays a loan to a creditor in the belief on reasonable grounds that he is bound by contract to return the money, he does not commit a fraudulent preference.

Application by the trustee in the bankruptcy of Claude Vautin for a declaration that a payment of £1,000 made by the bankrupt to the respondent Turner, after the date of the act of bankruptcy on which the receiving order had been made, was a fraudulent preference, and for an order that Turner should hand over such sum of £1,000 to the trustee.

The facts were as follows: Upon the morning of the 27th of October, 1899, Vautin called upon Turner and asked him for a loan of £1,000, representing that that amount, together with £3,000 which he had borrowed upon securities from a financial company, would clear him of all his debts and "make him a free man." Turner gave Vautin a cheque for £1,000 upon the distinct understanding that it should be used together with the £3,000 in clearing Vautin of liability, and that if that should prove impracticable the money should be returned.

Vautin took the cheque and cashed it, but later in the day some unforeseen claims were made against him, he saw that the amount he had been able to borrow would not clear off his liabilities, and decided to leave the country. On his way to the coast, on the evening of the 27th of October, he posted two £500 notes to Turner, who received them on the following morning, after Vautin had committed the act of bankruptcy on which a receiving order was eventually made against him—viz., departing out of England with intent to defeat or delay his creditors.

The receiving order against Vautin was made on the 4th of November, he was adjudicated bankrupt, and Mr. Saffery, the applicant in this motion, was appointed trustee.

Muir Mackenzie and H. Kisch, for the trustee.

Reed, Q.C., and Carrington, for the respondent.

WRIGHT, J.—In this case it seems to me that there are more grounds than one upon which the application fails. In the first place, I come to the conclusion of fact upon the evidence that the bargain between the parties was in substance that this £1,000 should be advanced by Turner by way of supplement to the £3,000 which was advanced by the financial company for the express purpose that it should be used with the £3,000 for clearing off the liabilities of the debtor and making him a free man, and for that purpose only. I accept Mr. Turner's statement that it was part of the understanding between the parties, although he does not allege that it was expressly mentioned, that if that were found impracticable the money was to be returned. Mr. Turner has not been cross-examined, and I am the more disposed to give credence to his evidence because, when the matter was expressly brought to his mind as to whether there was any actual promise to return the money if it could not be applied as intended, he had the candour to say that he did not recollect anything of the sort having been expressly mentioned. If that was the understanding, it seems to me that the case was brought within the authority of Toovey v. Milne, 2 B. & Ald. 683, a case which has been recognized in In re Rogers, Ex parte Holland, 8 Morr. 243, and in the leading case of Bills v. Smith, 13 W. R. 407, and in several other cases. And, in addition to that, I think it not at all immaterial to observe that, if Mr. Turner's statement is correct, part of the contract was that pari passu with the advance of the money there should be a security on shares which the bankrupt was to sell that day for the purpose of providing the security, and he was not to have the money except on the terms that he gave that security. If he did not sell the shares, and consequently did not give the security, he was to return the money. I think that strengthens the view very much that the real nature of the transaction was that the money should be returned unless in all respects the intention of the parties could be carried out. If that is the case, even though the trustee should be held entitled to this money, he would come under a liability to give effect to the arrangement that security was to be given. However that may be, I think the trustee fails on the other ground—namely, the ground of fraudulent preference, as well as on the ground—which is a distinct ground—that the money was advanced for a specific purpose, and did not form part of the general assets of the bankrupt. I think the case as to fraudulent preference fails, because, on the facts as they are stated by Mr. Turner, I come to the conclusion that it is not shown by the trustee that the dominant view with which the £1,000 was repaid was to prefer Mr. Turner. I arrive at that conclusion upon this ground—a ground which, I think, goes somewhat beyond any decided cases—and I state it plainly in order that, if I have gone wrong, I may be set right—and I draw the conclusion from the evidence — that the bankrupt, when he made the repayment of the £1,000 to Mr. Turner, did so in the belief, on reasonable grounds, that he was bound by contract to return the money. I say I doubt if any case goes so far as I am going now, because, irrespective of whether there was a legal contract effected or not, I think the cases justify me in holding that if the bankrupt in good faith and on reasonable grounds believed he was legally bound, then, even if he was not legally bound, that prevents it being a fraudulent preference, because it prevents the preference being the dominant view. I think that doctrine is justified by what is said by the court in Bills v. Smith, as well as by the judgment of the Court of Appeal in New, Prance, & Garrard's Trustee v. Hunting, 45 W. R. 577, [1897] 2 Q. B. 19, and by the House of Lords in Sharp v. Jackson, [1899] A. C. 419. I think, therefore, that this application fails, and must be dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for trustee, Beyfus & Beyfus.

Solicitors for the respondent, Ashurst, Morris, & Co.

---

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). March 9.

FOXWELL v. VAN GRUTTEN. (a.)

Will—Estate tail — Fee expectant in remainder on termination of estate tail—Direction to trustees to convey—Construction—Intestacy—Heir by purchase or by descent.

A testator who died in 1815 by his will gave an equitable estate tail in certain lands to his daughter, and after her death directed his trustees (in whom was the legal estate) to legally convey the said lands unto such heirs of his daughter as should attain twenty-one, and to their several and respective heirs. The testator's daughter died without having barred her estate tail, leaving a son who attained twenty-one. He died in 1894 intestate and unmarried.

Held, that this grandson of the testator took an estate in fee simple under the will, and therefore his heir-at-law was entitled to the property.

Appeal from a decision of the Court of Appeal (A. L. Smith, Rigby, and Collins, L.JJ.), affirming a judgment of Bigham, J.

The appellants brought this action to recover possession of certain lands in the county of Cornwall, claiming as the heirs of William Harris, who died in 1815, or as the heirs of his daughter Mary, who died in 1844.

The respondent claimed as heir of William Hartley, Mary's only child, who died in 1894 unmarried and intestate above the age of twenty-one years.

The case of Van Grutten v. Foxwell (before the House in 1897), 46 W. R. 426, [1897] A. C. 658, had decided that the testator's daughter Mary took an equitable estate tail under her father's will, and the further point of construction was now considered as to whether the testator had given to his grandson on attaining twenty-one an estate in fee simple expectant on the termination of the previous estate tail.

By his will dated the 31st of October, 1804, the testator William Harris devised the property in question to trustees in trust in the first place to have, receive, and take the rents, incomes, issues, and profits of all and singular my said freehold lands and tenements and tyn bounds to and for the use and benefit of such my child or children as shall be living, or wherewith my wife may be ensient at the time of my death, and to pay, apply, and dispose of such rents, incomes, and profits, or such and so much thereof as they my said trustees, or the major part of them, or the survivors and survivor of them, or the heirs of such survivor shall deem right and proper into and about the maintenance and education of such child or children until he, she, or they shall severally and respectively attain the age of twenty-one years, or be married. And from and after such child or children shall have attained the age of twenty-one years or be married then in trust to permit and suffer such child or children as they shall severally attain the said age of twenty-one years or be married to have, receive, and take, if more than one, in equal shares and proportions, the said rents, incomes, and profits of all and singular my said freehold lands, tenements, and hereditaments hereby devised to my said trustees to and for her, his, and their own use and benefit for and during the term of her, his, and their natural life and lives. And if I leave only one child and my wife not ensient, or if ensient and such child or children wherewith she may be ensient shall not be born alive or die before he, she, or they shall attain the age of twenty-one years or be married, then to permit and suffer in like manner such one child to have, receive, and take the said rents and profits of my said freehold lands, tenements, and hereditaments, tyn bounds, and premises to and for her or his sole use and benefit for her and during the term or her or his natural life. And from and immediately after the death of such child or children then my will is that my said trustees shall stand seised and be possessed of all, every, and singular my said freehold lands, tenements, hereditaments, tyn bounds, and premises hereinbefore devised to them in trust unto and to the use of the heirs of the body and bodies of such child or children lawfully begotten; if more than one, to be equally divided between them, such freehold lands, tenements, hereditaments, tyn bounds, and premises to be legally conveyed and assured unto such heirs of my child or children in equal shares as they shall severally and respectively attain the age of twenty-one years or be married, and to their several and respective heirs and assigns for ever.

It was held by the Court of Appeal that the testator's grandson William Hartley took a remainder in fee expectant on the determination of the estate tail given to his daughter, and that such remainder was now vested in the respondent as heir to the grandson William Hartley.

Crackanthorpe, Q.C., and Foote, Q.C., for the appellant.

Haldane, Q.C., T. H. Carson, and Boome, for the respondent.

Their lordships took time to consider their judgment.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—The will of William Harris, the testator in this case, has in its time given occasion for a vast amount of discussion, profitable and otherwise. But, happily, there is very little room for argument in regard to the question which your lordships are now called upon to decide. The point is a short one, and plain enough, I think, if only you are content to take the testator's words as the guide to his meaning, and suppose it possible that the testator meant what he said. The will contains a devise to trustees (who are vested with the legal estate) of all the testator's lands, tenements, and hereditaments upon trust for the testator's children, if more than one, in equal shares as tenants in common in tail, or, if there should be but one child (as in the event happened), upon trust for that only child as tenant in tail. So far the construction of the will has been settled in this House. After the death of such child or children the trustees are directed to convey and assure the said lands, tenements, and hereditaments in fee simple to the heirs special "as they shall severally and respectively attain the age of twenty-one years or be married." The real question seems to be whether that direction is part and parcel of the machinery and apparatus employed by the testator in and about the limitation of the estates or estate tail, or whether it is an independent gift to take effect in favour of designated persons in the line of succession. Judicial opinion is divided on the subject. On the original trial, where the question arose indirectly, the latter view was adopted incidentally by all the members of the Court of Appeal, consisting of Lord Halsbury, C., and Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ. In your lordships' House it found favour with a majority, which included Lord Herschell and Lord Watson. On the rehearing it was supported by Bigham, J., in a very able and lucid judgment, which was approved in the Court of Appeal by A. L. Smith and Rigby, L.JJ. But Lord Davey, on the former occasion, was of a different opinion, and on the rehearing Collins, L.J., expressed "a strong preference" for Lord Davey's view. The learned Lord Justice begins by stating his belief as to what the meaning of the testator really was. He thinks that the testator meant to give a life estate to Mary Harris, who was his only child, and then to give "a remainder in fee simple" to her children. Before it was taken up by the appellants that was once Mr. Haldane's favourite contention. On the former occasion it was put forward as the principal ground of appeal. But then the parties to this litigation seem to me to have acted every now and then just like duellists in a play, dropping and exchanging their weapons, and each in his turn receiving the sharpest thrust from some point which was once his own. I cannot think that Mr. Haldane lost very much when this weapon was forced out of his hand. It is difficult to grasp. And certainly there are serious flaws in it. The gift is to "the heirs of the body or bodies" of the testator's child or children—a technical expression which must be understood in its technical sense, unless it can be shown from the will that the expression was used in another sense, and that other sense can be ascertained. Now, the majority of the noble and learned lords who heard this case originally were satisfied that there was nothing whatever in the will from first to last inconsistent with the words in question having their proper and technical meaning. There was nothing to be rejected, nothing to be modified. But the odd thing about this view is that when you have changed the expression "heirs of the body" into "children" you are further off than ever from an estate in fee simple. At the date when this will was made a gift of lands, tenements, and hereditaments to a designated person, was a gift for life merely, and not a gift in fee. It is difficult to suppose that the person who drew the will was ignorant of an elementary rule of law which at that time was common knowledge with all lawyers, good, bad, and indifferent. The opinion of the Lord Justice as to the testator's real meaning is, I think, the key to his judgment. "What construction," he asks, "is to be placed on the concluding words of the clause directing the trustees to convey the legal estate at a given date to the persons whom he had intended to make the object of his bounty?" So framed the question bears on its face its own answer. But I need hardly remind your lordships that there is no provision in the will directing the trustees "to convey the legal estate." The expression which the learned judge attributes to the testator seems to be taken from a passage in one of the judgments in the former case where it was used to explain and enforce a particular view of the testator's meaning. If you restore the testator's own words, the question will then run: "What construction is to be placed on the concluding words of the clause directing the trustees to convey the testator's lands, tenements, and hereditaments at a given time to the persons whom he had intended to make the objects of his bounty?" Now, if you assume that the testator was under the impression that he had already given the proposed objects of his bounty an equitable "remainder in fee simple," the direction in question could only be intended, as the Lord Justice says, "to clothe these persons with the legal estate." There would be nothing upon which the direction could operate except the bare legal estate. But it is always dangerous, I think, to speculate on the unexpressed meaning of a testator. And there is much force in Lord Cranworth's observation that "it is not the duty of a court of justice to search for the testator's meaning otherwise than by fairly interpreting the words he has used": Abbott v. Middleton, 7 H. L. Cas. 68, 7 W. R. H. L. Dig. 6. There is one part of the judgment of Collins, L.J., against which I feel bound to enter a respectful protest. The learned Lord Justice alleges that his view has the support of the Lord Chancellor and Lopes, L.J., founding himself, or, rather, speculating upon, some interlocutory observations thrown out by them in the course of the argument, and ignoring altogether the language of their considered judgment. It would, perhaps, be sufficient for the purposes of the present case if I were to content myself with pointing out what really took place during the argument, and what was really said in the judgment. The Lord Chancellor expressed no opinion of his own. All that the Lord Chancellor did was to put into plain and pointed language a proposition which the learned counsel addressing the court was aiming at with trope and metaphor. On that Lopes, L.J., no doubt said something in approval of the proposition. "That is," he said, "exactly how it strikes me. That seems a reasonable way of considering the words." First impressions are always interesting, but sometimes second thoughts are best. In his written judgment Lopes, L.J., points to "the provision that the trustees are ultimately to convey the fee simple to the beneficiaries," and concludes that they had the legal estate vested in them throughout—"that is," he adds, "until it became their duty to convey it in fee simple to those who were to be absolutely entitled." Now, your lordships will notice that Lopes, L.J., gives due effect to the words of limitation in the direction to the trustees. The conveyance, he says, was to be made in "fee simple." But more than that—it was to be made "to those who were to be absolutely entitled." What does that mean? It does not, of course, refer to acquisition of title by a disentailing assurance, for such an assurance would have got rid of the direction to the trustees as well as of the estate tail. It must mean "absolutely entitled" under the provisions of the will. But the only provision in the will under which the heirs special could become absolutely entitled is the gift to be found in the direction to convey. When you bear in mind that Lopes, L.J., was apparently under the impression that the gift of the reversion in fee to a tenant in tail would operate to destroy the tenancy in tail and vest in the donee an immediate estate of fee simple in possession, his meaning is perfectly plain. It differs in nothing, except in that one mistaken point, from the opinion of Lord Herschell and those who agreed with him. Lord Herschell asks: "What is there inconsistent with the creation of estates tail that the testator should direct his trustees to convey the reversion in fee to the heirs of the tenants in tail at a particular time?" Lopes, L.J., speaks of the time when it would become "their duty to convey it in fee simple to those who were to be absolutely entitled." The language is all but identical. With the exception to which I have referred the meaning is precisely the same. Rigby, L.J., expressed himself in very similar language. He observes that the extent of the legal estate vested in the trustees is shown to be nothing less than the fee simple "by the direction that the property is 'when the trust for maintenance ceases to be legally conveyed in fee simple.'" And the Lord Chancellor agreed with each of his colleagues. So there can be no doubt as to the opinion of every member of the court. But to come to a matter of far greater importance than the opinion of individual judges on a question of construction, I must say I rather doubt the expediency of treating a casual remark thrown out in the course of the argument by a judge, however eminent, as something committing him to an opinion or as being in any way binding upon anybody else. A judge who interposes in the course of counsel's address does so, I should imagine, either to invite attention to some difficulty which occurs to him at the moment, and which counsel ought to have an opportunity of meeting, or else to elicit some information which he thinks, rightly or wrongly, will not come from counsel in due course, or perhaps to direct and shorten the argument, though I know some people fancy that interruptions from the bench have not the effect of shortening arguments—at least not always. But the very last thing that a judge means to do when he interrupts counsel is to express an opinion on any matter still open to debate. When the case was before your lordships on the former occasion I intimated my view on the present question. It was necessary to consider the meaning and effect of the clause. Almost every judge before whom the case came took it into consideration, though in the result it did not form a ground of the decision of the House. I am not going to repeat what I said then. I am quite prepared to accept the judgment of Bigham, J., as expressing more fully and more clearly the view which I was led to take. I would only venture to add a very few words. On a critical examination of the will I am inclined to think that the clause now in question did not form part of the instrument as originally prepared. It seems probable that originally the gift to the collateral relations was intended to take effect in every case on the determination of the previous limitations. If this suggestion be well founded it would account for the way in which the direction to the trustees is introduced. It was introduced, I think, by way of amendment, and causes perhaps a little awkwardness in the run of the sentence, as amendments so introduced frequently do. However that may be, when once the testator determined that the gift to the collaterals was not to take effect if any one of the tenants in tail married or attained twenty-one, the question must have suggested itself—What is to become of the reversion in fee if that condition is fulfilled? Surely the most obvious and the most natural thing for the testator to do was to give it in that case to his own issue fulfilling the prescribed conditions. The learned counsel who spoke second for the appellants argued, as I understood him, that the reversion expectant on the determination of an estate tail was so shadowy and trumpery a thing that no testator would be likely to concern himself about it at all. I do not think that this is the general opinion among people who have property of that sort to dispose of. Certainly this testator, who evidently bestowed much thought and care on the disposition of his property, did concern himself about this reversion, and that in a very special manner. The learned counsel for the appellant, adopting the argument of Collins, L.J., laid much stress on the words "such heirs." The Lord Justice observes that "the words 'heirs of the body' being once decided to be words of limitation only, the words 'such heirs' following cannot, without undue straining, be interpreted to mean individuals who are to be the objects of a new gift." Now I must say that I cannot follow that observation. No doubt the words "heirs of the body" have been decided to be words of limitation only. What difference could it make if they were words of purchase also? Heirs of the body who take by descent are just as much human beings and just as much individuals as heirs of the body who take by purchase. If a testator chooses to make a gift to heirs of the body taking by descent "as and when they shall attain twenty-one or be married," I cannot see what difficulty there is in ascertaining the persons intended. If the clause is to be construed as meaning only that the trustees are to convey the legal estate when their duties have come to an end there is no difficulty about the matter. But the advocates of that construction contend that if it is the reversion in fee which is to be conveyed, and not a bare legal estate, a sort of mist or darkness descends upon the scene, and no one can find the persons to take, though they are the very same persons who on the other construction would take the legal estate, and are described by the very same words. In my opinion the expression "such heirs" creates no difficulty. It refers to the preceding words, and means, of course, "heirs of the body or bodies of the testator's child or children"—the persons forming as they come into existence the whole line of succession capable of inheriting. But, however numerous they may be, the first in the line on attaining twenty-one or marrying carries off the whole estate or the whole share as the case may be, and there is nothing left for those who come after. That is, I think, the solution of the suggested difficulty. I had thought at one time that the difference of view which has been expressed in this case might possibly have sprung out of the notion which prevailed with the Court of Appeal on the former occasion, that the gift of the reversion in fee to a tenant in tail would have the effect of merging or defeating the tenancy in tail. Certainly, if the gift of the reversion had such an effect, I should have admitted that the limitations in this will were so unmeaning and whimsical that there would have been some difficulty in construing the words of the testator in their natural and ordinary sense. But after the argument which we have heard I rather think that the difference of opinion is due to the very different estimates formed of the capacity of the lawyer who drew this will. It was suggested in argument, and broadly hinted, I think, by the Court of Appeal in the former case, that the lawyer who drew the will was so incompetent that his words were hardly deserving of close and serious attention. On the other hand, there are some who think that the draftsman of this will was a fairly competent lawyer. And I confess I share that opinion. I do not even see any evidence to prove that he did not know or appreciate the rule in Shelley's case, 1 Rep. 88*a*, as well as it was known and appreciated at the time. The will was drawn in what may be called the dark ages, when Lord Eldon confessed that his mind was "overpowered" by the number and perplexity of the decisions. But I think it is extremely likely that the draftsman of the will was not acquainted with the case of Harton v. Harton 7 T. R. 652 which was decided only a short time before the date of the will, and, as far as I can make out, not even reported then.* Certainly it had not then acquired the authority which, in spite of Lord Eldon's criticism and the qualified approval or disapproval of Wigram, V.C., it afterwards acquired. It was the rule laid down in Harton v. Harton, or rather, I should say, the rule derived from that case, which, as it seems to me, upset the draftman's calculations. Another argument addressed to your lordships was that the direction to the trustees might be rejected altogether on the strength of a well-known line of cases which decide that limitations superadded to a gift to heirs of the body which are inconsistent with the devolution of an estate tail are to be rejected. But why are they rejected? They are rejected because they are repugnant to the gift. But no one can say that a gift of the reversion in fee to a tenant in tail (if that be the true construction of the testator's will) is repugnant to the gift of the tenancy in tail. On the contrary, it is perfectly consistent with it. It seems to me that if you construe the will fairly, giving to technical expressions their technical meaning, and to expressions not technical their ordinary and grammatical signification, you have a sensible construction perfectly natural and quite consistent with the scheme of the will. In my opinion the testator meant exactly what he said, and deliberately provided for the event which actually occurred. If I am told that, after all, that is a matter of opinion on which no certain judgment can be pronounced, I can only take refuge in Lord Thurlow's maxim, that "the good sense of all these cases is to believe that, where persons have expressed themselves right, they knew what they meant": Jones v. Morgan, 1 Br. Ch. Cas. 205, at p. 221. I think that the Court of Appeal was perfectly right, and therefore I move your lordships that the appeal be dismissed. Your lordships have been given to understand that an arrangement has been made between the parties as to the costs of the appeal. It will therefore not be necessary to say anything about costs.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Harton* v. Harton was decided in 1798.

Lord MORRIS and Lord SHAND concurred.

Lord DAVEY. — I have endeavoured to consider the point of construction on this will which has now been fully argued, and is directly brought before us for decision, with an open mind, unprejudiced by anything which was said by me on the former occasion. But I am bound to say that I cannot find any sufficient reason for altering the substance of the opinion I then expressed. It has been said that opinions were expressed by both Lord Herschell and Lord Watson on this point in agreement with that of Lord Macnaghten. I need scarcely say that if I found myself at variance with the deliberate judgments of these eminent lawyers as well as that of my noble and learned friend, I would bow to authority and not trouble your lordships with any observations of my own. But the point was not argued at the bar on the previous occasion, and it was not necessary for the judgment then pronounced, because the present respondents were then insisting on the validity of a disentailing deed which, if established, would have barred all subsequent limitations, including the one in question, if it be a new limitation. I therefore feel myself at liberty shortly to state the grounds upon which I adhere to my previous opinion. It is quite true that I was in error in speaking of the opposite construction as operating a defeasance of the estate tail. I used the expression inadvertently in reference to a suggestion to that effect in the judgment of Rigby, L.J. If anything, it is a remainder to take effect on the termination of the estate tail. But that accidental slip does not alter the substance of my opinion, that the words in question do not create a new limitation, but are merely ancillary to the previous limitation, which we have construed to be an estate tail (in the events which happened) in Mary. The words are, "such freehold lands, &c., to be legally conveyed and assured unto such heirs of my child or children in equal shares as they shall severally and respectively attain the age of twenty-one years or be married, and to their several and respective heirs and assigns for ever." The will is obviously drawn by a draftsman who was acquainted with legal phraseology, but not a sufficiently good lawyer to be master of it or know how to use it accurately. A succession of estates is carefully provided for in the will, and in every other instance a new limitation is introduced with the appropriate language for that purpose. The words "to be legally conveyed, &c.," follow immediately after the words "to be equally divided, &c.," which are clearly ancillary to or rather form part of the previous gift to the heirs of the body. So far as the form of the clause goes, it appears to me appropriate for expressing a direction annexed to the previous gift and inappropriate for creating a new gift in succession. Then, again, who are referred to as "such heirs"? According to the scheme of the will and the conception of the testator, they mean a class of persons whom he describes as heirs of the body of his children, and between whom he desired his estate to be divided on their deaths. According to their legal construction the words used by the testator included all the heirs of the body, taken in a course of succession, and, therefore, the rule in Shelley's case applies. But the construction of the clause in question adopted in the courts below appears to me to confine the description in that clause to the first members of the class who attain twenty-one or marry, and so to give a meaning to the words different from that which they bear in the previous gift. This testator did not know or forgot the rule in Shelley's case, and, in my opinion, he has attempted to engraft on words which created an estate tail a direction to convey to the heirs in tail in fee simple. Such a direction is repugnant and may be disregarded, as has been held in a line of cases beginning with Goodright v. Pullyn, 2 Ld. Raym. 1437, and Wright v. Pearson, Amb. 358. I think my noble and learned friend has been too severe in his criticism of the judgment of Collins, L.J. The rule in Shelley's case is a rule of law and not a rule of construction, and in its application frequently overrules the intention plainly expressed on the face of the will where it is one which the law cannot carry into effect. I believe that such is the case on the will before us. It seems to me extravagant to suggest that this testator intended or supposed that his children would take more than a life estate. But the law says otherwise, and must prevail. For the purpose, however, of construing such words as those we have before us, and saying whether they create a new limitation or one to be regarded only as an ancillary provision to the previous limitation, I think it legitimate to look to the intention expressed in the instrument, although it is not one which can be carried into effect modo et forma, and this I understand to be the basis of the learned Lord Justice's argument. The Lord Justice was of course aware that under the old law a gift to one without words of limitation passed only a life estate unless a contrary intention appeared on the will. But I presume that the Lord Justice would have said, if he had been asked, that he found such an intention in the direction to the trustees to convey to the heirs of the body in fee simple. The second point argued by Mr. Crackanthorpe depends on the true construction of the settlement of the 31st of August, 1819, made by Mrs. Hartley on her marriage. It raises questions of some difficulty and nicety. But as I understand that the majority of your lordships are in favour of the respondents on the principal point argued, in which case these questions do not arise, it is unnecessary for me to express any opinion upon them.

Lord BRAMPTON.—I concur in the judgment of Lord Macnaghten, and substantially for the reasons which he has very clearly explained. After much protracted litigation, the only question now remaining in controversy seems to be whether, according to the true construction of that clause in the will of William Harris directing his trustees to convey to the heir of the body of his only daughter the fee simple of the property in dispute, that heir by such gift and conveyance took an estate in fee simple by purchase or by descent either from Mary, his mother, or from the testator, his grandfather. If by purchase, the respondent is entitled to the judgment of this House. If by descent, the appellants are so entitled, for they are the heirs of both Mary and her father, the testator. The testator William Harris died so long ago as the year 1815, seised in fee simple of the estate in question, called Rosewarne, in the county of Cornwall. By his will, made in 1804, he vested in trustees the fee simple of that estate, upon trusts to which I refer only so far as they apply to events as they actually happened, to receive and dispose of the whole income derivable therefrom for the use and benefit of his only child, a daughter Mary, during her lifetime, and after her death to stand seised of the estate in trust unto and to the use of the heir of the body of such daughter, with a direction legally to convey and assure the said estate to such heir on his attaining the age of twenty-one years or being married, and to his heirs and assigns for ever. Mary survived the testator, and married in 1819 one Winchcombe Hartley, by whom she had one child only, William Henry Hartley, who attained the age of twenty-one in 1844, survived his mother, who died in 1868, and himself died in 1894 intestate and without issue. Putting aside altogether this direction to convey the fee simple, an equitable estate in tail was given to Mary Hartley, with remainder to her son William Henry. This estate tail was never in fact barred, and William Henry was only equitable tenant in tail expectant upon the death of his mother until that event happened, when the devise of or the direction to convey the fee simple came into operation. Reading this devise, or direction to convey, in connection with the trusts creating the estate tail, I have come to the conclusion that the testator did not intend it to be a part and parcel of the machinery or language employed for the limitation of the estate tail. It was useless and unnecessary for that purpose. It looks rather as if the testator felt that when Mary died and her son came of age, the object with which the trusts were created would be accomplished, but there would still be the fee simple outstanding in the trustees, and, the trusts having been fulfilled, he determined to make a special and new gift of the fee simple to the heir of the body of his daughter, by directing the trustees to convey to him the fee simple which was no longer required for the carrying out of the trusts reposed in them, for which alone they were created. Such, I think, was the testator's intention, and such intention is quite sufficiently expressed and carried out by the words employed. It follows that William Henry took the fee simple by purchase, and that his heirs, on his death intestate, were and are entitled to the estate in fee simple, and that the appellants, not being such heirs, cannot disturb the respondent in his possession, which he claims as being himself the heir. I think, therefore, that this appeal should be dismissed.

Order appealed from affirmed, and appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Robbins, Billing, & Co., for Clarke, Son, & Walsh, Preston.

Solicitors for the respondent, Collyer-Bristow, Russell, Hill, Curtis, & Dods.

---

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Lord Alverstone, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) — July 16, 23.

In re JOLLY.
GATHERCOLE v. NORFOLK. (a.)

Limitation statutes—Adverse possession—Rent—Set-off—Will—Construction—Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), ss. 34, 42—Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), s. 1.

The effect of the Limitation Acts of 1833 and 1874 is that, where a tenant has obtained an absolute title to property by reason of the expiration of the statutory period, all rights which the reversioner would have had in respect of the land come to an end, and rent, the non-payment of which has given the occupier his title, cannot be deemed to be owing.

Consequently, rent in respect of the period previous to the extinguishment of the landlord's estate cannot be brought into account under a hotchpot clause in his will.

Decision of North, J. ([1900] 1 Ch. 292), reversed.

A testatrix gave her property in trust for the benefit of her four children in equal shares, with substitutionary gifts to the children of any of them who should die in her lifetime.

By her will she declared "that all sums which I have already paid or advanced or which I shall hereafter pay or advance to or for the benefit of any child of mine, and all moneys owing to me at my death by any child of mine, whether for rent or otherwise, shall be taken in or towards satisfaction of the share under my will of such child or his or her child or children, and shall be brought into hotchpot and accounted for accordingly, and that no such child of mine nor the child or children of any such child of mine shall be entitled to receive any share under my will until such moneys so owing shall be paid to my executors."

In 1868 she let to her son a farm, which belonged to her in fee, at the rent of £80 a year, without any written agreement. The rent was paid to April, 1881. He remained in possession till his mother's death in 1899, without paying further rent or giving any acknowledgment of her title or his liability, so that her title was extinguished in 1893.

The question raised by the summons taken out by her executors and trustees against the son, was whether unpaid rent for the twelve years from 1881 to 1893 ought to be deducted from the son's share in his mother's estate under the above hotchpot clause.

North, J., held that such rent was so to be brought into account in fixing the son's share, [1900] 1 Ch. 292.

The son appealed from this decision.

Vernon Smith, Q.C., and A. H. Poyser, for the appellant.—The whole of the respondents' case is based, wrongly, on the assumption that there was a tenancy during the twelve years. But no such contractual relationship existed between the parties. Up to the passing of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27 no such title as is admitted in the case could have been acquired, for it was always an answer to a claim of right arising from possession that the possession had not been adverse. The effect of the Act was to abolish that doctrine of "non-adverse" possession; there was no interference with the doctrine of adverse possession (per Lord Denman in Nepean v. Doe d. Knight, 2 Smith's L. Cas., 10th ed., 542, and Dart on Vendors and Purchasers). The object and method of the Act appear clearly by comparing the treatment of tenancies by lease, at will, and from year to year, in each of which cases an exact period is fixed at which the possession is to be deemed to be adverse. The moment the Act has run its course it forms (so to say) the sole muniment of the possessor's title, and all prior relationships are swept away. The appellant now being in possession, it is evident that such possession must be deemed to have become adverse to the landlord the moment the statutory period commenced to run. This being wholly inconsistent with the contractual relationship of landlord and tenant, no rent could have accrued due during the period, so that there was no debt which the executors could retain.

(a.) Reported by WARWICK H. DRAPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

H. Terrell, Q.C., and Napier, for the executors. The landlord's estate was extinguished by the 42nd section of the Act of William IV., so that we admit that no rent can be considered due in respect of the period after 1893. But a debt, the power to recover which has been taken away by statute, is not destroyed but only changed in character. The Acts of 1833 and 1874 deal only with land and not with rent. Flight v. Bentley, 7 Sim. 149; Tichborne v. Weir, 67 L. T. Rep. 735, 41 W. R. Dig. 120; In re Akerman, Akerman v. Akerman, 40 W. R. 12, [1891] 3 Ch. 212, were referred to.

Rolt, for a daughter of the testatrix.

Cur. adv. vult.

Lord ALVERSTONE, M.R., after stating the facts, continued: North, J., has decided that the executors should deduct from the share of the son twelve years' rent of the farm for the period 1881 to 1893. I am unable to adopt this view. In the year 1893 the son obtained, by virtue of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, section 1, an absolute title to the property. It is, I think, inconsistent with his right so acquired that the rent which he ought to have paid should be deemed to be still owing. The effect of the Limitation Acts of 1833 and 1874 is, in my opinion, that, after the expiration of the statutory period of twenty and twelve years respectively, all rights which the reversioner would have had in respect of the land have come to an end, and I do not think it would be consistent with that position that rent, the non-payment of which has given the occupier a title to the land, should still be deemed to be owing. I am therefore of opinion that this appeal should be allowed, and that the trustees are not entitled to deduct anything in respect of the arrears of rent.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. A very ingenious argument was addressed to us on behalf of the trustees, that the Real Property Limitation Acts dealt only with land, and that you must go to the statute of James as to a contract for rent. Then it was said that although the Acts barred the remedy as to the recovery of the land, they did not bar the right to recover the twelve years' arrears of rent. It is a very curious point, and not the less so because more than half a century has passed since the statute of 1833 came into operation (the Act of 1874 only changes the period from twenty to twelve years), and although there must have been thousands of cases in which people have been bitterly disappointed, yet no one ever seems to have brought an action for rent in a case where the Real Property Limitation Acts have operated. Nevertheless, such an action must have lain in all cases if the view of the trustees is right. Let us consider, however, what the usual practice of the profession has been. It seems to me that the day after twelve years are gone, the right to bring an action plainly determines. The right of action can only last for twelve years, and in the case of a tenancy from year to year the right of action is to be held to have first accrued when the last payment of rent was made. You have a right of action if the rent is not paid. A landlord could not eject until the day after the rent becomes due. The assumption is that on the day after the twelve years have elapsed, the tenant is to be taken to be no longer tenant. He is holding the land under a title which, according to the older law, would have been an adverse title. That is absolutely inconsistent with an agreement to pay, and so it was held that the tenant was no longer in possession as a tenant from year to year or as a tenant at all. That is absolutely inconsistent with a right to recover rent. The son in the present case, who has been tenant, was under no liability to pay rent after twelve years, not having been tenant at all during twelve years, although, if he had been sued before the twelve years, it would have been quite a different matter. After the twelve years a change of things arises.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I think the crucial point was put by Mr. Poyser—viz., that the effect of the statute was to do away with non-adverse possession. It is incompetent for the landlord to say that he still retains the right to recover. I think that is emphasized when you compare the position of a tenant under a lease in writing with that of a tenant from year to year. I think the tenant was in possession during those years not as tenant to the testatrix, but in a right under which he had no obligation to pay rent.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Field, Roscoe, & Co., for Birkett & Ridley, Ipswich; Morris & Bristow, for Jackaman, Sons, & Miller, Ipswich.

---

From Q. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) July 10.

BEARD v. LONDON GENERAL OMNIBUS CO. (a.)

Master and servant—Negligence of servant—Liability of master—Scope of authority—Omnibus driven by conductor.

On the trial of an action for negligence against an omnibus company, it was proved by the plaintiff's witnesses that the omnibus by which the plaintiff was run down and injured had just finished one of its journeys and was coming down an incline at the rate of eight miles an hour while making a slight détour for the purpose of coming to the starting-place facing the right way for commencing a fresh journey, and that it was being driven by the conductor, who was not the regular driver.

Held, that the judge was right in withdrawing the case from the jury at the close of the plaintiff's case, on the ground that there was no evidence that the person who was driving the omnibus was acting within the scope of his authority.

Application for a new trial of an action tried before Lawrance, J., and a jury.

The action was brought to recover damages for negligence.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The plaintiff, while riding a bicycle, was run down and injured by an omnibus belonging to the defendants.

It appeared from the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses, that the omnibus had just finished one of its journeys, and that at the time when the accident happened it was coming down an incline at the rate of eight miles an hour, while making a slight detour for the purpose of coming to the starting-place facing the right way for commencing a fresh journey, and that it was being driven by the conductor, who was not a licensed driver.

At the close of the plaintiff's case Lawrance, J., withdrew the case from the jury on the ground that there was no evidence that the person who was driving the omnibus was acting within the scope of his authority, and he directed that judgment should be entered for the defendants.

The plaintiff applied for a new trial.

Moyses (A. J. Wallach with him) for the plaintiff.—The learned judge was wrong in nonsuiting the plaintiff. The question whether the driver of an omnibus was acting within the scope of his authority is a question of fact for the jury; it has always been treated so since Limpus v. London General Omnibus Co., 11 W. R. 149, 1 H. & C. 526. The present case is different from that of Gwilliam v. Twist, 43 W. R. 566, [1895] 2 Q. B. 84, where the driver and the conductor of an omnibus authorized a stranger to drive the omnibus home. It is well known to be an everyday occurrence for the conductor of an omnibus to drive for short distances during the temporary absence of the driver, especially in bringing the omnibus to its starting point for a fresh journey. The jury ought to have been allowed to say whether in fact the conductor was acting within the scope of his authority in the present case.

Jelf, Q.C., and Clavell Salter, for the defendants.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—If the plaintiff had simply proved that the defendants' omnibus was being driven negligently, as in fact it was, then I think the presumption would have been that it was being driven by the person whom the defendants had authorized as their agent to drive. But the plaintiff's case itself showed that the omnibus was not being driven by the driver, but by the conductor. The duties of a driver and a conductor are independent duties, and primâ facie it is not the duty of a conductor to drive. It seems to me that the plaintiff's case, as it was presented, negatived the presumption which might otherwise have existed in his favour. I think that Lawrance, J., was right in holding that there was no evidence that the accident happened through the default of an agent authorized by the defendants to drive. The appeal must be dismissed.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—This case seems to me to be on the border-line. I do not think that we ought to assume that it is necessarily beyond the functions of a conductor of an omnibus to take charge of the omnibus during the temporary absence of the driver. If a plaintiff were to prove that at a time when one journey was at an end and another journey was about to commence the conductor turned the omnibus round, and did so negligently, and by his negligence injured the plaintiff, then I think there would be a case to go to the jury, and it would be for the defendants to show, if they could, that it was outside the functions of the conductor to take charge of the omnibus during the temporary absence of the driver. But here the evidence shows that the omnibus was coming down a hill at the rate of eight miles an hour, and that is consistent with this—that the driver may have done what he certainly had no right to do, that is to say, he may have delegated his authority generally to the conductor. I think it would be unfortunate if it should go forth that, whenever a conductor is found exercising the functions of a driver, then no case can be made out against the proprietors of the omnibus in an action for negligence, unless the plaintiff accounts for the temporary absence of the driver. And the mere fact that the act of the conductor is an act of driving does not seem to me to be a sufficient reason for not leaving the case to the jury. But inasmuch as the plaintiff's witnesses show that the omnibus was being driven by a person who was not the regular driver, down hill at a great pace, an act of driving of such a character that it could only be within the scope of authority of a driver, I think that the onus was on the plaintiff to show that this act was authorized by the defendants.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree in thinking that the appeal fails. In my opinion the presumption of authority which would primâ facie exist in the plaintiff's favour may be rebutted by the evidence of the plaintiff's own witnesses. And I think that it was rebutted in this case when it was proved that the person who was driving the omnibus was not the regular driver but was the conductor, who was clearly not from his position authorized by the defendant company to drive. The onus was therefore cast on the plaintiff to give evidence that the conductor was in fact authorized to drive in the present case, but no such evidence was given. Neither was it alleged that there was any necessity for the driver to delegate his authority to the conductor.

Application dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Osborn & Osborn.

Solicitors for the defendant, Hicks, Davis, & Hunt.

---

From Chan. Div. (Lord Alverstone, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) — June 21; July 5

ROGERS v. HOSEGOOD. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Restrictive covenant—Covenant running with the land—Intention—User—Restriction on number of houses—Private dwelling-house—Residential flats.

Held (1) that when the benefit of a covenant has once been clearly annexed to a piece of land, it passes by assignment of that land, and may be said to run with it, as well in contemplation of equity as of law, without proof of special bargain or representation on the assignment; (2) that the erection of a block of flats is a breach of a covenant not to erect more than one messuage or dwelling-house on a piece of land; and (3) that such erection is also a breach of a covenant not to use such messuage otherwise than as a private residence.

Decision of Farwell, J. (ante, p. 202) affirmed as to (1) and (2), but reversed as to (3).

This was an appeal from a decision of Farwell, J. (reported ante, p. 202).

The facts are fully set out in the report of the case in the court below, but for the purposes of this report they may be shortly stated as follow.

The action was brought by the trustees of the will of the late Sir John Millais and by W. R. Rogers, as owners of property in Palace Gate, Kensington, for the purpose of enforcing restrictive covenants to which the defendant's adjoining land was alleged to be subject.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

bought it with the land, and this can hardly be the case where the purchaser did not know of the existence of the restrictive covenant. But when, as here, it has been once annexed to the land reserved, then it is not necessary to spell an intention out of surrounding facts, such as the existence of a building scheme, statements at auctions, and such like circumstances, and the presumption must be that it passes on a sale of that land, unless there is something to rebut it, and the purchaser's ignorance of the existence of the covenant does not defeat the presumption. We find nothing in the conveyance to Sir John Millais in any degree inconsistent with the intention to pass to him the benefit already annexed to the land sold to him. The covenant by the vendor to build a wall, if required by Sir John Millais to do so, in order to prevent Sir John Millais's windows overlooking the adjoining plot does not seem to us to have any bearing on the point, and we are of opinion, therefore, that Sir John Millais's assigns are entitled to enforce the restrictive covenant against the defendant, and that his appeal must be dismissed.

It is, however, still necessary to consider the question raised by the cross-notice of Mr. Rogers. Mr. Rogers is one of the covenantees with whom the Duke of Bedford covenanted in a deed of the 30th of October, 1876, "that every messuage to be erected on the two plots, or either of them, should at all times thereafter be adapted for and used as and for a private residence only." Mr. Rogers was a party to a deed of even date, whereby he and his partners released the Duke from the covenants restricting the number of houses to be built on the plots contained in the conveyances of May, 1869, and July, 1869. He afterwards took an assignment from his partners of two other plots of the firm's building land, near to the Bedford and Millais plots. Farwell, J., dismissed the action, so far as it set up any claim by Rogers, on the ground that the latter could not after the release above-mentioned complain of the erection of several dwelling-houses; and the learned judge did not consider that the proposed building would be a violation of the covenant with Mr. Rogers, that every house to be erected on the two plots, or either of them, or any part thereof, should at all times thereafter be adapted for and used as and for a private residence only. We are of opinion, however, that such a block of flats as it is proposed to erect would involve a breach of this covenant. Though we agree, as we have said, that such a building does involve a breach of the covenant that no more than one messuage or dwelling-house should be erected or standing on such plot, and that such messuage should be adapted for and used as and for a private residence, we think it is also a breach of the covenant in question. Though it is certainly not one messuage or dwelling-house only adapted for and used as a private residence, neither does it seem to us to constitute several separate dwelling-houses adapted for and used as private residences only, within the meaning of the covenant. We think residential flats, involving the use of a public entrance and staircase, do not answer the description of private residences contemplated by the words quoted. The covenant must, we think, be construed in an ordinary or popular, and not in a legal and technical, sense; and we do not think that residential flats, though for many purposes separate dwelling-houses, come within the popular description of the class of buildings which it was intended to permit. The cross-appeal, therefore, of Mr. Rogers must be allowed.

Solicitors, Parker & Thomas; Stibbard, Gibson, & Co.

From Q. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) June 21.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO. v. LONDON AND COUNTY BANKING CO. (a.)

Banker—Bill of exchange—Cheque—Crossed cheque—Receipt of payment for customer—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 82.

A rate collector had been for many years in the habit of taking cheques which he received in payment of rates to a branch bank of the defendants and getting them to cash the cheques, but he did not keep any account with the defendants. Having fraudulently obtained a cheque from the plaintiffs by falsely pretending that a rate had been made, he took the cheque to the branch bank in accordance with his usual practice. The cheque was drawn on a London bank and was made payable to the collector or order, and was crossed generally and marked "Not negotiable." The defendants cashed the cheque and sent it up to their head office in London for collection, and it was duly presented and paid. In an action to recover the amount of the cheque,

Held, that the proper inference to be drawn from the facts was, first, that the collector was a customer of the defendants; and, secondly (Vaughan Williams, L.J., doubting as to this), that the defendants received payment of the cheque for him; and therefore the defendants, having acted in good faith and without negligence, were protected from liability by section 82 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882.

Judgment of Bigham, J. (ante, p. 144), affirmed.

Appeal from the judgment of Bigham, J., at the trial of an action without a jury (reported ante, p. 144, [1899] 2 Q. B. 172).

The action was brought to recover £142 10s., money had and received by the defendants to the use of the plaintiffs, or, in the alternative, to recover damages to a like amount for the conversion of a cheque.

The facts were as follows: One Huggins had been for many years a rate collector in the employment of the Wantage Rural District Council and of other similar bodies. In this capacity he had been in the habit of receiving from the plaintiffs and others cheques for the amounts payable by them for rates, and the cheques so received he used frequently to cash through the defendants' branch bank at Wantage. He had been in the habit of cashing cheques in this way for fifteen or twenty years, and a considerable number of such cheques (fifty or sixty) were cashed by him in the course of each year. He was well known to the managers and officials of the branch bank at Wantage, but he kept no account with the defendants, nor had he any pass-book; his transactions with the defendants were completely disposed of in each case as and when he brought the cheques. The Wantage Rural District Council kept their accounts at the defendants' branch bank.

In November, 1898, Huggins falsely pretended to the plaintiffs that a rate had been made, and that the plaintiffs owed in respect of the same £142 10s. By this means he induced the plaintiffs to give him their cheque for that amount. The cheque was drawn on the head office of the London Joint Stock Bank in favour of Huggins or order; it was crossed generally and marked "not negotiable."

On the 16th of November Huggins, in accordance with his usual course of dealings with the defendants, took this cheque to their bank at Wantage to get it cashed. He indorsed it, handed it across the counter to the bank clerk, and the latter filled up a paying-in slip, which Huggins signed. This paying-in slip contained no reference to the cheque itself, but purported to show a payment into the bank of £142 10s. in money, a payment out to Huggins of £117 10s., and a payment to the credit of the district council's account at Huggins's request of £25. Having thus obtained the cheque, the defendants crossed it to themselves, and sent it up to their head office in London for collection.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On the next day, the 17th of November, the cheque was duly presented and paid. Huggins's fraud was immediately discovered, and on the 18th of November he was arrested on a charge of obtaining the cheque by false pretences, and on the 2nd of January, 1899, he was tried and convicted. The plaintiffs then brought this action against the defendants.

At the trial Bigham, J., found as fact that the defendants received payment of the cheque in good faith and without negligence, and that they received it for Huggins; and he was of opinion that Huggins was a customer of the defendants within the meaning of section 82 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882. He accordingly held that, though Huggins had only a defective title to the cheque, and by section 81 of the Bills of Exchange Act could not give the defendants a better title than he had himself, yet by section 82 the defendants were protected from liability. He therefore directed that judgment should be entered for the defendants.

By section 81 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, "Where a person takes a crossed cheque which bears on it the words 'not negotiable,' he shall not have, and shall not be capable of giving, a better title to the cheque than that which the person from whom he took it had."

By section 82: "Where a banker, in good faith and without negligence, receives payment for a cheque crossed generally or specially to himself, and the customer has no title or a defective title thereto, the banker shall not incur any liability to the true owner of the cheque by reason only of having received such payment."

The plaintiffs appealed.

H. D. Greene, Q.C., Asquith, Q.C., and Park Goff, for the plaintiffs.

A. T. Lawrence, Q.C., and Guy Lushington, for the defendants.

The following cases were cited: Matthews v. Brown & Co., 63 L. J. Q. B. 494; Lacave & Co. v. Crédit Lyonnais, [1897] 1 Q. B. 148, 45 W. R. Dig. 8; Matthiessen v. London and County Bank, 27 W. R. 838, 5 C. P. D. 7; National Bank v. Silke, 39 W. R. 361, [1891] 1 Q. B. 435.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 21.—A. L. SMITH, L.J., read the following judgment: This action is brought by the Great Western Railway Co. to recover from the London and County Banking Co. as money had and received by the defendant bank to the use of the plaintiffs a sum amounting to £142 10s., or, in the alternative, in trover for a cheque for the like sum, which cheque had been fraudulently obtained from the plaintiffs by a man named Huggins, and which had been cashed by the defendants for Huggins and its proceeds received by the defendants from the plaintiff company under the following circumstances. Huggins was a rate collector at Wantage, and by falsely pretending to the plaintiff company that certain rates were due from them obtained from the plaintiff company in supposed payment of the rates the cheque in question. It was a cheque drawn by the plaintiff company upon the London Joint Stock Bank in London in favour of Huggins or order, and was crossed "and Co.," "not negotiable." It was proved that the plaintiff company always paid Huggins the rates due from them by cheques in the above form. The cheque, it will be seen, was a cheque drawn upon the head office of the London Joint Stock Bank in London, and what I will call Huggins's ordinary course of business with the defendant bank was to go to its Wantage branch when he received cheques from the plaintiffs, indorse them, and then present them at the Wantage branch to be cashed. And this the defendant bank was accustomed to do for Huggins. This was the course of business between the defendant bank and Huggins; and at times, at Huggins's request, the branch bank would place some portion of the cash, which would otherwise have been handed to Huggins, to accounts named by Huggins. The branch bank then forwarded the cheque so cashed for Huggins to its head office in London, which then presented and obtained payment of the cheque from the drawers, in this case the plaintiffs in this action. This as regards the cheque in question had all taken place before the fraud of Huggins was detected by the plaintiffs, and when they did afterwards discover it they demanded the cheque or its proceeds from the defendants, which was refused. The plaintiffs thereupon brought this action. The plaintiffs in the first instance attempted to show that the defendants, when they took the cheque, took it with notice of Huggins's fraud, but in this they wholly failed, and this was abandoned at the trial. I will assume that money had and received or trover will lie in the circumstances of this case; but in the view I take it is not necessary to decide this, for supposing, as I will, that such actions or either of them will lie, if the question decided by my brother Bigham is rightly decided, as I think it is, this question becomes immaterial, for the real question is, Did the defendant bank in cashing the cheque for Huggins as they did, though crossed and with the words "not negotiable" thereon, come within the protection afforded to bankers by section 82 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882? It is true that section 81 of the Act enacts that "where a person takes a crossed cheque which bears on it the words 'not negotiable' he shall not have and shall not be capable of giving a better title to the cheque than that which the person from whom he took it had"—in this case no better title than Huggins, which after disaffirmance of the transaction by the plaintiffs would be no title at all. But section 82 protects a banker who receives payment for a customer of a crossed cheque as follows: "Where a banker in good faith and without negligence"—which it is admitted is the defendants' position in this case—"receives payment for a customer of a cheque crossed generally or specially to himself, and the customer has no title or a defective title thereto, the banker shall not incur any liability to the true owner of the cheque by reason only of having received such payment." Two points are made by the plaintiffs upon this section 82. The first is that Huggins was not a customer of the bank within the meaning of this section; and, secondly, if he were, the bank did not receive the proceeds of the cheque from the plaintiffs for their customer but for themselves. It was proved that the course of business between Huggins and the defendants—viz., the defendants' cashing cheques for Huggins, whether crossed and with the words "not negotiable" thereon, or without being crossed, at the Wantage bank, and collecting them—had been in existence for some twenty years, and that this was the way, as between Huggins and the branch bank, in which he obtained cash for the cheques received by him as rate collector. I agree with my brother Bigham that whether or not a man is a customer of a bank is a question of fact. I do not agree with the suggested reading of the section that the word "customer" is confined to the case of a person who keeps a current account with a bank. I can find no such limitation in the section. This is not like the case of a stranger coming to a bank upon an isolated occasion to get a cheque cashed, which was the case in Matthews v. Brown, where it was held that such a person was not a customer within the section, Cave, J., saying that the word "customer" involves something of use and habit. In the present case there has been use and habit for twenty years. It was upon the same principle that Collins, J., in Lacave & Co. v. Crédit Lyonnais decided that one Ponce was not a customer, the learned judge saying that to constitute him one his relations must be much nearer and closer than those of Ponce in that case. I think that the cashing of the cheques for Huggins and then the collecting of the cheques by the defendant bank during a period of twenty years as a matter of fact constituted Huggins a customer of the bank, and I agree with Bigham, J., as to this.

Then comes the next question, Did the bank receive payment of the cheque from the plaintiff company for their customer Huggins, or for themselves? If they received such payment for Huggins I do not see how it can be even argued that Huggins was not their customer. It is said for the plaintiffs that the defendant bank did not do so, for it purchased from Huggins the cheque in question, and took it for better or for worse. I cannot think so. The defendant bank charged nothing for undertaking the suggested liability. Why should they have done so? I heard no reason, and I cannot conceive why they should have done so? The truth is that the branch bank, to accommodate Huggins and possibly themselves, in being able to pass money to London, cashed the London cheque at Wantage, undertaking to collect it for Huggins, he and not the bank standing the risk of the cheque not being met by the drawers. In my judgment they did not purchase the cheque at all. They collected it for Huggins, and not for themselves, as argued. This is the inference Bigham, J., drew, and I draw the same. For the reasons above I am of opinion that the defendants are entitled to the protection afforded to bankers by section 82 of the Act, and I agree with my brother Bigham in the conclusion at which he arrived. The appeal must be dismissed.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., read the following judgment: Apart from the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, I think there can be no doubt but that the defendant bank would, in the circumstances of this case, have become holders for value to the extent of the amount of the cheque, and would have been able to sue in their own right for that amount. The defendants would in no sense have had to sue as trustees for Huggins. This would have been their right and position as endorsees bonâ fide for value, and that value being the full amount of the cheque it seems to me immaterial for the question to be decided in the present case whether you speak of the defendants as discounters or purchasers or holders for full value. In any view they, apart from the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, would have been holders of the cheque able to sue in their own right for the whole amount: see Thiedemann v. Goldschmidt, 8 W. R. 14, 1 De G. F. & J. 4, at p. 11. Now, of such persons it seems to me that it would be primâ facie wrong to draw the inference that they were bankers receiving payment for a customer of a cheque endorsed generally by the payee and payable on demand, not being post-dated. Apart from some evidence of a contrary intention the right inference to draw in such a case would be that the bankers received it for themselves and not for the customer. Now what is the evidence of contrary intention—that is, of an intention that the defendant bank should collect and receive payment of the cheque as agents for Huggins? Nothing that I can see, except the fact that they made no charge for cashing a cheque payable on demand. Against this is the fact that there are no entries in the bank books and no receipt or other document such as one would expect if the bank were really acting as collecting agents for Huggins. The bank were willing to give cash for the cheque because they trusted Huggins. The mere absence of an express bargain in the series of years leaves the primâ facie presumption where it was. To draw the inference of agency in the absence of evidence is very like repealing the 81st section in the case of bankers. If this is the right view, does the fact that this cheque was marked "not negotiable" make any and what difference in the position of the bank? Are the defendants, notwithstanding these words "not negotiable," holders for value? I think they are. Section 81 runs thus: [His lordship read the section.] The section does not say that the person to whom the payee of the cheque gives a crossed cheque marked not negotiable shall not become transferee of the cheque, but merely that he shall not take a better title than that which the person from whom he took it had. The transferability of the cheque is not affected by the words "not negotiable," but only its negotiability. Such being the effect of section 81, I see nothing in this case to induce me to draw the inference that the defendants, after they ceased to retain the cheque by presenting it at the bank on which it was drawn and received the amount, received or held that amount as agents for Huggins; but Bigham, J., and my brethren take a different view of the facts, and draw the inference that the defendant bank received the amount of the cheque for their customer Huggins, notwithstanding the fact that when they took the cheque from him they paid him the full amount by paying for him £25 to the Wantage Rural District Council and giving him the balance of £117 10s. in cash. I do not think that I ought to differ from three judges on a question of fact, and it therefore becomes unnecessary to consider the question of the right of action of the plaintiffs, the drawers, on the assumption that section 82 affords the defendants no protection; but I see no reason to doubt but that the plaintiffs, as true owners of the cheque, would have an action for the money obtained by the presentation of the cheque, notwithstanding the fact that the cheque when issued was a voidable and not a void instrument. It would have been otherwise but for the statutory effect of the words "not negotiable," but I am inclined to think that the effect of those words is to place the person taking the cheque bearing those words in exactly the same position as the person from whom he takes it; but in the view of the facts taken by my brethren it is not necessary to decide this question.

ROMER, L.J., read the following judgment: This is a curious case, and one of difficulty; but I have come to the conclusion that Bigham, J., was right in holding the defendant bank protected by section 82 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882. I think on the facts the preferable view of the arrangement between Huggins and the bank with regard to the cheque in question is that the latter was to forward the cheque for collection, and to receive the proceeds on behalf of Huggins in the sense in which the section speaks of a bank receiving payment for a customer, and that in anticipation of such receipt the bank advanced to Huggins the amount of the cheque. Of course, the bank had the right to apply the proceeds in repayment of the advance, and had a lien on the cheque for the amount of the advance; but this, while establishing that the bank had a beneficial interest to the fullest extent in the cheque, does not conflict with the position taken up by the bank that in a legal sense, in the sense of the wording of section 82, the bank, when receiving the proceeds of the cheque, did so on behalf of Huggins. Suppose in this case Huggins had a current account with the bank, which was not in credit, and that the cheque had been paid in by him in the ordinary way as a customer, and that the bank had credited him with the amount at once, and allowed him to draw against that amount before the bank received payment of the cheque—in that case, equally with this, the bank might have had a beneficial interest in the cheque even to the extent of its full value; but it would clearly, in my opinion, have received payment of the cheque for its customer within section 82. In that case, as in this, the bank, as against the world, would have been a "holder for value" of the cheque within the definition of holder for value in the Act. But this is perfectly consistent with the view that in both cases, within the meaning of section 82, the bank received payment of the cheque for Huggins. The chief facts which lead me to the conclusion that in this case the bank received payment of the cheque for Huggins are that throughout the long period during which Huggins's cheques were cashed by the defendant bank there is no evidence or suggestion of any bargain being come to between them, or of any contract of purchase being negotiated or really intended. It is clear that no remuneration was paid to the bank by Huggins for advancing the amounts of the cheques, and I cannot think that it was intended that the bank should run any risk in the matter of title, or any risk whatever other than that involved in the mere advance of the amounts of the cheques. It must be remembered that what the bank cashed for Huggins were cheques payable immediately and drawn to his order, and were not even like short bills; and the true intent of the parties is, in my opinion, further shown by the fact that the bank advanced to Huggins the full amounts of the cheques without charge, even though some were, like the one in question in this action, crossed "not negotiable," which to a bank must necessarily have caused hesitation or doubt if the bank was doing anything more than acting as a bank in receiving payment of the cheques on behalf a customer. If I am right in the view that the true arrangement between Huggins and the bank in cashing his cheques was that the bank should receive payment of them for Huggins and apply the proceeds in repayment of its advances, then I cannot doubt, bearing in mind how long and continuously that arrangement had existed and been acted on, but that at the time the cheque in question in this action was cashed the relation of banker and customer existed between the defendant bank and Huggins, and that the bank received payment of that cheque for a customer within the meaning of section 82. It cannot have been essential that a current account should have been opened, into which the advances on the cheques on the one hand and the payments to the bank on those cheques on the other hand should be entered. This view renders it unnecessary for me to consider whether, if the bank could not avail itself of the provisions of section 82, it could as an innocent party escape liability on the ground that the payment of the cheque to it was by the act of the plaintiff company itself.

Solicitor for the plaintiffs, Robert Rogers Nelson.

Solicitors for the defendants, Harries, Wilkinson, & Raikes.

From Chan. Div. (Webster, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) — May 17, 21, 22, 31.

In re DIXON.
HEYNES v. DIXON. (a.)

Bond—Bond to secure loan—Breach of condition—Interest from date of breach—Damages—4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, ss. 12, 13—Husband and wife—Loan to husband of wife's separate property—Statute of Limitations, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42), s. 5.

Interest is payable as interest, and not as damages, under a bond having a condition or defeasance to make void the same upon payment of a lesser sum at a day or place certain, even though no express mention of interest is made in the bond. The fact that the bond is conditioned for payment of principal at, and of interest up to, a certain date does not preclude interest being payable subsequently to that date in accordance with the before-stated rule.

Acting within the provisions of a marriage settlement, the trustees of the settlement lent the trust fund in 1852 to the husband on the security of his bond, conditioned for repayment of the sum advanced six months after date, with interest thereon at £4 per cent. This interest was payable under the trusts of the settlement to the wife for life, and to the husband for life after her death. Husband and wife lived together in perfect amity. The wife died in 1876, and the husband in 1896. The husband had never paid the sum secured by the bond, or any part thereof, and had never paid any interest on the same.

Held, that, under the circumstances, the hand to pay and the hand to receive the interest having been the same, no payment over was necessary; and that, therefore, the Statute of Limitations did not run, and the bond was still subsisting.

Held, also, that, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, the husband must be considered to have kept possession of the trust fund in the capacity of a quasi-trustee, and, that being so, the Statute of Limitations could not in any case have run in his favour.

Decision of Byrne, J. (ante, p. 71, [1899] 2 Ch. 561), affirmed.

Appeal from the decision of Byrne, J., ante, p. 71, [1899] 2 Ch. 561.

By a settlement dated the 1st of October, 1847, and made on the intended marriage (which was afterwards solemnized) of Thomas Dixon and Jane Heynes, the one-fifth share of certain real estate to which the said Jane Heynes was then entitled was conveyed to certain trustees upon trust for sale and for re-investment of the proceeds on real or personal security, and upon further trust to pay the income to the wife for life for her sole and separate use; and after her death to the husband for life; and after the death of the survivor upon certain ultimate trusts.

It was also provided that no investment, or change of investment, should be made during the lives of Thomas Dixon and Jane Heynes, or the life of the survivor of them, without first obtaining his or her consent in writing.

In 1852 the real estate was sold, and the proceeds thereof amounted to £1,928 5s. 10d.

By a memorandum in writing dated the 12th of February, 1852, the said Jane Heynes authorized the trustees of the settlement to lend this sum of £1,928 5s. 10d. to her husband, Thomas Dixon, upon his giving them a bond conditioned for repayment of the said sum with interest thereon at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum. The trustees accordingly lent the said sum to Thomas Dixon, and received from him in return a bond, dated the 13th of February, 1852, by which he bound himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, in the penal sum of £3,856 11s. 8d., the condition of the bond being that if he, the said Thomas Dixon, his heirs, executors, or administrators, should pay to the trustees of the settlement the full sum of £1,928 5s. 10d., with interest for the same at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, upon the 13th of August then next ensuing, then the obligation should be void and of no effect; but that otherwise the bond should remain in full force and virtue.

(a.) Reported by J. E. MORRIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Jane Dixon was, by the terms of the settlement, entitled to the interest of the money secured by the bond for the term of her life. She died on the 21st of May, 1876, and her husband, the said Thomas Dixon, then became entitled to such interest for his life. Thomas Dixon died on the 1st of January, 1896, without having paid the said principal sum of £1,928 5s. 10d., or any part thereof, and without having at any time paid any interest in respect thereof. It appeared that husband and wife, during their married lives, had lived together in perfect amity.

The bond of the 13th of February, 1852, remained for many years in the possession of Thomas Dixon, and was discovered, together with the memorandum of the 12th of February, 1852, among his papers after his death.

The present action was instituted by the trustees of the settlement of the 1st of October, 1847, against the defendants, who were the executors of Thomas Dixon, for the administration of the real and personal estate of the testator, and the plaintiffs claimed payment of the sum of £1,928 5s. 10d., with interest thereon at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum from the date of the testator's death.

Byrne, J., on the trial of the action, decided (1) that the hand to pay and to receive the interest, during the lifetime of the wife, as well as afterwards, having been the same, no payment over was necessary, and, therefore, that the Statute of Limitations did not begin to run until the husband's death, and that the bond was still in existence; (2) "that interest is payable as interest and not as damages under a bond having a condition or defeasance to make void the same upon payment of a lesser sum at a day or place certain, even although no express mention of interest is made in the bond"; and that he could not see "any just reason for holding that the amount of interest recoverable is diminished by reason only of the bond being conditioned for payment of principal and interest up to or at a certain date."

From this decision the defendants now appealed.

Levett, Q.C., and Baker, for the appellants.—(1) The condition of this bond being broken, the sum of £1,928 5s. 10d. with interest thereon at 4 per cent. up to the 13th of August, 1852, became immediately recoverable; but anything in the nature of interest after the 13th of August, 1852, is recoverable, if at all, only in the form of damages, for there is no provision whatever in the bond for the payment of interest after that date: Cook v. Fowler, L. R. 7 H. L. 27, 22 W. R. Dig. 260; Cameron v. Smith 2 B. & Ald. 305; In re Roberts, Goodchap v. Roberts, 28 W. R. 870, 14 Ch. D. 49; Foster v. Weston, 6 Bing. 709; Hogan v. Page, 1 Bos. & P. 337. (2) This being so, the claim became barred by the Statute of Limitations during the lifetime of the wife: Stone v. Stone, 18 W. R. 225, L. R. 5 Ch. App. 74; Mills v. Borthwick, 13W. R. 707; In re Hawes, 41 W. R. 173; In re Flamank, Wood v. Cock, 37 W. R. 502, 40 Ch. D. 461, and similar cases, are all distinguishable. (3) This is also a claim against the estate of a dead person, and the onus of showing that the debt still subsists is on the respondents: In re Wynne-Finch, Wynne-Finch v. Wynne-Finch, 31 W. R. 526, 23 Ch. D. 267; In re Hodgson, Beckett v. Ramsdale, 34 W. R. 127, 31 Ch. D. 177; Fladong v. Winter, 19 Ves. 196. The fact that the bond was found among the husband's papers raises a presumption that it has long ago been discharged.

Haldane, Q.C., and Christopher James, for the respondents.—(1) Interest is recoverable as such even after the 13th of August, 1852; Bonafous v. Rybot, 3 Burr. 1370; Farquhar v. Morris, 7 T. R. 124; Walters v. Meredith, 3 Y. & C. Eq. Ex. 264. The principle of Cook v. Fowler applies only to cases of a simplex obligatio, not to bonds with a penalty. (2) The debt accordingly, is not statute-barred: Caton v. Rideout, 1 Mac. & G. 599; Coxwell v. Franklinksky, 12 W. R. 1072; Amos v. Smith, 10 W. R. 759, 1 H. & C. 238. (3) But even assuming that no interest was payable after the 13th of August, 1852, yet the Statute of Limitations will not run in favour of a quasi-trustee, which was practically the character of the husband here. Spickernell v. Hotham, 2 W. R. 638, 1 Kay 669; Soar v. Ashwell, 42 W. R. 165, [1893] 2 Q. B. 390.

Levett, Q.C., replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 31.—WEBSTER, M.R.—This is an appeal from Byrne, J., and the principal question involved is, whether, under the circumstances, a bond given in the year 1852 is barred by the Statute of Limitations. Now, the chief contention which was raised before us on the part of the appellants was this, that this bond ought to be regarded as a common money bond for the repayment of money, and that by applying the principle of Cook v. Fowler, and by applying in particular the proposition laid down in that case by Lord Selborne (L. R. 7 H. L. 27), at p. 37,* we ought to treat this bond as being statute-barred, upon the ground that there has been no acknowledgment or payment within a period of twenty years during the lifetime of the wife. But having regard to the view which I take of the law, I think we must come to another conclusion. I have had an opportunity of seeing the judgment which has been written by Rigby, L.J., dealing with many of the cases bearing on this branch of the law, and therefore I shall not think it necessary to go through them all myself; but I will state, as clearly as I can, what I understand to be their general result. I think that it is certain that ever since the case of Bonafous v. Rybot, and the judgment in that case of Lord Mansfield, it has been considered that the just intent of such a contract as the one embodied in this bond is to secure the repayment of principal, interest, and costs

* "Unless it can be laid down as a general rule of law that upon a contract for the payment of money borrowed for a fixed period, on a day certain, with interest at a certain rate down to that day, a farther contract for the continuance of the same rate of interest after that day, until actual payment, is to be implied, the decision of the Vice-Chancellor in this case is not erroneous. I entirely agree . . . that no such contract is to be implied, unless there is something to justify it, upon the construction of the words of the particular instrument; and that, although in cases of this class interest for the delay of payment post diem ought to be given, it is on the principle, not of implied contract, but of damages for a breach of contract."

by means of the penalty. We were pressed to say that unless the principal were also claimed no suit would have been entertained for interest alone. I do not know that it is necessary to decide that point; but I should certainly have thought that it was open to argument whether at any rate a court of equity would not have had jurisdiction to order interest in cases in which a suitor was asking for interest, but not for repayment of principal; but it may be that if the parties went on their strict rights, the contract must be regarded as a contract for payment of principal and interest together secured by the penalty up to a certain date. There is, however, in my opinion, another incident in connection with this case that I do not think can be lost sight of, and that is the fact that the bond was given by the husband in respect of a loan which was made to him with full notice of the terms of the settlement. It appears on the face of the bond that this money was advanced by, and was to be repaid to, the trustees of the settlement; and from the language of the settlement itself it is obvious that the trustees had no power to invest except upon interest-bearing securities. Now, if we once succeed in firmly grasping the fact that such a security as the one here given would be regarded in those courts which are most conversant with the rights and duties of trustees as an interest-bearing security, then there would be nothing unusual in such a security being taken, assuming, of course, that it comes within the words "personal security." This is a further point which it is not necessary to consider to-day; but I will just add this much—that I think that the position of the husband who took this money and gave such a bond would bring him within the class of those persons who would be regarded as bound to a great extent—I do not wish to put it too high—by the same rules as would bind trustees. I endeavour to use what may appear to be somewhat untechnical language, because we were pressed as to the distinction between implied and constructive trustees. I should like to call attention to the language of Bowen, L.J., in Soar v. Ashwell, [1893] 2 Q. B., at p. 396, in which he enumerates various classes of persons who are subject to the rules binding trustees. "Thirdly," he says, "a similar extension of the doctrine has been acted on in a case where a person received trust property and dealt with it in a manner inconsistent with trusts of which he was cognizant." I myself think that if it be held that this bond was given by the husband for a receipt of money, which was, in effect, a breach of trust, he would be in the position contemplated by Bowen, L.J., and would not be a person entitled to plead the Statute of Limitations so far as the money remained in his hands. But, from whatever point of view you regard it, it seems to me that it would be an extremely difficult thing to say that, applying, as we are bound to apply, that further rule, the statute would run during the lifetime of the wife. It seems clearly established on the authorities that, whether you regard it as a receipt of interest or as a receipt of the wife's income, yet, so long as the husband and wife live together, the form need not be gone through of handing the money from the one to the other. I may point out, with regard to the case of Amos v. Smith, to which I have already referred, that I do not understand that case to have rested—as we were pressed by Mr. Levett to say that it did rest—solely on the fact that receipts had been given. I think that Lord Bramwell said distinctly that no suit in equity could be maintained by the husband against the wife in respect of the income which he had received. We were asked to say that it was necessary that some formality should be gone through in the shape of receipts being given by the one or the other, in order to come to the conclusion that the statute would not run. I cannot take that view. I think the effect of the principle which has been acted upon in many cases in courts of equity is this: that if husband and wife are living together under such circumstances that the wife's income is being received and dealt with by the husband, as it was in this case, the statute does not run. Therefore, it being common ground that unless barred at the death of the wife, it has not been barred since, I think, accordingly, that the bond was in force at the date of the wife's death.

RIGBY, L.J.—As a main part of the appeal in this case was based upon the argument that a bond within the statute 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, s. 13, does not carry interest properly so called, but that damages only can be recovered for non-payment of the sum secured by it—though a jury may give such damages in the shape of interest—it may be worth while to repeat the often-stated grounds which show such argument to have no foundation. The Court of Chancery gave relief against the strictness of the common law in cases of penalty or forfeiture for non-payment of a fixed sum on a day certain, on the principle that the failure to pay the principal on a certain day could be compensated sufficiently by payment of principal and interest with costs at a subsequent day. It had no jurisdiction until quite modern times to give damages for breach of contract, but could always refer it to a master to compute interest and costs. The principle included, but was not confined to, the case of a common money bond with a penalty; but, of course, did not extend to the case of a simple bond where there was no penalty to relieve against. The explanation given by Lord Macclesfield, C., in the leading case of Peachy v. Duke of Somerset, 1 Strange 453 (7 Geo. 1, 1721), has always been received as correct: "The true ground of relief against penalties is from the original intent of the case where the penalty is designed only to secure money, and the court gives him all that he expected or desired"—i.e., principal and interest.

The case before Lord Macclesfield was one of an attempt to obtain relief against forfeiture of copyholds grounded on the law relating to copyhold tenure, and failed because the principle of the court did not include such cases; but the Lord Chancellor says: "Even in cases of copyholds there are some cases of forfeiture intended for a different purpose, as for non-payment of rent or fine, which are only by way of security of the rent or fine, and therefore when these are paid afterwards with interest the money itself is paid according to the intent only as to the circumstance of time." In Reynolds v. Pitt, 19 Ves. 134, Eldon, L.C., speaking of relief in equity against forfeitures, says (p. 140): "The origin of this doctrine is to be attributed to those cases in which relief was given originally with reference to non-payment of money at the specified time, the court holding that by the payment of interest the party was put in just the same state as if the principal had been paid at the time stipulated." The context shows that Lord Eldon had originally grave doubts as to the soundness of this doctrine; but this only makes his statement of the doctrine really acted upon more emphatic. In the same case he mentions, as the earliest reported authority on the point, the case of Cage v. Russell, 2 Ventr. 352. That is not a case of a bond, but of a penalty imposed by a will. It is a very remarkable case, illustrating the manner in which the principle was applied. Of course, as the payment of interest was due to the doctrine of the court, it was altogether unimportant whether or not interest was mentioned in the original contract. In the special case of a money bond with a penalty the court therefore held that the true intent of the penalty was to secure payment, with or without antecedent interest, of the principal money on the day fixed; and that non-payment was to be compensated for by payment at a subsequent day with interest down to the date of payment. This subsequent interest was therefore held to be due upon the bond, though not mentioned in it. The statute 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, ss. 12 and 13, recognized and confirmed the doctrine in the case of bonds with a penalty, which thenceforth became binding on the common law courts. Thenceforward the cases at common law became important, and the decisions in those courts are to be considered, though the principle on which courts of equity proceeded was not varied. But with the exception of cases within the statute of Anne, the Court of Chancery alone had jurisdiction to relieve against forfeiture: see for a modern case of its existence, In re Hulse, Ex parte Dagenham Thames Dock Co., L. R. 8 Ch. App. 1022, per James and Mellish, L.JJ. Before, however, noticing particularly the common law cases, it will be convenient to call attention to the large class of cases (including all except those where the penalty is intended to secure a money payment only) in which it remained necessary to call in a jury to ascertain damage with a view to relief from forfeiture. Sloman v. Walter, 1 Bro. C. C. 418, coram Thurlow, L.C., is a leading, though not the earliest, case. There the object of the penalty was to secure the use of a room in a house, and the plaintiff asked for an injunction to restrain proceedings at law for the penalty pending the trial of an issue of quantum damnificatus, the direction of which was part of the relief prayed. A common injunction was granted; and, on the coming in of the answer, Lord Thurlow continued it to the trial. Cases of this kind were very numerous. The court did not send them away to common law, but granted an injunction, and directed an issue of quantum damnificatus; and on the return of the issue relieved from forfeiture on payment of damages and costs. It might have been expected that anyone endeavouring to show that damages only are recoverable for breach of an agreement to make a money payment would have produced some instance of an issue quantum indemnificatus directed in such a case, or some decision, or, at the very least, some authoritative dictum, to the effect contended for. But the authorities actually referred to are uniformly opposed to the contention. Passing by the weighty and authoritative remarks of Lord Mansfield in Bonafous v. Rybot, quoted in the judgment of the learned judge in the court below, we may go at once to the case of Farquhar v. Morris, decided by the Court of King's Bench (Lord Kenyon, C.J.). The question was, on what terms a penalty in a bond making no mention of interest and not even fixing expressly a day for payment of the principal sum was to be relieved against. The court, exercising in 1797 the jurisdiction exclusively vested before the statute of Anne in the Court of Chancery, made the precise order which the Court of Chancery would have made —that is to say, they referred it to a master to compute principal, interest, and costs, so fixing the full amount recoverable on the bond, reckoning the interest from the date of the bond itself. Neither before nor after that case has there been, so far as appeared by any authority cited to us, any question that in a case falling within the statute of Anne interest was to be computed as opposed to damages being assessed. In Cameron v. Smith, Bayley, J., and in Foster v. Weston, 6 Bing. 709, Tindal, C.J., in answer in each case to a claim to have interest and not damages in respect of a document not within the statute of Anne, pointed out, as a reason for refusing the relief, that it was not a bond. This seems to me to be equivalent to saying, in each case, it is notorious that, in respect of a bond within the statute, interest is chargeable, but that is not the case here! In Amos v. Smith, Martin, Bramwell, and Channell, B.B., held, or, rather, assumed as plain, that interest was chargeable on a bond within the statute. I am unable to see the relevancy of the cases cited for the purpose of showing that interest beyond the amount of the penalty is not recoverable.

In Amos v. Smith it was held that receipts given by a wife entitled for her separate use to the interest on a bond payable by her husband were sufficient evidence of payment of interest on the bond to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations which is set up here, although no money actually passed. The court pointed out that payment by the husband to the trustees, and by the latter to the wife, was not necessary. The question is whether there is anything here which a court of equity would hold to be equivalent to the receipts given by the wife in Amos v. Smith. Now, in equity, when a wife living in amity with her husband allows him to retain money which she might have insisted on having paid to her for her separate use, she is to be assumed to have given to him all arrears of income. Caton v. Rideout is frequently cited as the authority for this proposition; but it only recognized, and did not lay down for the first time, the doctrine on which the court proceeds. Here the wife was restrained from anticipation and could only acquiesce in the husband's retainer as from the date when the interest became due. But even where there is no restraint on anticipation the wife is only bound as to arrears. No presumption of an agreement to give to the husband future income arises. In this case the wife might, had she been so minded, have maintained by her next friend a suit against her husband and the trustees of the settlement to enforce the execution of the trust of the settlement, and to pay her the interest on the bond. To such a suit there would have been no defence; and it certainly would not have been the course of the court to send her, as was suggested, to common law. If the advance of the money to the husband was for any reason a breach of trust, I should agree with what the Master of the Rolls has said on this point. There remains only the question of presumption of payment of the bond by reason of its being found in the husband's possession at the time of his death. But upon the evidence, and having regard to the fact that during his life he himself was entitled to the interest for which he was liable, and that he would have been entitled to the income of any investment of the money arising from the discharge of the bond, I do not think that any such presumption arises. The case is totally different from one in which the obligor of a bond has, apart from the obligation, nothing to do with the obligee. I am of opinion that the appeal fails and ought to be dismissed with costs.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. But in deference to the very closely reasoned argument of Mr. Levett, I will add a few words. It seems to me that the one point at the bottom of this case is this—was this security, as between the parties, an interest-bearing security? If it was, then the presumption of Caton v. Rideout applies, and it must be assumed that payments of that interest were properly made, and that the Statute of Limitations has not accordingly run. Now, we had a very interesting argument from Mr. Levett to the effect that when you have a bond for the payment of money upon a given day, and a penalty for non-payment, that is not an interest-bearing security. It was argued that the penalty merely settles the ultimate damages that can in any event be claimed for non-payment of the interest; and that, although upon proper proceedings being taken the obligor may be made liable to repay the principal sum and interest, yet that that interest must be looked upon simply as an aliquot portion of the penalty, which is in its nature damages—that though the amount of damages may be measured by interest, it really is damages, and that therefore there was no implication that this security was an interest-bearing security at all. It was argued, in short, that the principle of Cook v. Fowler applied here, and that, there being nothing payable but damages, the implication of Caton v. Rideout did not exist; that there was, therefore, no presumption of payment; and that accordingly the Statute of Limitations ran. But I think, when you come to analyze the state of the authorities as to bonds, it is clear that the sum payable in the bond, although there is a penalty, is not damages, but really is interest. And the truth of this is demonstrated, I think, by the fact to which attention was called by Mr. Haldane—namely, the distinction between a simplex obligatio—a simple bond without a penalty—and a bond with a penalty. In the first case you have simply an absolute contract to pay upon a particular day; and for all practical purposes that is on the same footing as a deed secured by a warrant of attorney, which was the actual case before the court in Cook v. Fowler. In those two examples of a simple absolute contract to pay money on a given day there is no implication in law of any obligation to pay interest as a part of the contract after the given day. If recoverable, it could only be recovered as damages. Now, what was it that differentiated the case of a bond with a penalty from the case of a bond without a penalty—for a difference there undoubtedly was? You could not recover interest, as interest, upon a simple bond without a penalty; but you could unquestionably—always in a court of equity, and afterwards, by the statute of Anne, in a court of law—recover, not damages, but interest, on a bond with a penalty. The explanation is this—that in the view of both courts the penalty really was for the purpose of securing that which was the real contract—i.e., the principal with the interest. There was, it is true, for a very long time, a difficulty in suing for the interest, as interest, in a court of law; but when the statute of Anne was passed, the courts of law were in a position to give effect to that which had always been the doctrine of equity. And in this particular case, the mere machinery by which, in a certain event, the obligor could be made to pay interest appears to me to be quite immaterial. The point is really this: Was he under an obligation, which could in some way be enforced, to pay, not damages, but interest? I think he undoubtedly was. And if that was the position between these two parties, it was, as between them, an interest-bearing security; and being an interest-bearing security, the statute will not, under the circumstances, run. But apart from that, I find it impossible in the present case, assuming that this bond, as is unquestionably the fact, was for six months an interest-bearing security, and bearing in mind that it was retained afterwards by the husband with full knowledge of the trusts of the settlement—that he borrowed it in terms as a part of the trust money—and that he then kept it but paid no interest upon it—I find it impossible, having reference to all these facts, to distinguish this case from the case of Spickernell v. Hotham. The third point decided in that case was this: "In 1825 A. borrowed from the executors in trust of a will a fund which was thereby bequeathed to them in trust for himself for life, and then for other persons, and gave to them a promissory note for the repayment of this sum to them 'as executors in trust' with lawful interest. Held, that A. borrowed the fund and promised to repay it as trust money, and therefore that lapse of time was no bar to the claim against him for repayment." Stress was laid in that case by the Vice-Chancellor on the fact that A. borrowed the fund as trust money, and he says this: "But I think that A. in this case must be taken to have received these moneys into his hands as trust moneys. It is argued that there was no power to lend the trust moneys in such a manner, but in the absence of evidence the assumption is the other way. If I could not assume that there was such a power, I should be obliged to hold that A. received this money in breach of, and subject to, the trust, and then the circumstance of his being tenant for life would be important as to the question of laches, for the fact that he was entitled to receive all the income during that period would be some reason for not applying to him for payment of the principal, and, therefore, would be a ground for now arguing that the claim was not barred." Then, in answer to the argument put by counsel, who distinguished the cases referred to, and argued that there could be no trust, for it was not shown that there was any power to lend the fund upon personal security, the Vice-Chancellor says: "This was borrowed as trust money, and was to be repaid to the lenders as 'executors in trust' of the will." Now, if we look at the bond in the present case we have got precisely the same statement, for on the face of the bond it is recited that the husband undertakes to pay, or cause to be paid, to the trustees under the settlement made on the marriage, &c. Here, therefore, we have exactly the same express assertion or admission on the face of the security that the obligation is to pay it as trust money to the trustees. It seems to me, therefore, to be indistinguishable on this point from the case of Spickernell v. Hotham and numerous other cases to the same effect which have been cited before us. On these grounds I think the appeal fails. I should perhaps add this, that I think that Byrne, J., was perfectly right in the distinction he drew between Cook v. Fowler—which was a claim on a warrant of attorney—and the case, such as this, of a bond. I think the distinction is that which I have now laid down—the distinction between a simplex obligatio and an obligation with a penalty; and I think that, when you analyze the distinction between those two, it is obvious that the decision in Cook v. Fowler does not cover the case of an ordinary bond with a penalty.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Fallows & Rider, for T. H. Walford, Birmingham; Thomas White & Sons.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } June 12, 13, 30.
Stirling, J. }

In re MORGAN.
SMITH v. MAY. (a.)

Partition action—Conversion—Money received on sale—Distribution—"Person becoming absolutely entitled"—Partition Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 40), s. 8—Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 120), s. 23.

Land was sold under the Partition Act, 1868, and by an order of court a testator's share of the proceeds were paid out to the trustees of his will, and was invested otherwise than in land, in accordance with the trusts of the will. One of the beneficiaries of the said trust fund died intestate.

Held, that his share of the fund so invested devolved on his legal personal representative, and not on his heir-at-law.

Summons.

The question on this summons was whether a sum of £714 2s. 7d. in the hands of the plaintiff as trustee of the will of Charles Henry Morgan, and representing one-fourth of the proceeds of sale of part of the real estate of the testator, sold in a partition action, devolved on the heir-at-law or the legal personal representative of one of the beneficiaries under the will, who had died intestate.

The will was dated the 30th of September, 1864, and by it the testator gave his residuary real and personal estate to John Jones and John Davies Weston upon trust to pay the rents, interest, dividends, and annual income thereof to his wife for life, and after her death to pay the rents, dividends, and annual income to Henry Charles Croft for life, and after the decease of the survivor to stand seised and possessed of and interested in the residuary real and personal estate upon trust for his two nephews, John Price Morgan and William Morgan, and his two nieces, Charlotte Morgan and Sophia Allen, in equal shares and proportions, and for their respective heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns absolutely. He empowered the trustees during the lifetime of his wife, with her consent in writing, to sell any part of his estate; and directed that they should stand possessed of the moneys to accrue from any such sale upon the like trusts as were therein expressed in regard to his general trust property and as though such moneys had originally formed part of his estate. The will contained no provision authorizing the trustees to invest in the purchase of land.

The testator died on the 30th of September, 1864, entitled to an undivided sixth share of an estate known as the Croft estate.

In June, 1875, an action was brought for the partition of this estate, and among the defendants were the trustees of the testator's will. On the 6th of March, 1875, the usual judgment was given in the action directing inquiries with a view to partition or sale of the estate. On the 20th of March, 1876, an order was made giving leave to Matilda Morgan, the testator's widow, to attend the proceedings in the action, which she thenceforth did. No other beneficiary under the will was a party to the action or was served with notice of or attended the proceedings.

By the chief clerk's certificate, dated the 16th of May, 1876, it was found that the defendants in that action, the trustees of the will of Charles Henry Morgan, were entitled to one-sixth of the estate, and it was stated as follows: "The last-named defendants have a power of sale with the consent of Matilda Morgan, the widow of the said Charles Henry Morgan and tenant for life under his will. The said Matilda Morgan has attended the proceedings in this cause pursuant to the order dated the 20th of March, 1876." It was further certified as follows: "All the persons interested in the said lands and hereditaments as aforesaid are parties to this cause or have attended the proceedings therein pursuant to order, and severally request a sale and a distribution of the proceeds instead of a division of the said lands and hereditaments."

On the 29th of May, 1876, an order was made for the sale of the Croft estate, and it was sold accordingly.

On the 28th of April, 1877, an order was made for the distribution of the proceeds of sale, and it was thereby ordered that one-sixth thereof should be paid to the "defendants John Jones and John Davies Weston as the trustees of the will of Charles Henry Morgan, deceased." The legal estate was outstanding in mortgages, and the trustees of Charles Henry Morgan's will did not join in the covenants to the purchasers of the Croft estate. A further order to the like effect was made on the 1st of June, 1878.

In pursuance of these orders the trustees of the testator's will received a sum of £2,858 10s. 4d. which they invested in accordance with the trusts of the testator's will.

The testator's widow died on the 10th of October, 1897, John Price Morgan, one of the beneficiaries named in the will, died intestate on the 7th of December, 1885, and the question arose with reference to the devolution of his share.

Inskip, for the trustees.

Christopher James, for the legal personal representatives.

Adams, for the heir-at-law.

STIRLING, J., after stating the facts, continued: By section 8 of the Partition Act, 1868, it is provided that sections 23 to 25 (both inclusive) of the Leases and Sales of Settled Estate Act, 1856, shall extend to and apply to moneys to be received on any sale under the authority of the Partition Act, 1868. By section 23 of the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act, 1856, money received on any sale is to be applied as the court shall from time to time direct to some or one of the following purposes—viz.: "The purchase or redemption of the land tax, or the discharge or redemption of any incumbrance affecting the hereditaments in respect of which such money was paid, or affecting any other hereditaments, subject to the same uses or trusts; or the purchase of other hereditaments to be settled in the same manner as the hereditaments in respect of which the money was paid; or the payment to any person becoming absolutely entitled." These purposes are expressed in terms almost identical with those of section 69 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845.

It has been held that where the share of a person under disability in a fund arising from a sale under either the Partition Act, 1868, or the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, remains in court it devolves as real estate: see Foster v. Foster, 24 W. R. 185, 1 Ch. D. 588; Kelland v. Fulford, 25 W. R. 506, 6 Ch. D. 491; Mildmay v. Quicke, 25 W. R. 788, 6 Ch. D. 553; In re Barker, 29 W. R. 873, 17 Ch. D. 241. The reason is there stated by James, L.J., in the last case (see p. 243): "We find that the words are, that the money is to be laid out in the purchase of hereditaments, to be settled in the same manner as the hereditaments in respect of which it was paid, and that means it is to be limited to the same uses, which is in fact a reconversion, unless the matter is governed by the other words, 'or to a person becoming absolutely entitled.'"

(a.) Reported by PAUL STRICKLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

If the fund which represented the testator's share of the Croft estate had remained in court instead of being paid out to trustees, I should have thought that the share of John Price Morgan under the testator's will would have devolved as real estate; but the court has ordered the fund to be paid out to the trustees—that is, in the language of the Lord Justice, has treated the matter as governed by the words "to a person becoming absolutely entitled." For this mode of dealing with the share there is considerable authority. In In re Hobson's Trusts, 26 W. R. 470, 7 Ch. D. 708, the question arose under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and was brought before the Court of Appeal upon the refusal of the Vice-Chancellor of the County Palatine to pay out funds to which married women were entitled, to the trustees of their marriage settlements, such trustees having power to sell and give receipts; the Court of Appeal in that case ordered the payment out to the trustees. [His lordship referred to the judgment of James, L.J., and continued:] That decision was acted on in many subsequent cases, among which I may refer to In re Ward's Estates, 33 W. R. 149, 28 Ch. D. 100, where an order was made for payment to trustees who held upon trust, to sell at the request in writing of the tenant for life, who joined in the petition. However, in the case of In re Smith, 37 W. R. 199, 40 Ch. D. 386, in the Court of Appeal, Cotton and Bowen, L.JJ., expressed serious doubts as to the correctness of the view expressed by James, L.J., in In re Hobson's Trusts, while Lindley, L.J., said that he was not prepared to say that the court might not have had jurisdiction under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, to order payment to the trustees. All these learned judges agreed that the jurisdiction, if it existed, ought not to be exercised in that case.

These cases all were under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, but the language of the Settled Estates Act of 1856 is so nearly identical that they have always been taken to be authorities for the purposes of that Act also.

In that state of the authorities, it seems to me that In re Hobson's Trusts has not been overruled and that a court of first instance cannot hold that the order there made was bad. Even if that case had been overruled I should find great difficulty in saying that the order which was made in the present case more than twenty-three years ago, and has never been appealed from, is not binding on all parties interested. This being so, the only question which remains is, what is the effect of the orders made in the present action? In my judgment the effect was that the fund in court ceased to be applicable to be laid out in land under the Settled Estates Act, 1856, and came to the hands of the trustees of the will of Charles Henry Morgan, to be held upon the trusts thereby declared. These trusts do not authorize an investment in land, and in my opinion the sum as to which the question arises devolves on the legal personal representative of John Price Morgan and not on his heir-at-law.

Solicitors, Arber & Lewis, for Press, Inskip, & Press, Bristol; S. A. Stephens.

---

Chan. Div. } July 18.
Kekewich, J. }

PÉPIN v. BRUYÈRE. (a.)

Conflict of laws—Will—Unattested will—Valid according to French law—Bequest of leaseholds in England —Lex rei sitæ—Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26).

The will of a foreigner domiciled abroad, though valid according to the lex domicilii, and though admitted to probate in England, will not pass leaseholds in England unless executed in accordance with the formalities required by the Wills Act.

In this case the following question of law was set down for argument by order—namely, whether the beneficial interest of the testator, a French subject domiciled in France at the date of his will and of his death, in a leasehold messuage in England, passed by virtue of his unattested will to the specific legatee thereof, or whether the testator died intestate as to such beneficial interest. The testator died in the year 1895, leaving a holograph, but unattested, will which was made in French form and was valid according to the law of France, and letters of administration with the will annexed of the personal estate of the testator were granted by the Probate Division to the defendant Bruyère.

P. O. Lawrence, Q.C., and Jason Smith, for the next-of-kin, argued that in order to pass leasehold property in England the will must comply with the formalities required by the Wills Act, and referred to Jarman on Wills, pp. 2, 5; Dicey's Conflict of Laws, pp. 72, 519; Freke v. Lord Carbery, 21 W. R. 835, L. R. 16 Eq. 461; Duncan v. Lawson, 37 W. R. 524, 41 Ch. D. 394.

Warrington, Q.C., and Mackay, for the legatee, argued that the testator being a domiciled French subject, and the will being valid by the law of the domicil, letters of administration with the will annexed had been properly granted in respect thereof, although it did not comply with the formalities required by the Wills Act; and that the consequence of such grant was that the administrator was bound to deal with all the property coming to his hands, including the leaseholds, according to the terms of the will, provided the disposition of the leaseholds by the will was not in substance illegal by the law of England.

They referred to Westlake's Private International Law, ss. 164, 169; Bremer v. Freeman, 5 W. R. 618, 10 Moo. P. C. 306; Croker v. Marquis of Hertford, 4 Moo. P. C. 339, at p. 361; Hood v. Lord Barrington, L. R. 6 Eq. 218, 17 W. R. Ch. Dig. 151; De Fogassieras v. Duport, 11 L. R. Ir. 123; In re Price, Tomlin v. Latter, ante, p. 373, [1900] 1 Ch. 442.

KEKEWICH, J.—It might be doing an injustice to the defendant (the legatee) to say that his contention goes so far as this that a will of a foreigner in order to pass real estate or chattels real in England need only be a will according to the law of the domicil, but certainly I understand the argument to go to this extent, that when the will has been ascertained to be valid according to the domicil, and therefore is admissible to probate, then all questions as regards real estate and chattels real in England cease, and the will must operate as if it were to all intents and purposes a valid will. Reliance was placed very strongly on Bremer v. Freeman, and I am not sure that the first statement of the contention is not that to adopt. That was a decision in a well known case, and I will read two lines from the head note: "The forms and solemnities of a will are governed by the law of the domicil of the testator." That is really all that was decided in that case for the present purpose; but the question arose in the Irish case of De Fogassieras v. Duport, on the further point, not at all conflicting, of course, with Bremer v. Freeman, whether the testamentary law of England, being also the law of Ireland for this purpose, was applicable to a will disposing of chattels real so as to make it necessary that the formalities required by the Wills Act should be observed before the will could be regarded as valid for that purpose. It arose there in a peculiar case; the testator had made a will executed according to the Wills Act, but it had not been made in a way which the law of France required, he being a French subject and domiciled in France, so that the principle of Bremer v. Freeman had to be applied with reference to a will which contained a disposition of chattels real in Ireland, and the court there held that the will must be good as regards the chattels real because the will was executed according to the Wills Act, but that it would not be good as regards ordinary personal estate because not executed according to the law of domicil. Therefore, adopting that principle, they granted a limited probate, that is, a probate limited to chattels real. Mr. Dicey, in his book, refers to that case in this way (p. 523): "This case is an Irish case and refers to land in Ireland, but undoubtedly is sound in principle and applies to immovables in England. Note that the will which also contained bequests of movables was as regards them invalid as not being executed in accordance with the law of the testator's domicil." That case, therefore, seems to me to be not in any way an answer to the principle established by the case of Bremer v. Freeman, which no doubt is perfectly well established law; but to show that it does not apply to real estate or chattels real and that because a will is admitted to probate it does not by any means follow that it affects real estate or chattels real. It seems to be the weakness of the defendant's case that he relies upon Hood v. Lord Barrington. There a will had been admitted to probate and the executors proposed to sell leaseholds, and the question was whether they were entitled to sell, and, it being questioned, their power to sell was upheld for the reason fully explained by Lord Romilly in his judgment, and further explained in Jarman on Wills (5th ed.), p. 5*n*, where it is said, "To dispose of leaseholds a will must be executed according to 1 Vict. c. 26, and that the will of a domiciled foreigner not so executed, though it may be proved here and will enable the executor to sell leaseholds (Hood v. Lord Barrington) will not operate on the beneficial interest. The title of the executor is from the probate; the beneficial interest will devolve as undisposed of." As I said, the weak point in the defendant's argument seems to me to be this—that it assumes that when once you have admitted the will to probate everything is done, and it is not necessary to consider the question whether the will is a good disposition of chattels real or real estate in this country. Here we have the will of a foreigner which, although not strictly proved here, is on the records of the court as annexed to a grant of letters of administration, which for this purpose is equivalent to probate. It is strange that there is no direct authority on the exact point which I have to decide, but I think it is perfectly clear, not only from the text-books, but also by the judgment of Lord Selborne in Freke v. Lord Carbery, that in dealing with leaseholds I am dealing with real estate—that is to say, that all the doctrines in reference to the applicability of the lex rei sitæ to real estate are also applicable when you come to deal with leaseholds. So far I have got judicial authority; beyond that I have not. But there is a strong consensus of opinion among the text-book writers. There is the authority of Jarman, which, although not dealing directly with international law, still necessarily does indirectly do so in connection with wills, and there we have a distinct expression of opinion. Mr. Dicey is perfectly clear on the subject. It is true he does not put forward any authority, because there is none; but he does express an opinion as if it was not a thing in doubt. He says (p. 520): "The formalities required for the devise of immovables, whether realty or personalty, the restrictions (if any) on such devise or bequest, and generally the validity of a will of lands, are wholly governed by the ordinary testamentary law of England." Then, in that convenient series of illustrations which help one to understand the book, he gives (p. 522) really the very case we have here: "A domiciled Scotchman dies possessed of freehold and leaseholds in England. He leaves no will, or, what in this case is the same thing, no will which is valid according to the law of England. The freeholds descend to his heir according to the law of England (lex situs). The leaseholds devolve upon the next-of-kin as determined by the Statute of Distributions." Mr. Westlake in his book proceeds on the same lines. There is no doubt room for Mr. Warrington's criticism as to the change in reference to paragraph 169 as regards movables and real estate, but it is quite plain that no real estate can be devised by will except in the form required by English law. He does recognise in the previous section, speaking of chattels real, that the question is a new one in a sense—that is to say, in the sense that there is no judicial authority upon it, but in another sense it is a point which is not new at all. It seems to have occurred to the text writers and to have been embodied by them in books, and so far as we have had to consider it the question has been treated, I cannot say as settled because it cannot be settled until the exact point arises and is contested, but as free from doubt. I must hold that in this case these leaseholds, being part of the soil of England, and therefore, as Lord Selborne puts it in Freke v. Lord Carbery, as much an interest in land as if they were freehold, are not disposed of by a will which does not comply with the formalities prescribed by the Wills Act, and that that is so, notwithstanding that the will has been recognized as a disposition admissible to probate so that the administrator can claim under the authority of the Probate Division.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, Baker & Nairne; Herbelet.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Lord Alverstone, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) — June 18, 19; July 5.

In re GRAINGER.
DAWSON v. HIGGINS. (a.)

Will—Evidence—Ambiguity—Admission of extrinsic evidence.

In endeavouring to construe a will, extrinsic evidence is admissible in order to explain an ambiguity in the words of the will themselves, but not in order to explain the intention of the testator.

A testator, after giving the usual direction as to the payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and after bequeathing a number of general pecuniary legacies, gave and bequeathed "all the residue and remainder" of two specific mortgage funds, after payment of his just debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, to certain persons therein mentioned. There was no general residuary bequest. Extrinsic evidence was offered to show that the testator possessed at the time of his making his will no residuary property out of which to provide for the general pecuniary legacies already referred to. It appeared, however, that at the date of his death the testator possessed residuary property sufficient for the purpose in question.

Held (Rigby, L.J., dissenting), that, as a matter of fact, the words of the will, "all the residue and remainder were themselves ambiguous; that extrinsic evidence was accordingly admissible to show the state of the testator's property at the time of his making his will; that the general pecuniary legacies were payable out of the mortgage funds; and that there was an intestacy with respect to the residuary property which the testator had at the date of his death.

Per Rigby, L.J.—The words of a will are not themselves ambiguous unless, after full consideration, it is determined judicially that no interpretation whatever can be given them.

This was an appeal from a decision of Stirling, J., given on the 7th of November, 1899.

By his will dated the 31st of May, 1895, the late Monsignor John Grainger, after appointing the Rev. William Dawson his executor, and after directing that all his just debts and funeral and testamentary expenses should be paid as soon as conveniently might be after his decease, bequeathed to his sister, Philomela Grainger, a specific legacy of certain plate and china marked with the Grainger arms; and devised and bequeathed to his uncle, the Most Rev. Charles Eyre, Archbishop of Glasgow, or to the Archbishop, or Bishop, of Glasgow for the time being, a certain freehold church and presbytery situated at Exmouth, in the county of Devon, together with their contents.

The above-mentioned direction as to the payment of debts was contained in a printed form, but the rest of the will was in the testator's own handwriting.

The testator then proceeded, after giving a number of general pecuniary legacies, amounting in all to a sum of between eleven and twelve thousand pounds, to certain persons therein more particularly mentioned, to give and bequeath "all the residue and remainder of the sum of £9,187 lent on mortgage to Sir John Lawson . . . and of the sum of £4,000 lent on mortgage to Mrs. Eliza Kirk . . . after payment of my just debts and funeral expenses and the expenses of proving this my will," to certain Canons Regular of the Lateran.

It appeared that at the time of his making this will the testator possessed only the two mortgage debts in question; the freehold church and presbytery, and the plate and china, already mentioned as specifically devised and bequeathed; and a sum of £145 at his bankers. He subsequently acquired, on the death of his mother, a further sum of about £10,000, which was still in his possession at the time of his death. There was no evidence to suggest that the testator contemplated the receipt of this legacy at the time of his making his will.

The testator died, and his will was proved on the 26th of January, 1899. The defendant Philomela Grainger was, at the time of the testator's death, his sole next-of-kin. A question having arisen as to whether, on the true construction of the testator's will, the general pecuniary legacies already referred to were payable out of the two mortgage debts of £9,187 and £4,000 respectively, or out of the subsequently-acquired sum of £10,000 in exoneration of the two said mortgage debts, an originating summons was taken out by the executor for the determination of this and other questions. On the 7th of November, 1899, Stirling, J., decided (inter alia) that, according to the true construction of the will, and in the events which had occurred, the said sum of £10,000 was liable for the payment of the legacies given by the said will in exoneration of the two several mortgage debts already mentioned.

From this decision the executor, the general legatees, and Philomela Grainger now appealed.

Theobald, Q.C., and J. Fischer Williams, for one of the appellants.—The testator must have meant the general pecuniary legacies to be paid out of the two mortgage funds. We are entitled, in a case like this, to look at the surrounding facts; and from the surrounding facts we learn that the testator had, at the time of his making his will, no other fund available for the purpose. He had no sufficient ground for believing that he would survive his mother, and then come in for an additional fortune. Bearing these facts in mind we are in a position to solve the ambiguity of this will. "All the residue and remainder" of the two mortgage funds must necessarily be taken to mean "all the residue and remainder," after deduction, not only of the expressly-mentioned "just debts and funeral expenses," but also of the not expressly mentioned, but obviously implied, preceding general pecuniary legacies.

Upjohn, Q.C., and Northcote, for the general pecuniary legatees. — "Rest and residue" must obviously be read with reference to the general legacies which have been given immediately before; per Lord Kingsdown in Greville v. Browne, 7 W. R. 673, at p. 674, 7 H. L. Cas. 689, at p. 705: "If any person unfamiliar with the technicalities of the law were to read a will to this effect—the testator gives a certain portion of his property to one person, and devises all the rest of his property to another, I cannot doubt that his opinion would be that 'the rest' must be construed to mean that which remains after what has previously been given is withdrawn": see also Wheeler v. Howell, 3 K. & J. 198.

Jenkins, Q.C., and W. M. Cann, for the defendants the Canons Regular.—There is no ambiguity here of a kind to justify the admission of extrinsic parol evidence. The testator has himself defined the meaning of "rest and residue"—i.e., the surplus left after the payment of his just debts and funeral and testamentary expenses. We are not, accordingly, entitled to inquire into the state of his assets at the time he made his will.

(a.) Reported by J. E. MORRIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Ingpen, Q.C., for other parties.

Theobald, Q.C., in reply.—Extrinsic evidence is admissible in the present case to clear up an ambiguity: Attorney-General v. Drummond, 1 Dr. & War. 353; Colpoys v. Colpoys, Jac. 451; Singleton v. Tomlinson, 26 W. R. 722, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 404, per Lord Blackburn at p. 425.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 5.—Lord ALVERSTONE, M.R.—In this case we have to construe the will of the Rev. John Grainger, a Roman Catholic clergyman. Stirling, J., has held that the clause in it commencing with the words "all the residue and remainder" is to be read by itself, and is to be construed as a bequest to the canons of the sum of £13,187 lent on mortgage, or of so much of it as remained at the testator's death, in 1898, after payment only of the testator's debts, funeral expenses, and the expense of proving the will; and that there is no connection between this clause and the preceding part of the will, or, in other words, that the pecuniary legacies were intended to be paid, not out of the £13,187, but out of any general residue possessed by the testator at the time of his death.

I am unable to adopt this view. I think that these words, as they stand in the will, form part of, and must be read in connection with, the preceding list of legacies, and that the words "all the residue and remainder" are at least open to the construction that the testator intended them to refer to what would be left of the sum of £13,187, which he clearly had in his mind, after payment of the legacies and after satisfying the annuity of £60 a year given to his housekeeper. And I think the words "after the payment of my just debts and funeral expenses" are not intended to define the mode in which all the "residue and remainder" of the sum of £13,187 is to be arrived at, but are intended to indicate that this residue and remainder, after payment of the legacies, might still be reduced by the payment of his debts. This seems to me the natural meaning of the clause in the place in which it occurs in the will, especially when it is borne in mind that the previous direction as to payment of debts, which was in somewhat different words, was in the printed form upon which the testator wrote his will. It is to be noted that there is no general residuary bequest, or anything on the face of the will to indicate that the testator possessed, or thought that he possessed, any other property than that with which he was dealing; and in my view if the meaning of the clause is not that which I have indicated, it is at least ambiguous, and open to the construction which I have put upon it as well as to the construction which Stirling, J., has placed upon it. Under these circumstances I think the case is one in which, upon the authorities which are collected and discussed in Wigram on Extrinsic Evidence, Jarman (4th ed.), pp. 422 et seq., we are entitled to know what was the position of the testator at the time he made his will—to put ourselves, as some of the cases have said, in the position of the testator when he was writing the will. It is, in my opinion, established beyond doubt that he then possessed the plate and china, the freehold church, the sum of £13,187 advanced on mortgage, and a small sum of £145 at his bank, and no other property. There is nothing to show that he had expectations from his mother or from any other source; and I think it would be wrong to assume that the will contemplated that legacies and annuities which amounted to between £11,000 and £12,000 should be paid out of any general residue. I think the language of the will shows that the testator intended to deal with all the property which he believed he possessed by dividing it up among the legatees; and I think the words "all the residue and remainder" of the sum of £9,187 and of the sum of £4,000 clearly indicated this intention. It is to be noted that the clause does not come as a separate and independent clause following after the printed direction as to the payment of the debts. There is no separate gift of the residue. If the language was intended to have the meaning which Stirling, J., has put upon it, the words "residue and remainder" are somewhat superfluous. One would have expected to find a gift of the £13,187 after payment of the debts, &c. If this clause had stood alone, or was clearly separated from the other parts of the will, it would be more difficult to avoid the construction which Stirling, J., has put upon it; but having regard to the language used, and to its position, I think, as I have said, that, if the clause is not to be read in the way I have indicated, it creates an ambiguity which makes it our duty to get what light we can as to the circumstances of the testator at the time he wrote his will. For the above reasons I think the judgment of Stirling, J., was erroneous, and that we must construe the will as containing a bequest to the canons of the residue only of the amounts lent on mortgage after payment of the legacies and debts, &c. The result will be that there is an intestacy as to any residue of the property.

RIGBY, L.J.—The difference of view which exists in this case depends, I think, upon the construction of the words of the will, and not upon any divergence of opinion as to the rules regulating the admission of parol evidence. It has not been contended here, or, indeed, in any case since the publication in 1831 of the first edition of Sir James Wigram's treatise on the rules of law respecting the admission of extrinsic evidence in aid of the interpretation of wills, that if a will upon the face of it, and independently of extrinsic evidence, ought to bear a definite construction, that construction can be varied by evidence de hors the will. I take the publication of the said treatise as the dividing point, not because I am aware of any case before that time in which the proposition hereby sought to be negatived was decided, or even argued, but because the speedy and complete acceptance by the bench and bar of the authoritative nature of Sir James Wigram's treatise seems to render it unnecessary to investigate earlier authorities, except so far as they are recognized, or commented on, therein. The third edition, being the last revised by the learned author himself, was published in 1840; and without intending to throw any doubt upon the very full fourth edition published in 1858 (because the third was out of print), which does not in any relevant respect differ from the third, it is to the third that I shall refer whenever I find it necessary to invoke the authority of the writer.

The first point which I think it convenient to notice is the fundamental distinction between evidence simply explanatory of the words (of the will) themselves, and evidence sought to be applied to prove intention itself as an independent fact (Wigram, p. 10). This distinction must never be lost sight of. The great majority of the cases of explanatory evidence consisted of the ascertainment of persons and things insufficiently explained by the will itself. When I say that it has never been contended that a will bearing a definite construction can have another and different construction put upon it by extrinsic evidence, I by no means undertake to assert that in point of fact this has never been done. Before the publication of Sir James Wigram's treatise there probably were, and subsequently there possibly may have been, instances of the kind. All such instances, however, must be attributable to the result of an unconscious, though illegitimate, yielding to the almost necessary bias in favour of a particular intention indicated or suggested by extrinsic facts, as distinguished from the explanatory effect of such facts on the words of the will under discussion. The danger of this bias is manifest, and has been frequently adverted to—as, for instance, by Lord Thurlow in Fonnereau v. Poyntz, 1 Br. C. C. 472, at pp. 477 and 478, and by Sir Thomas Plumer, M.R., in Colpoys v. Colpoys, Jac. 451, at p. 455. The importance of it is well illustrated by the great pains taken by those learned judges, and by Lord Eldon in Attorney-General v. Grote, Wigram, Appendix, p. 200, to make it clear that in the wills before them respectively there was a sufficient want of exactness in the description of the legacies bequeathed to justify the resort to parol evidence as to the state of the property. In Attorney-General v. Grote Lord Eldon insists upon the point to which, in one form or another, he frequently adverted—see, for instance, Barksdale v. Gilliat, 1 Swans. 562—that individual belief ought not to govern the case—it must be judicial persuasion. There are numerous cases in which counsel for the parties have ingeniously, though of course not admittedly, sought to gain the benefit of the bias above referred to before establishing the right to resort to the parol evidence. All the points above insisted upon are capable of considerable enlargement; but enough has been said to show that the first question in this, as in every case where the construction of a written document is concerned, is whether the will or other document upon the face of it is, or is not, ambiguous; or, on the contrary, capable of a definite judicial construction. It must be borne in mind that a will is not ambiguous by reason only that it is difficult of construction. If it is finally held to bear a particular construction that must govern its legal meaning, notwithstanding any difficulty that the courts may have felt in arriving judicially at the construction. It is only ambiguous when, after full consideration, it is determined judicially that no interpretation can be given to it. The will, which is dated the 31st of May, 1895, and is, with the exception of some immaterial parts, in the testator's handwriting throughout, commences with the appointment of an executor. Then follows a direction that all the testator's debts and funeral and testamentary expenses should be paid as soon as conveniently might be after his decease. From this would be implied a charge upon his real estate in aid of his personalty of all his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses so far as they involved debts. Then comes a special bequest of china and plate to his mother and sister as joint tenants, and a specific devise and bequest of a church and presbytery (being real estate) and their contents, and a bequest of a sum of £2 000, in favour of the Archbishop of Glasgow. Next follows a bequest to his housekeeper of an annuity of £60 and a large number of pecuniary legacies, two of them to godchildren, and many of them to members of religious orders, amounting in nominal value (including the annuity at an estimate) to nearly £12,000. The important point to notice here is that there is not a syllable to show that the legacies are demonstrative—as they would be if payable out of a special fund—or other than general legacies payable out of residuary personal estate, if any. Immediately thereafter comes the following bequest: "All the residue and remainder of the sum of £9,187 lent on mortgage to Sir John Lawson . . . and of the sum of £4,000 lent on mortgage to Mrs. Alice Kirk. . . . After payment of my just debts and funeral expenses and the expenses of proving this my will, I give and bequeath to" certain Canons Regular of the Lateran. There the will ends, there being no bequest of residue of personalty; but, if the legacies are payable out of residuary personalty only, there is no intestacy unless the legacies are insufficient to exhaust the whole. I will deal first with the bequest last mentioned to the Canons Regular independently of the bequest of legacies preceding. It does not appear in itself open to any doubt whatsoever. It is a gift to them of the residue of mortgage debts after payment of debts, funeral expenses, and the expense of proving the will. The mortgage debts are specific items of the personalty; and the payments directed to be made thereout are clearly defined and capable of being accurately ascertained. So far, therefore, as the bequest itself is concerned, the residue, which is the subject of the gift, is also capable of being, and must ultimately be, precisely and accurately ascertained; and the expression "residue and remainder" is therefore fully and exhaustively accounted for and explained. I do not see how a desire to give whatever remains of the mortgage debts after payment thereout of the testator's debts and funeral expenses and the expense of proving his will, could be better, or more accurately, expressed; or how words could have been used more capable of conveying that desire without involving any additional meaning. It was suggested that a gift of all the mortgage debts, after payment of the specified sums, would have been sufficient; and would have left the interpretation free from doubt. But such a gift, though intelligible, would have been inaccurate. Nothing is intended to be given until the specific payments have been made. As the bequest is made out of specific sums, and only out of those sums, it is itself a specific bequest uncertain in amount during the testator's lifetime, but fully ascertainable after his death. The question, therefore, may be stated as follows: Whether a direction to pay general legacies out of a specified fund can be inferred, not as a matter of surmise or conjecture, but as a matter of judicial interpretation, simply and solely because the gift of the legacies is followed by a gift of all the "residue and remainder" of the fund, in a case in which the words "residue and remainder" have from the context a plain and undoubted meaning, not involving any reference to payment of the legacies; and in which nothing whatever is judicially known as to the state of the property; and in which the inference would involve an intestacy as to all the general residue, whatever it might happen to be. No authority to that or any like effect was cited to us. If there were any sound rule on which the inference could be drawn, it would extend to any general legacies given just before the specific bequest, whether great or small. A legacy of £10, for instance, would by inference be payable out of the specifically bequeathed fund, though standing alone. No inference can therefore be drawn from the approach to equality of the total amount of the legacies and the presumptive amount of the specifically bequeathed fund. In the present case such a construction would have the effect of varying, and, pro tanto, revoking, the specific bequest, by reading, in effect, the words "after payment of debts," &c., as though they stood "after payment of debts, legacies," &c. If this was what the testator intended he ought to have so provided; and it would have been natural that he should have done so when a single word would have been sufficient. If nothing had been known as to the amount of residue, I venture to think that such a construction would never have been contended for. Greville v. Browne, and other cases governed by the same principles, were, indeed, referred to as supporting the contention that the general legacies are payable out of the mortgage moneys because given earlier in the will. But the differences between those and the present case are fundamental. First of all, the residuary gift of real estate there relied upon was not described in such a way as to limit its effect, but was a general gift. Then there was there—and this is the important point—a mixed residue of real and personal estate. Further, the charge on the real estate in no way depended on the position in the will of the legacies. That charge on the real estate would have been operative if the gift of legacies had followed, instead of preceded, the residuary devise. This results from the case of Elliott v. Dearsley, 29 W. R. 494, 16 Ch. D. 322, decided by Fry, J., and confirmed on appeal by James, Cotton, and Lush, L.JJ. Fry, J., at p. 326 (16 Ch. D.), quotes the Lord Chancellor's enunciation of the principle in Greville v. Browne: "For nearly a century and a-half this rule has been laid down, that if there is a general gift of legacies, and then the testator gives the rest and residue of his property real and personal, the legacies are to come out of the realty. It is considered that the whole is one mass; that part of that mass is represented by legacies, and that what is afterwards given is given minus what has been before given, and therefore given subject to the prior gift." Fry, J., then proceeds, by saying: "In other words, the rule seems to be this, that that which in its nature is a charge on part has become a charge or a deduction from the entire mass, and that principle appears to apply whether the legacies are given before or after the gift of the residue." James, L.J., at p. 329, says: "Here the legacies"—which were given after the residuary devise—"are no doubt charged on the real estate by force of the word 'residue,'" and the other Lord Justices concurred. It is plain from this decision that the expressions in Lord Campbell's judgment referring to the prior gift of the legacies, and the subsequent making of the residuary devise and bequest, and any similar expressions in other judgments, are to be treated as not being emphatic in the sense of defining the position of the bequests in the will, but only as referring to the actual facts of the particular case under discussion. I may say that there are several independent points in the report which I have not taken notice of. In this way the only authorities plausibly referred to as justifying the construction contended for, disappear, and there seems to me to be no ground left for that construction. But if, notwithstanding all that has been said, the construction contended for could be supported, it would result that it should be arrived at on the construction of the will itself and there would be no ambiguity or doubt making necessary the resort to extrinsic evidence of the amount of personal property at the date of the will. Whether this would be allowable in any case on a will in the terms of that now before us seems more than doubtful. Sir James Wigram, than whom no greater authority has been called to our attention, says (Wigram, p. 103): "In practice an opportunity generally offers for objecting to the admission of evidence the materiality of which is questionable . . . and upon the discussion to which the objection will give rise, the materiality of the evidence will be considered and determined. . . . If, however, the facts tendered be such that they cannot from their nature be material, the court will at once reject them. Therefore evidence of the amount of a testator's personal estate at the time of making his will is in general inadmissible. The reason is obvious. The will, quoad the personal estate, speaks from the death of the testator; and consequently its amount at the time of making of the will, although it might bias the judgment, could not in general form a just ground of inference as to the meaning of the testator's words. Such evidence, however, may, under special circumstances, be material, and then it will be admissible."

The cases referred to as authorities for the departure from the generality of the rule laid down in this placitum are those already referred to—i.e., Barksdale v. Gilliatt, 1 Swans. 562; Fonnereau v. Poyntz, 1 Brown C. C. 472; and Colpoys v. Colpoys, to which might be added Attorney-General v. Grote, Wigram's App. 200; and Druce v. Denison, 6 Ves. 385. Fonnereau v. Poyntz, Colpoys v. Colpoys, and Attorney-General v. Grote were all cases of bequests ultimately held to be ambiguous concerning long annuities. The case of Fonnereau v. Poyntz is carefully explained by Lord Eldon in Druce v. Denison in the following words: "Upon what ground, then, did he admit the evidence? As I have always understood, and now understand it from this report, upon this ground: that the testatrix, having given as a species of stock that which was of no known denomination of stock, the will showed she meant to give something, but did not ascertain the subject she meant to give. Therefore, Lord Thurlow looked at the property in order to prove what she meant, the will proving that she meant to give something. That was not contradicting any description in the will. It was not saying that was the personal estate of the testator which was not her personal estate, but that she meant by those words what she might be taken to mean, because upon the words attending to the different species of stock at the bank it could not be ascertained what species she did mean, it being clear that she meant some": 6 Ves., pp. 401, 402. This explanation would extend with only formal variations to Colpoys v. Colpoys and to Attorney-General v. Grote. The last-mentioned case was confessedly a most difficult one; and Lord Eldon admits, with reference to it, that he had from time to time changed his opinion. Sir W. Grant, who decided it as a judge of first instance, came to a judicial decision, though with great doubt, and to a conclusion on the will itself different from Lord Eldon's ultimate conclusion (see 3 Mer. 316), and of course he paid no attention to the parol evidence as to the state of the property. Barksdale v. Gilliatt and Druce v. Denison were decided by Lord Eldon on the ground that the testator himself had in each case by a writing, either already accepted as testamentary, or capable of being admitted to probate, made references—plainly intended to be explanatory of the will—as to the state of his property; and in Attorney-General v. Grote there was something of the same kind on which Lord Eldon relied—namely, the codicil (3 Mer. 318), wherein the testatrix recited that she might have made a wrong calculation of the value of her fortune in the funds, showing thereby that it was with reference to the actual state of her property that her bequests were made. In all these exceptional cases, therefore, there were special circumstances wholly wanting here to justify the reception of extrinsic evidence as to the state of the property at the date of the will. It would not, however, be necessary to resort to this doctrine, if, as appears to me to be the fact, there is really no doubt as to the construction of the will itself. The sum up, in conclusion, it appears to me that Stirling, J., was fully justified in the decision arrived at on the point here dealt with, and the appeal, in my opinion, ought to be dismissed. If, in fact, the conclusion should be contrary to the intention of the testator, the defeat of that intention would seem to be the logical result of the statutory rule that the will—by which is meant the whole will—must be in writing.

COLLINS, L.J.—I have come to the same conclusion as the Master of the Rolls, though I need not say it is with the utmost diffidence that I find myself constrained to differ on a point of this kind from Stirling, J., and my brother Rigby. There is, however, as it seems to me, no principle of law, and no rule specially applicable to the construction of wills, now in question between us. It is merely a question of what is the fair grammatical meaning of an English sentence when read in its context. Read by itself, cut off from its context, it is, I agree, capable of one meaning only; read in its place in the whole will, it seems to me, as a matter of mere grammar and common sense, to be quite as capable of another meaning, and taking the whole will together—both what it says and what it omits—even without the assistance of extrinsic evidence, I prefer the latter meaning. I do not dispute, therefore, any of the conclusions and observations made on the footing that the words of the will are clear and unambiguous. I will now address myself to the will itself. When we reach the sentence in question, the testator has adopted the printed direction for the payment of his debts in six months, and has then gone on to make in his own handwriting a devise of real estate and a series of bequests amounting in all to about £12,000. He then goes on, "All the residue and remainder of the sum of £9.187 lent on mortgage . . . and of the sum of £4,000 lent on mortgage," giving the details of both the mortgages, "after payment of my just debts and funeral expenses and the expenses of proving this my will, I give and bequeath to" these named persons, and then the will ends. There is no residuary gift. Now, taking the document as a whole, I should have thought it quite clear, but for the fact that my brothers Rigby and Stirling take a different view, that the sentence was grammatically capable of meaning "all that is left of the two mortgage debts at the point I have now reached in my will shall go, after you have paid my debts, &c., out of it, to A. and B." In other words, the expression "all the residue and remainder of" the two mortgage debts, coming as it does at the beginning of the sentence, is to my mind primâ facie a suggestion of a previous deduction from the sums named, which constitutes what he is dealing with as a residue before he goes on to further diminish it by the subtraction of debts. This suggests on the face of the will itself a tacit assumption on the part of the testator that the only sum that he had available, out of which to carve his legacies was these two mortgage debts, which he therefore treats, when he first mentions them, as already depleted by the deduction of legacies; and being depleted, he subsequently deals with them by describing what is left of them as a residue which, when further diminished by payment of his debts, is to be handed over to A. and B. The fact that the testator makes no other residuary gift suggests that he deemed himself as having disposed of all that he had to give; and the will on its face accords with this construction, since, without going outside it, we have such a correspondence between the sums bequeathed and the sums available for their payment as to create a presumption that the testator intended these named funds, and no others, to cover his gifts. That as a matter of grammar the words "all the residue and remainder of" the mortgage debts are capable of this meaning can, I think, be demonstrated. It is said that he has not in terms stated that the legacies, as well as the debts, are to be paid out of the mortgage funds; but that observation misconceives the suggested construction which asserts the prior deduction of the legacies as assumed in the word "residue," and therefore negatives the necessity of introducing the word "legacies" after "debts" in the sentence "after payment of my debts." Test it in this way: Suppose he had begun the will by saying "All the property that I have to dispose of consists of certain freehold land and certain mortgage debts amounting to £4,000," and had then proceeded to devise the freehold and bequeath the legacies and then gone on as in the will, "all the residue and remainder," &c.—could it be doubted that the words "residue" and "remainder" might in strict grammar be construed to mean the residue made by the deduction of legacies? So, likewise, if the words "after payment of my debts," &c., were left out, and the will were left in other respects as it is, could it be contended that there was any grammatical objection to construing "residue and remainder" as meaning that portion of the mortgage debts which remained after the payment of legacies. But it is obvious that the addition of the recital, in the one case, and the omission of the clause about debts, in the other, do not alter the grammatical capabilities of the words in the collocation in which they stand. In the first case the recital helps the inference in favour of one of two possible grammatical constructions; in the second case, the omission, by eliminating that which creates the ambiguity, makes one construction only possible. But together, or separately, they show that the words in question are capable of the construction which I put upon them. A still simpler test would be to enclose the words "after payment of my debts," &c., in a parenthesis. I have said that, taking the whole of the will and the evidence upon the face of it together, I think that the construction I contend for—being quite as sound in point of grammar as that which has been put upon it by Stirling, J.—is more in accordance with the intention to be gathered from the context and the scheme of the will as disclosed upon its face; but if I am further allowed to assist my judgment by the fact proved before Stirling, J., that, with the exception of a small current balance at his bankers, the testator had at the time of his will no other property except that which he purports to dispose of in his will, what was probable before becomes a practical certainty. Stirling, J., seems to have been of opinion that, had it been possible to create a doubt as to what was meant, it would have been legitimate to admit evidence as to the state of testator's assets at the time of the will. For the reasons I have given I think the construction, at the worst, ambiguous; and I think such evidence is admissible. The maxim that in construing a written document surrounding circumstances may be looked at has been nowhere more emphatically laid down than in relation to wills. "Every claimant under a will," says Sir J. Wigram (p. 196), "has a right to require that a court of construction, in the execution of its office, shall by means of extrinsic evidence place itself in the situation of the testator the meaning of whose language it is called upon to declare." Doe v. Martin, 1 Nev. & Mann. 524, is cited as an authority, and though I am aware that qualifications, sometimes subtle and difficult of general application, have been placed on this proposition, still I think that the evidence here suggested falls within the words of Bayley, J., in Doe d. Jersey v. Smith, 2 Brod. & Bing. 553, referred to with approval by Sir Thomas Plumer, M.R., in Colpoys v. Colpoys, Jac. 451, at p. 465. Bayley, J., says: "The evidence here is not to produce a construction against the direct and natural meaning of the words; not to control a provision which was distinct and accurately described, but because there was an ambiguity upon the face of the instrument; because an indefinite expression is used capable of being satisfied in more ways than one; and I look to the state of the property at the time, to the estate and interest the settlor had, and the situation in which she stood with regard to the property she was settling, to see whether that estate or interest or situation would assist us in judging what was her meaning by that indefinite expression." In the same case Sir Thomas Plumer, in dealing with the general rule excluding evidence of a patent ambiguity and the exceptions to that rule, sums up the situation by saying (at p. 464): "As a minor evil, therefore, common sense and the law of England (which are seldom at variance) warrant the departure from the general rule, and call in the light of extrinsic evidence." Common sense would certainly seem to demand that, given a real ambiguity—which, in my judgment, exists here—we should not decide it without availing ourselves of the means at hand of putting ourselves in the position of the testator at the time of the will. But the relation of parol evidence to the construction of written documents is not confined to wills; and the rules regulating it are of general application. The case of Heffield v. Meadows, L. R. 4 C. P. 595, 17 W. R C. L Dig. 62, decided with reference to a guarantee, and having the great authority of the late Sir J. S. Willes, as well as that of Montagu Smith, J., seems to cover the present case. There the question arose upon a guarantee in the following terms: "I, John Meadows, . . . will be answerable for £50 sterling that William York of Stamford, butcher, may buy of John Heffield, of Donington"; and evidence of the circumstances under which the guarantee was given was admitted in order to determine whether it was to be construed as continuing, or as limited to a single transaction. "It is obvious," says Willes, J, at p. 599, "that we cannot decide that question upon the mere construction of the document itself, without looking at the surrounding circumstances to see what was the subject-matter which the parties had in their contemplation when the guarantee was given. It is proper to ascertain that for the purpose of seeing what the parties were dealing about, not for the purpose of altering the terms of the guarantee by words of mouth passing at the time, but as part of the conduct of the parties, in order to determine what was the scope and object of the intended guarantee. Having done that, it will be proper to turn to the language of the guarantee, to see if that language is capable of being construed so as to carry into effect that which appears to have been the real intention of both parties." I think the appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Collyer & Davis; Blount, Lynch, & Petre; Withalls & Belton.

---

App. Bankruptcy.
(Lord Alverstone, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) June 15.

In re DEAKIN.
Ex parte DANIELL. (a.)

Solicitor—Charging order in favour of solicitor—Application to discharge—Limit of time for application—Jurisdiction to make charging order—Solicitors Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 127), s. 28—Bankruptcy Act 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 104.

Where property has been "recovered or preserved" by an order of the Court of Appeal, the court or judge of first instance which has seisin of that order when it comes down to be enforced is equally entitled with the Court of Appeal under section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860, to make a charging order in favour of a solicitor on the property so recovered or preserved.

An application to discharge a charging order must be made with promptitude, even although no steps have been taken to enforce the charging order.

Semble, a judge sitting in bankruptcy is entitled in that capacity to make a charging order under section 28 of the Solicitors Act. 1860.

The interpretation put upon In re Suffield and Watts, 36 W. R. 584 20 Q. B. D. 693, by Vaughan Williams, J., in In re Wood, Ex parte Fanshawe, [1897] 1 Q. B. 314, 45 W. R. Dig. 155, criticized and questioned.

Appeal from a decision of Wright, J., sitting as a judge in bankruptcy.

On the 9th of February, 1900, the Court of Appeal dismissed with costs a receiving order which had been made on the petition of two judgment creditors against the debtor, F. Deakin, on the previous 16th of January.

The costs of the debtor were subsequently taxed at £43 3s. 5d.; and on the 23rd of March, 1900, G. H. Daniell, who had acted as solicitor for the debtor throughout the bankruptcy proceedings, applied for and obtained from Wright, J., sitting as a judge in bankruptcy, a charging order on the sum in question in order to secure his costs, charges, and expenses, under section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860.

This charging order was served on the debtor on the 28th of March; and on the 26th of May notice was given him that an application for the enforcement of the order would be made to the judge in chambers on the 30th May.

On the 29th of May the debtor served on Daniell notice of an application to discharge the order in question.

Both applications came on for hearing before Wright, J., on the 30th of May, when the learned judge refused the debtor's application to discharge, and made an order in favour of Daniell for payment of the sum secured by the charging order.

From this decision the debtor, Deakin, now appealed.

Section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860, enacts as follows: "In any case in which an attorney or solicitor shall be employed to prosecute or defend any suit, matter, or proceeding in any court of justice, it shall be lawful for the court or judge before whom any such suit, matter, or proceeding has been heard, or shall be defending, to declare such attorney or solicitor entitled to a charge upon the property recovered or preserved. . . ."

Section 104 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, enacts as follows: "(1) Every court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy under this Act, may review, rescind, or vary any order made by it under its bankruptcy jurisdiction. (2) Orders in bankruptcy matters shall, at the instance of any person aggrieved, be subject to appeal as follows: . . . (d) No appeal shall be entertained except in conformity with such general rules as may for the time being be in force in relation to the appeal."

Turrell, for the appellant Deakin.—(1) The charging order is altogether invalid. Section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860, enables a charging order to be made only by the court or judge before whom the property has been recovered or preserved. In this case the property was recovered or preserved in the Court of Appeal, and that court alone, accordingly, and not Wright, J., or any other judge of an inferior court, was entitled to make this charging order. (2) But even supposing that the order is good, it is good only as made by the learned judge in his capacity as a judge of the High Court of Justice, not in his capacity as a judge sitting in bankruptcy. A judge sitting in bankruptcy has, in fact, no jurisdiction as such to make a charging order under section 28. This is the effect of the decision in In re Suffield and Watts, 36 W. R. 584, 20 Q. B. D 693, as was pointed out by Vaughan Williams, J., in In re Wood, Ex parte Fanshawe, [1897] 1 Q. B. 314, 45 W. R. Dig. 155. Since, then, this order was made by the learned judge in his capacity as a judge of the High Court, it was open to him to discharge it within those time limits which are recognized as binding upon the High Court in cases of the kind—i.e., at any time before the order had been acted on. Had Wright, J., refused to discharge the order upon the merits of the case the debtor would not have complained. As a matter of fact, however, the learned judge acted under a misapprehension. Conceiving that he had originally made the order under his jurisdiction in bankruptcy, he further conceived that he was at liberty to discharge it only under the power of section 104 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, as that section has been limited by the decision in In re May, 32 W. R. 839, 12 Q. B. D. 497. Without going into the merits he accordingly dismissed the debtor's application on the ground that it was made too late, in accordance with that section and decision.

(a.) Reported by J. E. MORRIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Counsel for the appellant also referred to Guy v. Churchill, 35 W. R. 706, 35 Ch. D. 489.

Herbert Reed, Q.C., and G. P. C. Lawrence, for the respondent Daniell.—(1) The court below has jurisdiction to make the charging order, even though the order by which the property was recovered or preserved happens to have been made in the Court of Appeal. (2) A judge in bankruptcy is perfectly entitled to make a charging order under section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860. In re Suffield and Watts does not bear out the interpretation put upon it by Vaughan Williams, J., in In re Wood, Ex parte Fanshawe. This order, accordingly, was made by Wright, J., under his bankruptcy jurisdiction: and, that being so, he is entitled to discharge it only within the time limits imposed by section 104 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, as read in connection with the decision in In re May. (3) But even if it be held that the learned judge made the order in his capacity of a judge of the High Court, yet we still say that, as a matter of fact, he refused this application to discharge on its merits, and not because it was made in contravention of some hard and fast rule as to time.

Counsel for the respondent also referred to Dallow v. Garrold, 33 W. R. 219, 14 Q. B. D. 543. and In re Humphreys, Ex parte Roberts, 4 Manson 239.

Turrell replied.

Lord ALVERSTONE, M.R.—This is an appeal from a decision of Wright, J., who has declined to set aside a charging order made by him on the 23rd of March last. Two main points have been urged by the appellant: (1) that the judge who made this order had no power to make it, having regard to the fact that the decision in favour of the appellant, by means of which the property was recovered, was made by the Court of Appeal; and (2) that the application to set aside this charging order could have been made to Wright, J., at any time, and was not, in fact, made too late. As to this second point, it is suggested that Wright, J., acted on some hard and fast rule as to there being some time limit. I doubt very much whether he so acted at all. I think that he acted generally, if I may use the expression, on the ground that the application was made too late. As to the first point, I think that Wright, J., had jurisdiction to make the order. The order was undoubtedly made by him sitting as a judge alike of the High Court and in bankruptcy. Dallow v. Garrold decided that any judge of the division in which the property had been recovered or preserved could make a charging order. Perhaps I may be allowed to add that, had he not, the result would be rather serious. Now were it not for what is said by Vaughan Williams, J., in In re Wood, Ex parte Fanshawe, I should also have thought that a judge in bankruptcy ought to have been able to make the same kind of order under section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860. The language of that section—"the court or judge before whom any such suit, matter, or proceeding has been heard, or shall be depending"—is wide enough to include such a case. I do not myself think, however, that the point is really material, for Wright, J., acted in both capacities—as a judge of the High Court and as a judge in bankruptcy; and therefore, in one capacity or another, he had power to make the order. It must not, however, be thought that I should have endorsed, even if the point had been material, the view that if the learned judge had been only a judge of the Court of Bankruptcy, he would not have had jurisdiction to make the order now in question.

Then as to the substantial question of time. It was said that a person wishing to set aside an ex parte order such as this need not make any application till something is about to be done under the order. In my opinion it would be very unfair if that were so. A charging order creates a charge upon a fund, and, if any application to discharge it is to be made at all, it should be made within a reasonable time, and upon material facts laid before the court. I think that in this case Wright, J., was justified in coming to the conclusion that under the circumstances — having regard to the fact that no affidavit as to the merits was produced at the hearing—that no application to set aside was made between the 28th of March and the 29th of May—he ought not to set the charging order aside.

RIGBY, L J.—I am of the same opinion. I do not think that any such rule was laid down in In re Suffield and Watts, as was implied by the decision of Vaughan Williams, J., in In re Wood, Ex parte Fanshawe. As was pointed out by counsel for the respondent, the matter in In re Suffield and Watts was transferred to Cave, J., as a judge of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, it being considered a convenient thing that the particular judge who happens to be dealing with bankruptcy proceedings, should also deal with matters and actions connected with such proceedings. It was, therefore, not as a judge in bankruptcy, but as a judge of the Queen's Bench Division, that he was exercising the jurisdiction of making the charging order. It was held in that case, that having once exercised that jurisdiction, and made the order, he had then no jurisdiction to set it aside, but that the order must take effect according to its tenour without any alteration made by him. That is all. For myself, I should hesitate to say, whether under, or independently of the authority of that case, that where, in the course of bankruptcy proceedings, property has been recovered or preserved, the judge in bankruptcy could not exercise the power of making a charging order in favour of the solicitor by whose exertions it had been recovered or preserved. At any rate, it is not necessary to decide the point now, for here it is clear that Wright, J., had both jurisdictions. As to the merits, it is, in my opinion, too late to bring them forward now. I was rather alarmed at the suggestion that, because the Court of Appeal had made the order by which some property was secured, they alone could make the charging order. I have never heard it doubted that a judge of the court which had seisin of the order of the Court of Appeal when it came down to be enforced was equally entitled to make the order.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The point of counsel for the appellant is this, that Wright, J., though he was not, as an actual matter of fact, exercising the bankruptcy jurisdiction at all, yet conceived himself to be exercising it; and conceived himself, consequently, as necessarily bound by the rule as to time, which, it was contended, was applicable only to cases in bankruptcy. It seems to me, however, that counsel is wrong in this latter contention. I think the true view as to the limitation of time which has been introduced into the practice of setting aside ex parte proceedings in bankruptcy is this—that it is a limit adopted for convenient illustration of a principle which underlies the jurisdiction in all cases—bankruptcy cases and all others alike. In bankruptcy there is allowed, in practice, a certain fixed time-limit; but that time-limit is really a mere instance of the application of a general rule with regard to setting aside ex parte orders which is found in the general jurisdiction in all Chancery and Common Law cases alike. The appellant's first and fundamental point accordingly breaks down. From this point of view it is of course immaterial whether the judge was exercising the jurisdiction in bankruptcy or any other jurisdiction. He applied the rule, or principle, which underlies all cases of this kind—that a person who wants relief must come with promptitude. As to the opinion expressed by Vaughan Williams, J., in In re Wood, Ex parte Fanshawe, I do not think, as at present advised, that In re Suffield and Watts decided all that the learned judge appears to think that it did. I think that in that case the Court of Appeal was dealing with a matter which did not raise that question at all. Cave, J., in that case, had not exercised bankruptcy jurisdiction, and he had no bankruptcy jurisdiction at the time when he made the order in question. He was exercising jurisdiction, not in bankruptcy, but as a judge of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court, so that the decision of the Court of Appeal in that case was a decision as to the exercise of jurisdiction by a judge of the Queen's Bench Division, and could have no application to any jurisdiction which the judge could not exercise except in bankruptcy. It is not necessary to decide that question now; but I will only repeat that, as at present advised, I do not think that that case which Vaughan Williams, J., apparently thought dealt with the question, did really deal with it at all.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Morris & Rickards; G. H. Daniell.

---

From Chan. Div. (Webster, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) — May 22, 24, 25, 28, 31.

SHAW v. HOLLAND. (a.)

Company—Director—Wrongful allotment of shares—Measure of damages.

Allotments of shares were made ultra vires to directors or their nominees.

Held, that the measure of damages was the value of the shares at the date when the shares were allotted to the directors.

(a.) Reported by PAUL STRICKLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

This was an appeal from a decision of North, J.

The plaintiff was a shareholder in a company called the St. Helen's Development Syndicate (Limited), and he sued on behalf of himself and all other the shareholders, except the defendants.

The defendants were three directors of the company—Messrs. Frederick Catesby Holland, Charles James Tapp, and Emerson Bainbridge—and the company.

The plaintiff sought to make the defendant directors liable for the profits made by Tapp and Bainbridge in respect of a number of shares in the company which had been issued to them, or their respective nominees, either at par or at a premium of 10s. per share, which was less than the market value of the shares.

Clause 88 of the company's articles of association provided: "If within three months of the incorporation of the company the first directors shall procure responsible subscribers for shares of £1 each of the company, not exceeding 15,000 shares, they and their assigns shall have the option, at any time within two years of the incorporation of the company, to apply for from time to time and have allotted to them, or their assigns or their respective nominee or nominees, ordinary shares of £1 each at par, but not more than the number of shares so subscribed for in the whole, and such allotment or allotments shall be made within seven days after the receipt of any such application for shares in the usual form duly signed. The said directors shall be entitled to the benefit of this option as between themselves in such proportion as they shall determine."

Eve, Q.C., Rufus Isaacs, Q.C., and Norman Craig, for the defendant Tapp.

Lawson Walton, Q.C., and Ellis Griffith, for the defendant Bainbridge.

Swinfen Eady, Q.C., and J. H. Gregson, for the plaintiff.

WEBSTER, M.R., said the question was whether the defendants Tapp and Bainbridge were liable in respect of four issues of shares in the company made to themselves or their nominees, as to some of them at par and as to others at 10s. per share premium, the issues being made under the option given by clause 88 of the articles of association and other options conferred by resolutions passed by the directors. As the directors were in a fiduciary position, unless they had acted within their powers the transactions could not stand. As to the option given by clause 88, the question of fact was whether the appellants had complied with the condition which entitled them to the option. It was admitted that Tapp had done so as to 3,500 shares, and that Bainbridge had done so as to 2,500 shares. The question raised by the appeal was whether Tapp had also fulfilled the condition as to 1,500 more shares and Bainbridge as to 2,500 more shares. His lordship reviewed the facts and evidence, and said that he could not differ from the conclusion of North, J., that the condition had not been fulfilled with regard to these additional shares. Tapp and Bainbridge were therefore liable in respect of those additional shares. His lordship was also of opinion that they were liable in respect of the other 2,500 shares allotted to Bainbridge, which were mentioned in the cross notice of appeal. The learned judge below had overlooked the fact that these shares stood in the same position as the others. With regard to the allotments made to the appellants under the options given by resolutions of the directors, his lordship agreed with North, J., that those resolutions were ultra vires, and the allotments made in pusuance of them were invalid. There had been nothing amounting to ratification by the company. The appellants had been rightly held liable in respect of these shares.

As to the other point raised by the cross appeal—viz., the proper measure of damages—it had been urged that the defendants ought to be charged as to all the shares in question with the very highest value at which shares of the company had been sold during the period for which those shares had been held by the defendants. North, J., had not adopted this view, and his lordship thought that he was right, subject to a correction of the date which he had taken. His lordship did not wish to depart from the principle that persons standing in a fiduciary position should be charged with the highest value of property which they had wrongfully taken. But they ought not to be charged with more than the real value, and the value ought not in this case to be ascertained by the price obtained on the sale of a small number of shares. As North, J., had said, if a large number of shares had been placed on the market the highest price would not have been obtained. But his lordship thought that the true date for ascertaining the value of the shares was the date when the shares were respectively allotted to the directors, that being the date at which they had obtained the property for which they had to account. In substance the view taken by North, J., was right.

RIGBY, L.J., concurred. With regard to the measure of damages, his lordship agreed in the general rule that a wrongdoer ought to be charged with the highest possible price which could have been obtained for the property which he had wrongly appropriated while it was in his hands. But because there was evidence that some shares had been sold at a particular price it must not be assumed that all the shares could have been sold at that price. All the circumstances must be considered. His lordship was not disposed to differ from the conclusion of North, J., that it had not been shown that all the shares in question could have been sold at the highest price.

COLLINS, L.J., also concurred, and in the course of his judgment said:—

Now as to a point upon which we differ only to an extent from the judgment of North, J. It has been argued that these directors being wrongdoers, as they unquestionably were, must be mulcted in damages, measured by the highest price which the shares of which they wrongfully possessed themselves ever reached in the market. Now, I wish to say one word about that. The market value of these matters is merely itself a stepping-stone. It is a mere piece of machinery to ascertain the value of a thing. Where there is a market for that thing, a real market, then the market price determines the value. The principle would be precisely the same whether there was any market for it or not at all. What would have to be accounted for would be the highest value. Where you have a real market—a real market, where things can to any amount be exchanged and sold for money—then it is a short cut to the value to take the market price, but where those conditions do not exist it is not a short cut to the value—it is a short cut, but not to the value—to take the price at which certain isolated lots and shares could on given dates be sold. In other words, you are practically applying to them a value that does not exist. You are applying to them a market value when there is not in truth and in fact a real market for the shares at all, and therefore when you analyse that position it necessarily breaks down. The learned judge has found in effect that the value claimed was not a market value, because he said that if those shares had been put into the market in any substantial quantity they could not have been sold at all. Under the circumstances it would certainly be very unfair to take what is an artificial standard of value as being the true value.

I think, therefore, that the time at which the damages in this case are to be measured may be fairly taken as at the time at which the wrong was really done. It is an action for damages, and in this case I think it is analogous exactly to the common law action for conversion. It is true that in this case the thing is a chose in action, a share in a company, but applying the standard to it, the period at which they wrongfully procured that thing—the chose in action—was the time at which they procured it to be allotted to themselves. If it were a chattel, unquestionably at common law that would be the period at which the value would have to be measured; but although it is not a chattel, I do not see any reason why the same principle as to the time at which the damages are to be measured does not apply. Therefore I agree that the proper time for measuring the damages in this case is the date at which they committed the wrong in taking possession of that which they had no right to take possession of—namely, the dates at which they had these shares allotted to themselves.

Solicitors, Hores, Pattison, & Bathurst; Edwards & Cohen.

---

Appeal.
(A. L. Smith, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) May 26.

HOLMES v. GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY CO. (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Accident arising out of and in the course of employment—Workman injured on his way to his work—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 1.

In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it appeared that the deceased workman, who was in the employment of a railway company and lived near K. Station, being under orders to work in an engine-shed at H. Station, went by train from K. to H. free of charge, arriving at H. a quarter of an hour before the time for beginning work. Instead of making use, as he might have done, of either a bridge or a subway for the purpose of reaching the engine-shed, he proceeded to cross the line on the level, and while doing so was knocked down by a train and killed.

Held, that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment of the deceased.

Appeal from an award of the judge of the Clerkenwell County Court in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The applicant for compensation was the mother of a workman who had been accidentally killed while in the employment of the Great Northern Railway Co.

The deceased was an engine-cleaner, and he was for some time at work at King's Cross Station, near to which he resided. On the 4th of November, 1899, he received instructions that he was to go on the 6th of November to work at a new engine-shed which had been erected at Hornsey, about four miles from King's Cross. On the morning of the 6th of November he went with another man by train from King's Cross to Hornsey, arriving at Hornsey at 5.45. Work at the new engine-shed was to commence at 6. Not knowing the way from the station to the shed, he made inquiry, and was told that there were two ways, one by a bridge and the other by a subway. He went either by the bridge or the subway, and after doing a day's work in the shed he returned in the evening. On the 7th of November he again went from King's Cross to Hornsey at the same hour and in the same way, and several other workmen went with him. On their arrival at Hornsey, in order to avoid losing time in going either by the bridge or by the subway, they proceeded to cross the line on the level. While they were doing so the deceased was knocked down by a passing train and was killed. The deceased did not take a ticket on either of the two days, neither was any fare demanded of him. The practice was that workmen who resided near King's Cross, and who were ordered to work at other places on the company's line, were taken by trains to and from their work free of charge.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The county court judge was of opinion that there was an implied agreement that the deceased should be carried by train to Hornsey, and that his employment began at King's Cross, and that the accident arose out of and in the course of his employment while he was proceeding to that part of the employers' premises in which he had been directed to work. He accordingly made an award in favour of the applicant for £150.

The employers appealed.

Montague Lush (A. Clutton Brock with him) for the employers.—The accident did not arise out of and in the course of the deceased's employment. His employment did not begin till his work in the shed began. Even if there was an implied agreement that he should be carried by train to his work, the accident did not happen in consequence of his travelling by train; it happened in consequence of his selecting a dangerous route for going to his work. He was not in any way invited into danger by the employers. This case is governed by Holness v. Mackay and Davies, 47 W. R. 531, [1899] 2 Q. B. 319.

W. H. Duckworth, for the applicant, was not called upon to argue.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I am of opinion that the county court judge was right in holding that this accident arose out of and in the course of the deceased's employment. It must be borne in mind that there is a difference between the beginning of a man's employment and the beginning of his work. It seems to me that there was in this case an implied contract between the masters and the man that they would take him by train from King's Cross to Hornsey, and bring him back again after the day's work was done. If the employment began at King's Cross, it follows that the accident arose in the course of the employment; and it also arose out of the employment, for the employers do not attempt to make out a case of serious and wilful misconduct.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I agree. I do not think it necessarily follows that because an employment has once begun it goes on all day till the time when according to the contract of employment it comes to an end. A workman may in the course of his employment do something for himself quite independent of his employment. Apart from wilful misconduct he may make a break in his employment. But that has no application here, for the deceased was crossing the line merely for the purpose of getting to his work.

ROMER, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the employers, R. Hill Dawe.

Solicitor for the applicant, Alfred Slater.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Kekewich, J. — July 19.

HILDESHEIMER v. W. & F. FAULKNER (LIMITED). (a.)

Copyright—Penalties—Number of offences—"Sum not exceeding £10"—Minimum sum—Artistic Copyright Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 68), s. 6.

The copyright in certain pictures was infringed by the distribution of over a million copies, which altogether cost to produce not more than £120. Upon summons to fix the amount of the penalties payable under section 6 of the Artistic Copyright Act, 1862,

Held, that each copy constituted a separate offence, for which the minimum sum which the court could impose as a penalty was one farthing.

An action was brought by Albert Hildesheimer to restrain W. & F. Faulkner (Limited) and Sir Joseph Causton & Sons (Limited) from infringing his copyright in twelve pictures by distributing copies of them in packets of cigarettes.

The plaintiff obtained an order in the action dated the 22nd of May, 1900, perpetually restraining the defendants, Faulkner & Co., from selling or distributing the copies.

The order further directed an inquiry as to how many copies of the pictures printed by the defendants, Sir Joseph Causton & Sons (Limited), had, since the 8th of July, 1899, been put in circulation by the defendants, W. & F. Faulkner (Limited).

The defendants, Sir Joseph Causton & Sons (Limited), were ordered to pay the plaintiff £2 as damages.

In pursuance of this order, it was certified by the master that 1,012,600 copies of the twelve pictures had been put in circulation.

This was a summons by the plaintiff asking that the defendants, W. & F. Faulkner (Limited), might be ordered to pay such penalties and damages as might seem fit.

The cost of production of a million copies amounted to between £100 and £120, but the plaintiff, claiming to be entitled to a separate penalty of not less than one farthing for each copy, demanded penalties amounting to £1,054 15s. 10d.

The question depended upon the construction of the Artistic Copyright Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 68), s. 6, which provides that if any person, "not being the proprietor for the time being of copyright in any painting, drawing, or photograph, shall, without the consent of such proprietor, repeat, copy, colourably imitate, or otherwise multiply for sale, hire, exhibition, or distribution, or cause or procure to be repeated, colourably imitated, or otherwise multiplied for such sale, hire, exhibition or distribution any such work or the design thereof, or knowing that any such repetition, copy, or other imitation has been unlawfully made . . . . shall sell, publish, let to hire, exhibit, or distribute . . . . any repetition, copy, or imitation of the said work, or of the design thereof, made without such consent as aforesaid, such person for every such offence shall forfeit to the proprietor of the copyright for the time being a sum not exceeding £10. . . ."

Warrington, Q.C., C. A. Russell, Q.C., and Hildesheimer, for the plaintiff.—There must be a separate penalty for each copy: Ex parte Beal, 16 W. R. 852, L. R. 3 Q. B. 387. The smallest sum the law can take account of is one farthing: Ellis v. Marshall &

(a.) Reported by C. C. HENSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Sons, 64 L. J. Q. B. 257, 11 Times L. R. 522; Baschet v. London Illustrated Standard Co., ante, p. 56, [1900] 1 Ch. 73; Artistic Copyright Act, 1862, ss. 6, 8.

Warmington, Q.C., A. T. Walter, and Gray, for the defendants, W. & F. Faulkner (Limited). — The defendants have only committed one offence, that is to say, multiplying a million copies. But if they have committed a million offences the court has discretion, and it is not bound to a particular coin. A hundredth part of a penny here would be a sufficient penalty per copy. There is no minimum sum fixed by the Act: Green v. Irish Independent Co. (Limited), [1899] 1 I. R. 386.

KEKEWICH, J.—The two questions falling for decision, though arising on the same section of the same Act of Parliament, are really different in substance, and require quite different consideration.

It is argued on behalf of the defendants that they only committed one offence; that in producing—either by themselves or by their agents is immaterial—these million copies they only committed a single offence, for which can be recovered by way of penalty a sum not exceeding £10. As regards that, I conceive myself bound by the case of Ex parte Beal, and the judgment of Blackburn, J., there, in which Mellor and Lush, JJ., concurred, to hold that that is not the true construction of the Act. I will not go through the judgment. It seems to me, notwithstanding the way in which the question was raised, and on which Mr. Warmington has commented, their decision is on the construction of the Act, and it is perfectly clear it is binding on me, and it is quite clear also, it seems to me, that that is the true construction of the Act. "Every such offence" seems to me to depend on "any repitition, copy, or imitation of the said work," and not on the word "multiply," and the words which are used in collocation and connection with "multiply"; and "every such offence" means every offence whereby a repetition, a copy, an imitation is produced. The construction contended for by Mr. Warmington seems to me a ridiculous construction of the Act, though my opinion perhaps is worth little, considering that, as I read the judgment in Ex parte Beal, it is settled by that authority.

The other question is one of a different character altogether. "For every such offence," construed as I have mentioned it, they shall forfeit to the proprietor of the copyright for the time being a sum not exceeding £10. I do not think "not exceeding £10" assists us very much; that is only a limit to prevent too much being recovered for any offence, however great.

But the difficulty is, what is a "sum" not exceeding £10? It is argued that I may give a fraction of a penny or a fraction of a pound, and that it is immaterial which, but the object of course is to get the court to give a fraction of a farthing, because, unless it is reduced to the fraction of a farthing there would be no large reduction from the sum of about £1,000 which a farthing per copy would give. You may try it, nevertheless, by the fraction of a pound just as well as you could try it by the fraction of a farthing. Is any fraction of a pound or a penny a "sum" within the meaning of the Act? Mr. Warrington's argument as to the impossibility of recovering small fractions of a penny as penalties would not strictly apply to the fraction of a pound, because it might be convenient, though not strictly correct, to describe five shillings as a fourth of a pound, and there would be no difficulty in recovering such damages if such an order or verdict were given, I suppose. But when you come to a fraction of a farthing you raise considerable difficulty, as was pointed out in argument, as to recovery, and that leads one to the conclusion that the Legislature must have meant by "sum" not merely a sum which can be expressed in figures, but a sum that exists in actual reality. It is a question, to my mind, of some little difficulty, and I was disposed, as Fitz-Gibbon, L.J., was in Green v. Irish Independent Co., to avoid the conclusion which leads to extravagance, because I cannot help thinking that to give the defendants here £1,000 as penalties for the reproduction of a million of these ephemeral pictures is somewhat like extravagance. I observe that Fitz-Gibbon, L.J., was very much pressed with that, because he treats it as being rather a strong thing to do, and one which he desired to avoid doing. He says: "I am not satisfied that the law compels us to punish a number of offences for each of which a farthing is far more than an adequate penalty by awarding as many farthings as there are offences included in the aggregate of offences. The only reason for a farthing is, that it is the smallest coin of the realm, and if one of those coins is an adequate penalty for an aggregate of offences I cannot see that we are forced to give more than one farthing for the lot." But it is to be observed that that argument of his goes to show that you are not bound to give a separate coin, or a separate sum, for each offence, which, as I have already said, is concluded against his view by Ex parte Beal. The other two lord justices took an entirely different view. Walker, L.J., does not seem to have considered the question for himself, he simply followed Charles, J., in Ellis v. Marshall & Sons. I mean as far as he expressed himself, because he does say: "I should be glad if I had been able to come to the conclusion," but not being able to come to the conclusion he there mentions he continues: "Thinking like Charles, J., that I have no alternative, I am of opinion that there must be judgment for the plaintiff." He says he thinks he has no alternative, and in that way expresses his concurrence with Charles, J., but gives no further reason for his judgment. But Holmes, L.J., does. He says: "I feel bound to award at least a nominal penalty for every copy, and I know no better way of doing so than to make it a farthing for each. It seems to me that unless the penalty is measured by some coin recognised in our national system of coinage the provision of the Legislature is disregarded." I am not sure I should quite follow that in its fullest sense, but I do follow the argument that you must have some recognised figure, something you can recover, and that a fraction of a farthing would not answer that description. The decision of the court in Ireland is not binding on me, but, on the other hand, it is a judgment of the Court of Appeal there, and is entitled to the greatest respect, and I should not depart from it without the greatest consideration if it stood alone. But it does not stand alone. I have Charles, J.'s, judgment in Ellis v. Marshall & Sons, and he considered it carefully, and, though he does not mention, as I thought he had done, that he must give judgment for a farthing for each, he does, according to the report, give judgment on that footing. He fixes his £26 0s. 10d. on the footing of a farthing for each copy, and therefore, no doubt, that was the judgment at which he arrived. I thought he had said as much, but at any rate he says the same thing. Thus I have Charles, J.'s, decision, and the more recent decision in Ireland, which agreed with it, and carried it out; and the only thing against it here really is that the sum mounts up to a large amount. If I could I would reduce it; I do not hesitate to say so; but I think with these reports before me, and seeing the difficulty that has been pointed out in construing "sum" to mean a fraction of a sum, it will be my duty to say that a farthing per copy must be the limit. I cannot go beyond that; I leave it to a higher court to investigate the matter further if the case is taken there. There must be an order that the defendants, W. & F. Faulkner, pay to the plaintiffs as penalties £1,054 15s. 10d.

Solicitors, Cartwright & Cunningham; Rehders & Higgs.

---

Chan. Div. } June 16.
Byrne, J. }

In re ESPUELA LAND AND CATTLE CO. (a.)

Company—General meeting—Conditional notice—Validity of notice.

The articles of association of a company required thirty days' notice of every general meeting. On the 19th of February the company issued a notice of an extraordinary general meeting for the 23rd of March following, at which a resolution for reduction of capital was to be proposed. In the same document the company also gave notice of an extraordinary general meeting for the 7th of April, at which the said resolution, if passed at the first meeting, should be confirmed. The notice then continued: "Should the said resolution not be passed by the requisite majority at the meeting to be held on the 23rd of March, due notice will be given to the shareholders that the meeting on the 7th of April, of which notice is now given, will not be held."

Held, that the notice convening the second meeting was valid.

Petition.

The articles of association of the above-named company provided that thirty days' notice should be given to the members before every general meeting.

On the 19th of February, 1900, the company issued the following notice: "Notice is hereby given that an extraordinary general meeting of the company will be held at the offices of the company on Friday, the 23rd of March, when the subjoined resolution will be proposed. Notice is hereby also given that an extraordinary general meeting of the company will be held at the offices of the company on Saturday, the 7th of April, when a report will be presented of the proceedings at the extraordinary general meeting of the company to be held on the 23rd of March, and the subjoined resolution will, if passed by the requisite majority at the meeting, be submitted for confirmation as a special resolution. Should the said resolution not be passed by the requisite majority at the meeting to be held on the 23rd of March, due notice will be given to the shareholders that the meeting on the 7th of April, of which notice is now given, will not be held."

The subjoined resolution referred to was a resolution for the reduction of the capital of the company.

Both the meetings above mentioned were held on the days appointed, and the resolution for the reduction of capital was passed and confirmed.

The company now presented a petition praying that the court would sanction the scheme for the reduction of capital.

Levett, Q.C., and G. Lawrence, for the company, raised the question as to whether the notice of the second general meeting as given was not a conditional notice, and therefore invalid: Alexander v. Simpson, 43 Ch. D. 139.

BYRNE, J., held that the notice was valid.

Solicitors, Markby, Stewart, & Co.

(a.) Reported by R LEIGH RAMSBOTHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Chan. Div. } June 12, 13.
Farwell, J. }

INGLE v. VAUGHAN JENKINS. (a.)

Merger—Settled estates—Lease—Lessee tenant for life—Intention—Benefit of tenant for life.

Where a person entitled to the benefit of a contract enforceable in equity, and who is one of the original parties to it, ultimately becomes both the proper person to grant and to receive such benefit, merger does not necessarily take place; but the court will look to see what is to the benefit of the person in whom the various interests coalesce.

Action for specific performance to grant a lease.

The defence was that the lessee had become tenant for life of the estate, and that his lease had merged in his life estate.

By the will of Wm. Vaughan Jenkins, dated the the 17th of August, 1866, certain property was settled on F. Vaughan Jenkins for life, with remainder to his son W. Vaughan Jenkins for life with remainders over. The tenant for life for the time being in possession, was entitled by the will to grant a lease for ninety-nine years of any of the land on a building lease according to certain specified conditions.

While F. Vaughan Jenkins was tenant for life in possession he entered into an agreement in writing with his son W. Vaughan Jenkins to grant him a lease under this power for ninety-nine years of three acres of the settled land on the erection by him of a house thereon fulfilling the specified conditions. In accordance with this agreement W. Vaughan Jenkins built the house on the land, but no lease was granted.

F. Vaughan Jenkins died in 1892, and W. Vaughan Jenkins became tenant for life in possession, till his death in 1897.

The plaintiff was the executor of W. Vaughan Jenkins, the defendant being the remainderman. The plaintiff claimed a lease under the agreement mentioned above. This the defendant refused to grant on the ground that W. Vaughan Jenkins' interest under the agreement had merged in his life estate when he became tenant for life in possession.

Younger, Q.C., and Cave, for the plaintiff.—The father and son never intended this term to merge. This is the true test: Snow v. Boycott, 40 W. R. 603, [1892] 3 Ch. 110. It is for the benefit of the estate of W. Vaughan Jenkins that his interest should not merge.

Hughes, Q.C., and G. P. Hewitt, for defendant.—The term has merged. This case is different from where charges are paid off by the tenant for life.

Younger, Q.C., replied.

FARWELL, J.—It has been argued that specific performance of this agreement ought not to be decreed because the interest of W. Vaughan Jenkins in the lease thereby contracted to be granted merged in his life estate when he became legal tenant for life in possession. In my opinion there has been no such merger. In the first place, this is a contract specifically enforceable in equity, and there is no case which says that such a contract becomes merged even at law because the person who is entitled thereto happens ultimately to become the proper person both to grant and to receive such benefit. For instance, supposing that a testator had contracted to grant A a lease, if he subsequently devises the fee to A on trust, there is no merger. A can still enforce the contract; or, on the other hand, if the testator subsequently devises the fee to A for life with remainders over, I do not know of any case which says that A cannot enforce such contract, even though A would receive from himself a grant of the lease.

(a) Reported by C. W. MEAD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In my opinion the doctrine of merger is rightly stated in Lewin on Trusts (10th edit.) p. 889. Counsel for the defendant argued that there was a distinction between the cases of merger of a leasehold interest at a rent and of a term to secure a charge. I do not, however, see any distinction. The prevailing principle is that the benefit of the person in whom the various interests coalesce is to be regarded, and I cannot see why the benefit of such a person should be regarded as of more importance in the case of a term of years to secure a charge, than in the case of a term of years at a rent. I do not see that there is any difference, whether the term is created to secure a charge in consideration of money advanced, or whether it is created in consideration of money expended on the land itself, as it was in this case. It makes no difference to my mind whether the estates meet in the same person by operation of law or by act of the petitioners. The principle of Grice v. Shaw, 10 Hare, 76, applies to this case. That was a very much stronger case because there the charge was paid off by a tenant in tail, and yet it was held to be kept alive for his benefit. All the authorities show that where a tenant for life pays off a charge he keeps the benefit for himself unless he expresses some intention to the contrary. Here W. Vaughan Jenkins, while still tenant for life in remainder, expended £1,500 in building this house and became entitled to a lease of it for ninety-nine years. He was aware that he might one day become tenant for life in possession. In my opinion it clearly was for his benefit that this leasehold interest should not merge, and therefore I hold that there was no merger in equity. It seems to me that this is an a fortiori case, as I am dealing here with a tenant for life, and however this matter may be regarded it must be for his benefit that the term should be kept alive.

Solicitors for plaintiff, Buck, Mellor, & Norris.

Solicitors for the defendant. Preston, Stow, & Preston, for Rooke & Macdonald, Bath

---

Q. B. Div.
(Kennedy and Darling, JJ.) July 31.

ST. SAVIOUR'S UNION v. BURBRIDGE. (a.)

Vagrant—Person wilfully refusing or neglecting to maintain himself—Delirium tremens—Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 83), s. 3.

A person who becomes chargeable to a parish or place during an attack of delirium tremens is not on that account a person who, being able to maintain himself, wilfully refuses or neglects so to do.

Case stated by a metropolitan police magistrate.

A summons was issued at the instance of the St. Saviour's Union against Frank David Burbridge, charging him that being wholly able by work to maintain himself he wilfully neglected and refused so to do, by which neglect he became chargeable to the union, contrary to section 3 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824.

The summons was heard on the 21st January, 1900. The circumstances under which it was issued were as follows: On the 25th of November, 1899, it came to the knowledge of the relieving officer of the St. Saviour's Union that one Frank David Burbridge was suffering from delirium tremens, and that he was then at his own residence in a state dangerous to himself and to those about him. This knowledge was conveyed to the relieving officer by the certificate of Burbridge's medical attendant. Upon the receipt of the certificate and on the same day the relieving officer attended at Burbridge's residence and removed him to the workhouse infirmary of the St Saviour's Union, giving an order for his admission, in which he was described as a lunatic.

After his admission to the infirmary Burbridge was seen by the medical officer of the workhouse, and was found to be suffering from delirium tremens, and, thereupon, an order was obtained from a justice of the peace for the County of London, acting under the Lunacy Acts, detaining Burbridge as a prisoner in the workhouse. Burbridge was so detained in the workhouse until the 29th of November, upon which day, the attack of delirium tremens having passed off, he was discharged upon his own application and upon an order for his discharge being granted by the above-mentioned justice.

It was found in the case that in the above circumstances Burbridge became and was chargeable to the union for the period of five days. Upon the hearing of the summons the following facts were either proved or admitted:—

At the time of his admission to the infirmary, and for the first three days of his detention therein, Burbridge was quite unable to maintain himself, and at no time during his detention would he have been allowed to leave the workhouse, except upon an order for his discharge being given by the justice. Burbridge was a person generally well able to maintain himself and was, as a fact, well-to-do and in such a position that the guardians might reasonably apply to him for the cost of his maintenance or sue him in respect thereof. No application had been made by the guardians to Burbridge to pay the cost of his maintenance, and he had not refused to do so, and he protested before the learned magistrate that he would willingly have paid upon application.

It was contended on behalf of the guardians that, on these facts, the learned magistrate ought to convict. The learned magistrate, however, held that he had a discretion in the matter and dismissed the summons.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether the learned magistrate had such discretion.

J. A. Johnston, for the appellants.—The offence under section 3 of the Vagrancy Act is constituted if two things are proved, (1) That the respondent became chargeable to a parish or union; (2) that being able to maintain himself he became so chargeable by wilfully refusing or neglecting so to do. The learned magistrate found, as a fact, that the respondent became chargeable, and he also found that he was able to maintain himself before he became incapacitated by delirium tremens. The learned magistrate, however, dismissed the summons because he was incapable of maintaining himself while he was in the workhouse. In that he was wrong, because in ascertaining whether the respondent was able to maintain himself within the meaning of the Act he ought to have regarded the time when the respondent drank to excess and so by his own voluntary act rendered himself incapable of maintaining himself and not the period of his chargeability. Further, the voluntary act of the respondent, whereby he incapacitated himself, constituted a wilful refusal to maintain himself within the meaning of the Act. The learned magistrate had no choice, therefore, but to convict the respondent. The fact that there was no refusal on the part of the respondent to pay for his maintenance is irrelevant, for the "refusal" referred to in the act is a refusal to maintain himself, not a refusal to pay for his maintenance.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

H. Sutton, for the Home Secretary, appeared to assist the court, but was not called upon to argue.

Kennedy, J.—The learned magistrate was right in dismissing the summons. In a case of this kind it is necessary to see what are the facts. At the time when Burbridge was taken to the workhouse he was very ill, and was suffering from delirium tremens. He was described to be, while at his own residence, dangerous both to himself and to those about him. He was, in fact, not merely drunk, but he had become for a time, by his own voluntary act, diseased and incapable of maintaining himself. It is impossible to suppose that the Legislature in the Vagrancy Act intended to punish people who by a voluntary act brought on a disease. The question for the learned magistrate was: Could this man be convicted of the offence of wilfully refusing or neglecting to maintain himself? It is impossible to say that he could be so convicted because he was suffering from a disease, however the disease might have been caused.

The learned magistrate would have been quite wrong had he convicted the man.

Darling, J.—It appears that the respondent, Burbridge, is a man who, by drinking, brought on delirium tremens, and who, while at his own residence, was dangerous to himself and to those about him, and that for that reason he was taken to the infirmary. The learned magistrate had to ascertain whether he was by that mere fact an idle and disorderly person. The section under which he was charged begins with the words "being able to maintain himself." At the moment when the respondent was suffering from delirium tremens he was not able to maintain himself. Therefore he is not within the section, unless it can be said that he is within it because the disease from which he was suffering was brought on by his own voluntary act.

I do not think that that is the meaning of the Statute. If the Statute had intended that result it could have expressed it in plain language. It was at least not more unusual for people to get drunk at the time when the Act was passed than now, and delirium tremens is not a modern complaint. The Act could well have said that a person who makes himself so drunk as to bring on delirium tremens is an idle and disorderly person. By section 16 it is provided that a person who begs without having a licence from a justice of the peace is an idle and disorderly person. It would have been as easy to put Burbridge and people of his kind into that section.

If the argument put forward on behalf of the appellants is right—if, that is to say, a man who wilfully takes something which ultimately renders him incapable of maintaining himself is within the section—then the case I put in argument is equally within the section, namely, that of a man who having been told by his medical man that excessive smoking would in his case bring on a complaint which would incapacitate him from earning his livelihood, continued nevertheless to smoke to excess, and so brought on the complaint against which he had been warned. That case was indistinguishable from the present case. Coupling this absurdity, to which that instance reduces the argument of the appellants, with the want of appropriate words in the Act bringing the case within it, in my opinion the learned magistrate was quite right in the conclusion at which he arrived.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellants, Howard C. Jones.

Solicitor for the Home Secretary, The Treasury Solicitor.

Q. B. Div.
(Grantham and Channell, JJ.) June 18.

National Telephone Co. v. Tunbridge Wells Corporation. (a.)

Telegraph company—Prohibition—Laying wires or tubes under a street—Jurisdiction of highway authority—"Difference"—Former jurisdiction of stipendiary magistrate or county court judge to arbitrate—Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), ss. 3, 4—Telegraph Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 59), s. 5.

By the Telegraph Act of 1892 the statutory power which a stipendiary magistrate or county court judge had to hear and determine an appeal from the refusal of a highway authority to permit a telegraph company licensed by the Postmaster-General to break up a street for the purpose of laying wires or tubes, has been rescinded; and the increased power given to such local authorities by that Act to veto the laying down of wires or tubes under any street within their district is now final.

This was an application by the Corporation of Tunbridge Wells for a writ of prohibition to issue directed to the county court judge of Kent prohibiting him from further proceeding with the hearing of a plaint in the county court at Tunbridge Wells, entered by the telephone company, to which the corporation were defendants. The question for decision of the High Court was whether a stipendiary magistrate or a county court judge had, since the passing of the Telegraph Act, 1892, any jurisdiction to hear and determine an appeal from the refusal of a highway authority to allow a telegraph company to open streets for the purpose of laying wires or tubes.

The special case set out the following facts and sections:

By section 6 of the Telegraph Act, 1863, a telegraph company was empowered to break up any street or road, subject to the restriction that they could not place a telegraph under any street of any municipal borough except with the consent of the highway authority.

By the Telegraph Act, 1868, s. 2, the same provisions were made to apply to the Postmaster-General.

By the Telegraph Act, 1869, s. 4, the Postmaster-General was given the exclusive power of transmitting telegrams with the exception of telegrams transmitted with his written licence.

The word "telegram" has been held to include telephonic messages: Attorney-General v. Edison Telephone Co., 29 W. R. 428, 6 Q. B. D. 244.

By the Telephone Act, 1878, s. 8, if any highway authority having power to withhold consent to the Postmaster-General to placing telegraphs under a street fail, within twenty-one days after being required, to give their consent, a "difference" shall be deemed to have arisen between such highway authority and the Postmaster-General, and such a difference, by section 4, should be referred to a stipendiary magistrate or to a county court judge, who was empowered to hear and determine such difference as if he were an arbitrator under the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868. In that case the magistrate or the county court judge might give the necessary consent, which was to have the effect of a consent given to the Postmaster-General by the highway authority under the Act of 1863.

By the Telegraph Act, 1892, s. 5, where the Postmaster-General had licensed any company to transmit telegrams, he might license the company to exercise his own powers under the Acts of 1863 and 1878, and thereupon those Acts should apply. But notwithstanding anything in the Act of 1878 a licencee should not exercise any of these statutory powers without the consent of the urban sanitary authority or county council, and should be subject to any terms and conditions which the county council or urban sanitary authority might attach to any such consent, and should comply with any regulations of such council or authority from time to time in force in relation to telegraphic lines.

(a.) Reported by Erskine Reid, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

By two deeds, dated 1884 and 1896 respectively, made between the Postmaster-General and the National Telephone Co., the company were authorised to work and use certain lines of telegraph for the purpose of transmitting telegrams within the municipal borough of Tunbridge Wells.

By a deed dated the 10th of March, 1896, and made between the Corporation of Tunbridge Wells and the Telephone Co., the corporation consented to the company exercising within the borough such powers as might from time to time and at any time be delegated by the Postmaster-General to the company in pursuance of the provisions of section 5 of the Telegraph Act, 1892. This deed contained the following stipulation: "It is expressly agreed that the consent contained in the preceding clause is given upon the following conditions—(1) except as regards the work mentioned in the schedule the company shall not exercise any of the powers conferred on the Postmaster-General by the Telegraph Acts, 1863 and 1878, in respect of which the consent of the corporation is required under the said Acts, without obtaining the further consent in writing of the corporation to be from time to time given to the specific works for the time being proposed to be carried out under such powers, it being intended that the general consent contained in the preceding clause is not to operate to relieve the company from the obligations of obtaining the particular consent of the corporation to such specific work as required by and provided for in the said Acts." Clause 10 of this agreement contained a reference of all disputes and differences under its terms to two arbitrators or an umpire.

The company gave notice that they desired to open up a street and lay telephone wires, and execute works not mentioned in the schedule of the last-mentioned deed. The corporation refused to give them leave, and the company submitted that under section 4 of the Telegraph Act, 1878, they were empowered to refer this "difference" to the county court judge.

When the matter came before the county court judge he expressed his opinion that he had jurisdiction to hear and determine the difference, but refrained from doing so until the hearing of this motion.

Joseph Walton, Q.C. (with him Alexander Macnorran, Q.C., and Boxall), for the corporation, having read the case, was stopped by the court.

Cripps, Q.C., and J. Cassell, for the company.—The consent required by the deed of the 10th of March, 1896, means the consent subject to appeal to the county court judge, for in effect it provides that for all works other than those specified in the schedule the consent of the corporation must first be obtained "as required by the said Acts." Further, we say that the county court judge being constituted an arbitrator, a writ of prohibition cannot go, for it is not an appropriate remedy.

GRANTHAM, J.—There can be no doubt in this case that we ought to order prohibition, for the National Telephone Co. have not brought themselves within the Act of Parliament which gives general powers to carry on these works in the manner in which the National Telephone Co. claim the right to execute them. There is not much doubt as to the real history of this legislation. By the passing of the Act of 1892 the Crown delegated to private companies powers which, up to that time, it had retained in its own hands; accordingly it gave to highway authorities greater powers of consenting to or forbidding proposed alterations in their streets than they formerly possessed. In 1878 everything was in the hands of the Crown through the Postmaster-General. Then pressure was brought to bear upon them, and they consented to delegate some of their powers, but the moment they did that and allowed these works to be carried out by a company, they very properly changed their modus operandi. During the time that it was a Crown monopoly and the Crown had a right to do this work it was considered just that the judicial authorities of the Crown should be invoked to determine any differences that arose between the Crown and the public authorities. The Postmaster-General consented to do this work in Tunbridge Wells. By the Act of Parliament it was provided that supposing there was a difference between the Postmaster-General and the authorities at Tunbridge Wells, some tribunal must determine who was right. It being a question of the right of the Crown to do this the Legislature decided to invoke the aid of the judicial authorities of the Crown—the county court judge or the stipendiary magistrate. Then came the Act of 1892, whereby their powers were delegated. The moment private individuals carried on this work, the right which the Crown had to call in the aid of the judicial authorities ceased, and more power was given to those authorities in whose district the work was to be done. The urban authorities were then given a power of veto. Their consent had to be obtained, first, to exercise the powers to be delegated, and then there was a further right given to the local authority to say in what way they would consent to these powers being exercised. The Tunbridge Wells authorities gave a general consent, but subject to the general terms of the agreement, the consent was only given for the execution of the work thereby agreed upon and set out in the schedule, and before any other work was begun it was stipulated that the company must apply for and obtain the further consent of the local authority. The parties to the agreement rightly understood what their respective rights and liabilities were. Under the Act of 1892 this agreement was expressly and properly drawn to give such rights as the corporation intended to give in the first instance to the National Telephone Co., reserving to themselves the right which, by the Act of 1892, they had power to reserve. The National Telephone Co. were bound by the terms of the agreement, and had no right to say that the county court judge was the proper tribunal to determine any difference which had arisen between the parties.

On the second question, whether the county court judge was an arbitrator, assuming he had jurisdiction, section 4 of the Act of 1878 refers the matter of disputes to him "as if he were an arbitrator." In my opinion, that section by those words does not say that the county court judge shall be the arbitrator whenever differences arise. It is merely a direction to him how he should in such a case act. For these reasons prohibition is clearly the appropriate remedy, and the application to us of the corporation must be allowed.

CHANNELL, J., concurred, and referred upon the second point in the case to Hull v. M'Farlane, 2 C. B. N. S. 796, where the trustees of a burial society who were not "persons interested" within the meaning of section 41 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1855, so as to enable them of their own accord to institute proceedings against the society in the county court for the purpose of controlling them in the proposed alteration of their rules, had applied to the county court, and the judge having entertained the application, the Court of Common Pleas granted a prohibition.

Solicitors for the corporation, Sole, Turner, & Knight, for Cripps, Son, & Dash.

Solicitor for the company, W. E. L. Gaine.

---

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Q. B. Div. (Wright, J.) May 8, 19.

In re FORD.
Ex parte THE TRUSTEE. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Pending action—Payment of money into court as condition of leave to defend—Bankruptcy of defendant before trial—Secured creditor—Title of trustee—R. S. C., ord. 14, r. 6—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 44, 168.

Money paid into court as a condition for leave to defend under ord. 14, r. 6, must be treated as money paid in to abide the event, and is a security to the plaintiff for the sum for which he may obtain judgment at the trial. In the event of the defendant becoming bankrupt before the action has been tried, the money does not pass to the trustee in the bankruptcy, but must remain in court until the event has been decided, either by trial of the action or by adjudication upon a proof by the plaintiff in the bankruptcy.

Application by the trustee in the bankruptcy for a declaration that he was entitled to a sum of £1,000 which had been paid into court by Ford, the bankrupt, in an action entitled Jay & Co. v. Ford.

Upon the 15th of August, 1899, Messrs. Jay & Co. issued a writ against Ford for £1,116 4s. 6d. and took out a summons for judgment under order 14. The summons was heard upon the 21st of September, 1899, when the defendant obtained leave to defend upon an order made in the usual form as follows: "It is ordered . . . that the plaintiffs be at liberty to sign final judgment for the claim endorsed on the writ, unless the sum of £1,000 be paid into court within three days." The money was paid into court, and a defence with a counterclaim was put in on the 5th of December, 1899, and amended by leave on the 10th of January, 1900. No reply was delivered nor was any notice of trial given. On the 29th of January, 1900, Ford filed his own petition in bankruptcy, and a receiving order was made against him. He was subsequently adjudicated bankrupt and a trustee was appointed by whom this application was made.

Muir Mackenzie and Sinclair, for the trustee.—The sum of £1,000 paid into court in this case was not paid into court to abide the event as in the case of Tomlinson v. Hampson, 38 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL 401, but was paid into court to prevent judgment being levied against the defendant, and it remained the defendant's property until the plaintiffs proved their title to it. The defendant became bankrupt before the plaintiffs had proved their title, and consequently the money is now the property of the trustee in the bankruptcy: Barter v. Dubeux, 29 W. R. 622, 7 Q. B. D. 413; Ex parte Halling, 26 W. R. 182, 7 Ch. D. 157. The plaintiffs' right to the money has become merely a provable debt, they are not secured creditors because they do not hold "a mortgage charge or lien on the property of the debtor, or any part thereof, as a security for a debt due to them from the debtor," as required by section 168 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

Reed, Q.C., and Macaskie, for Jay & Co.—The money was paid into court to abide the event; the plaintiffs have an equitable title to it, and it is a security to them to the extent to which they can establish their claim: Ex parte Banner, In re Blythe, 30 W. R. 24, 17 Ch. D. 480; Ex parte Bouchard, In re Moojen, 28 W. R. 129, 12 Ch. D. 26; The Cella, 36 W. R. 540, 13 P. D. 82; In re Gordon, Ex parte Navalchand, 46 W. R. 31, [1897] 2 Q. B. 516.

Muir Mackenzie replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 19.—WRIGHT, J.—Messrs. Jay sued Ford on the 15th of August, 1899, for £1,116 4s. 6d., and applied for judgment under order 14. The defendant, on certain suggestions of fraud, obtained leave to defend upon an order made on the 21st of September, 1899, in the usual form, as follows: "It is ordered that . . . the plaintiffs be at liberty to sign final judgment for the claim indorsed on the writ, and costs to be taxed unless the sum of £1,000 be paid into court within three days." The money was paid into court, and a defence with a counter-claim was put in on the 5th of December, 1899, and amended by leave on the 10th of January, 1900. No reply was delivered, nor has any notice of trial been given. On the 29th of January the defendant filed his own petition, and a receiving order was made. The trustee in bankruptcy now claims the money on the ground that, as he alleges, the £1,000 still remained the money of the bankrupt at the time when the trustee's title accrued, and that the plaintiffs at that time and now were and are ordinary creditors for whatever debt they may be able to prove. I say nothing about there being no evidence to show that the money was the bankrupt's.

It seems plain on principle and on the authorities that Messrs. Jay are for the present entitled to the benefit of the security which they obtained by the order of the 21st of September, 1899, and the payment into court in compliance with this order. The order must be treated as an order that the right to the money when paid into court shall abide the event. See Bird v. Barstow, 40 W. R. 71, [1892] 1 Q. B. 94, where the order appears to have been in the same form as in this case; and it is settled that where money is ordered to be paid into court to abide the event it must be treated as a security that the plaintiff shall not lose the benefit of the decision of the event in his favour. See Ex parte Banner, In re Blythe; Ex parte Bouchard, In re Moojen; In re Tomlinson, In re Gordon, Ex parte Navalchand.

The very object of such an order is that the plaintiff shall be in as good a position, so far as the money paid in extends, against contingencies such as bankruptcy, as if he got immediate judgment; and the cases cited show that where the plaintiff has without default on his part failed to get judgment before the bankruptcy, the "event" is the decision of his right in the bankruptcy. The money must remain in court until the event is decided by the trial of the action, if that is to be tried, or by adjudication upon a proof by the plaintiffs in the bankruptcy.

Application dismissed.

Solicitors for the trustee, Nunn & Popham.

Solicitors for the respondents, Francis & Johnson.

---

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (A. L. Smith and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) — Aug. 8.

FURBER v. TAYLOR. (a.)

Practice—Costs—Order of county court, action upon.

An action cannot be maintained in the High Court upon an order of a county court for the payment of costs.

Appeal from an order of Lawrance, J.

Two interpleader issues were directed to be tried in a county court between the plaintiff as the holder of a bill of sale, and the defendant as an execution creditor.

The county court judge decided in favour of the plaintiff and ordered the defendant to pay the costs of the issues, amounting to £77 16s. 4d., to the registrar of the court for the use of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff, being unable to obtain satisfaction by means of execution, commenced an action in the High Court to recover the costs so ordered to be paid.

On an application under order 14 Lawrance, J., gave the defendant unconditional leave to defend the action.

The plaintiff appealed.

H. Kisch, for the plaintiff.—The case of Berkeley v. Elderkin, 1 W. R. 305, 1 E. & B. 805, shows that an action cannot be brought in the High Court on a judgment of a county court. But the reasoning of that case does not apply to an order of a county court. There is no decision which shows that an action cannot be brought on a final order of a county court for the payment of a sum of money.

Abinger, for the defendant, was not called upon to argue.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—Prior to the Judicature Rules no action could have been brought upon a judge's order. It has been held by this court that under ord. 42, r. 24, an action can now be brought upon a judge's order: Godfrey v. George, 44 W. R. 245, [1896] 1 Q. B. 48; Pritchett & Young v. English and Colonial Syndicate, 47 W. R. 577, [1899] 2 Q. B. 428. And by those decisions we are bound. Under the old law the same doctrine was applicable to an order of a county court as to a judge's order, and in my opinion the law so far as regards an order of a county court remains as it was before. The action, therefore, is not maintainable, and the appeal must be dismissed.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, R. Furber.

Solicitor for the defendant, J. W. Browne.

---

From Q. B. Div. (Earl of Halsbury, L.C., and A. L. Smith and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) — Aug. 1.

GODMAN v. MOSES. (a.)

Practice—Appeal—Appeal from inferior court—Right to appeal from High Court to Court of Appeal—Jurisdiction to give leave to appeal—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 45—Judicature Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 16), s. 1, sub-section 5.

Where a Divisional Court, after deciding an appeal from an inferior court, refuses leave to appeal, the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal.

Appeal from a decision of a Divisional Court (Darling and Channell, JJ.), on an appeal from a county court.

The judgment of the county court was in favour of the plaintiff. The defendant appealed, and the Divisional Court affirmed the judgment of the county court, and refused to give the defendant leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal. The defendant applied ex parte to the Court of Appeal for leave to appeal, which was granted.

On the appeal coming on to be heard, the plaintiff took the preliminary objection that, the Divisional Court having refused leave to appeal, no appeal lay to the Court of Appeal.

Bray, Q.C. (Hohler with him), for the plaintiff.—The case is governed by section 45 of the Judicature Act, 1873, by which the determination of appeals from inferior courts by the Divisional Court "shall be final unless special leave to appeal from the same to the Court of Appeal shall be given by the Divisional Court by which any such appeal from an inferior court shall have been heard." This enactment is not repealed by section 1, sub-section 5, of the Judicature Act, 1894, which says that "in all cases where there is a right of appeal to the High Court from any court or person, the appeal shall be heard and determined by a Divisional Court constituted as may be prescribed by rules of court; and the determination thereof by the Divisional Court shall be final, unless leave to appeal is given by that court or by the Court of Appeal." The Act of 1894 was not intended to extend the right of appeal at all.

Gore-Browne, for the defendant.—The case is within the express terms of section 1, sub-section 5, of the Act of 1894. In the case of Holland v. Girling, mentioned in 43 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, at p. 600, the Court of Appeal held that they had power to give leave to appeal from a judgment of a Divisional Court affirming a decision of a county court judge and refusing leave to appeal.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—It seems to be clear that this question has already been decided by this court, and that in a case like the present the Court of Appeal has power to give leave to appeal. The preliminary objection must therefore be overruled, and the appeal must be heard.

A. L. SMITH and VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.JJ., concurred.

Preliminary objection overruled.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Speechly, Mumford, & Co., for R. Henwood, Horsham.

Solicitors for the defendant, E. R. Keele, for Down, Scott, & Down, Dorking.

---

From Q. B. Div. (A. L. Smith and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) — July 30.

MANCHESTER SHIP CANAL CO. v. S. PEARSON & SONS (LIMITED). (a.)

Arbitration—Submission to three arbitrators—Power of court to stay action—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), s. 4.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Section 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, applies to all submissions, including those in which the reference is to three arbitrators.

In re Smith & Service and Nelson & Sons, 39 W. R. 117, 25 Q. B. D. 545, distinguished.

Appeal from an order of Bigham, J., directing that proceedings in the action should be stayed.

The plaintiffs were shipowners, and the defendants were charterers under a charter-party which provided that any disputes between the parties should be referred to three arbitrators, one to be appointed by the shipowners, another to be appointed by the charterers, and the third to be appointed by the two others. The action was brought to recover freight.

The defendants applied under section 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, for a stay of proceedings, and Bigham, J., being satisfied that there was no reason why the matter should not be referred in accordance with the submission, and that the defendants were ready and willing to appoint an arbitrator and to do all things necessary to the proper conduct of the arbitration, made an order staying the proceedings.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Horridge, for the plaintiffs.—In the case of In re Smith & Service and Nelson & Sons, 39 W. R. 117, 25 Q. B. D. 545, the Court of Appeal held that the provisions of the Arbitration Act, 1889, do not apply to a case where there is a submission to three arbitrators. The decision was that where in such a case either of the parties refuses to appoint an arbitrator the court has no power to order him to do so. Lord Esher, M.R., said that as the reference in that case was to three arbitrators, it was obvious that the case did not come within sections 4, 5, or 6. And Lindley, L.J., said the same thing. The court ought not to stay this action and compel the plaintiffs to go to a tribunal which the court has no power to enforce.

Ellis Hill, for the defendants, was not called upon to argue.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I do not see any reason why this action should not be stayed. The case of In re Smith & Service and Nelson & Sons does not govern this case at all. It was there held that there was no power conferred on the court by the Arbitration Act to appoint one arbitrator of three. This is not an application to appoint one of three arbitrators; it is an application to stay the action. Section 4 is perfectly general in its terms, and is not limited to any particular classes of submissions; and "submission" is defined by section 27 to mean a written agreement to submit present or future differences to arbitration, whether an arbitrator is named therein or not. I think that there was jurisdiction to make the order, and that it was rightly made.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co., for Hill & Dickinson, Liverpool.

Solicitors for the defendants, Jaques & Co., for Samuel Wright & Co., Bradford.

---

From Chan. Div. (Lord Alverstone, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) — June 19.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. HANWELL URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL. (a.)

Local government—Public health—Compulsory purchase of land—User for different purpose—Order of Local Government Board—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 175.

A direction by the Local Government Board under section 175 of the Public Health Act, 1875, that land which has been acquired by a local authority for specific purposes, but is not required for those purposes, shall not be sold, cannot authorize a permanent user of the land for purposes other than those for which it was originally acquired.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (reported ante, p. 69), affirmed.

This was an appeal from a decision of Kekewich, J. (reported ante, p. 69).

The question involved was whether a local authority could hold land acquired by them for specific purposes free from any restriction as to user if the land was not required for those purposes, the Local Government Board having directed, under section 175 of the Public Health Act, 1875, that it should not be sold. The action was brought by the Attorney-General at the relation of Lord Jersey, with Lord Jersey as co-plaintiff, under the following circumstances:

In 1881 the Brentford Union, as the then sanitary authority for the Hanwell district, acquired under section 176 of the Public Health Act, 1875, about twelve acres of land in the parish of Hanwell belonging to Lord Jersey "for the disposal of the sewage of the parish of Hanwell in their district." This purchase was sanctioned by the Local Government Board on the petition of the sanitary authority, and after an inquiry as to its propriety.

The greater part of the land so acquired was used exclusively for the sewage purposes contemplated; but in 1896 the defendants, as the successors of the Brentford Sanitary Authority, proposed utilizing about two acres of the land, which had been found to be unsuitable for sewage purposes, for the erection of a hospital for infectious diseases other than small-pox.

A public inquiry was held on the 17th of December, 1896, by a Local Government Board inspector, and the result was that by an order under the seal of the board, and dated the 3rd of April, 1897, the board directed that the two acres acquired "for purposes of sewage disposal," but which were not "required for such purposes," should be retained by the council as a site for the erection of a hospital for infectious diseases other than small-pox. The plaintiffs thereupon brought the present action, claiming an injunction to restrain the defendants from erecting the hospital on the land, or from using the same as the site for any such hospital, on the ground that their so doing would be a nuisance or injury to the plaintiff, the Earl of Jersey, or his tenants, or his adjacent lands. The defendants denied that the proposed hospital would be a nuisance, and relied on the order of the 3rd of April, 1897.

The case mainly turned on the effect of sections 175 and 295 of the Public Health Act, 1875. Section 175 provides, inter alia: "Any lands acquired by a local authority in pursuance of any powers in this Act contained, and not required for the purpose for which they were acquired, shall (unless the Local Govern-ent Board otherwise direct) be sold. . . ." ection 295 provides: "All orders made by the Local overnment Board in pursuance of this Act shall be inding and conclusive in respect of the matters to hich they refer."

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Kekewich, J., held that the defendants were not ntitled to use the land for purposes other than those or which it was originally acquired, and granted the njunction asked for.

The defendants appealed.

Warrington, Q.C., and Stallard, for the appellants.—After the Local Government Board has given a irection that land is not to be sold the local authority an keep the land free from any restriction as to user. There is no case which decides that land retained under section 175 of the Public Health Act, 1875, cannot be used except for the special purpose for which it was originally bought. In Attorney-General v. Corporation of Southampton, 1 Giff. 363, 8 W. R. Ch. Dig. 2, there was a special trust attached to the land, and the case only decides that where land is held on a special trust it cannot be used for any other purpose. So also in Attorney-General v. Corporation of Sunderland, 24 W. R. 991, 2 Ch. D. 634, there was no question but that the land could only be used for the particular purpose for which it was acquired. But there is no case where the land was not wanted for the purpose for which it was acquired, and in Attorney-General v. Teddington Urban District Council, 46 W. R. 88, [1898] 1 Ch. 66, it was admitted that the land might eventually be needed for the purpose for which it was acquired. [Lord ALVERSTONE, M.R.: Can a mere direction under section 175 to retain land get rid of statutory restriction?] It can, because otherwise the land would simply lie waste. The reason in the Teddington case that only a temporary user was allowed, was that the land would eventually be needed for its proper purposes; but here it is not needed for sewage purposes at all.

Renshaw, Q.C., and Howard Wright, for the plaintiffs.—The acquisition of land under section 176 is hedged round with provisions in the vendor's interest, and it cannot have been intended to get rid of these by a mere direction to retain the land unsold. The object of section 175 was to avoid the necessity of a sale which might cause inconvenience, as in the Teddington case. If the land is not sold and is not required for its proper purpose it can be let. The Local Government Board have no power to remove any restrictions as to user, and no direction of theirs can alter the rights of third parties.

Warrington, Q.C., replied.

Lord ALVERSTONE, M.R.—In this case I have felt considerable difficulty in the course of the argument and I do not think it could be regarded by any means as a perfectly clear case; but, after the best consideration I can give to the matter, I think the judgment of Kekewich, J., is right and ought to be affirmed.

It appears that in the year 1881 the predecessors in title of the defendants, the urban authority, exercised the compulsory powers of the Public Health Act of 1875 and purchased from Lord Jersey, under the provisions of the 176th section, a certain quantity of land. It is important to point out that under that section provision is made for the protection of persons whose land is intended to be purchased compulsorily by requiring a full advertisement of the nature of the undertaking and requiring a petition to the Local Government Board to state the purposes for which the land is required; and, by the provisional order, confirmed by Act of Parliament, under which the predecessors of the defendants obtained power to acquire the land, it is expressly recited that the guardians of the poor of the Brentford Union required to purchase and take lands for the disposal of the sewage of the parish of Hanwell. I think it must be taken that unless that which has happened subsequently by virtue of the 175th section alters the rights of the parties, the defendants, or rather their predecessors and therefore the defendants, acquired the land under statutory powers and for statutory purposes, namely, for the purpose of using it for the disposal of sewage.

It appears that two acres of this land, either from the point of view of level or from other local circumstances, was not fitted to be used for sewage purposes, and thereupon the Hanwell Authority in the year 1897, or thereabout, contemplated acquiring more land from Lord Jersey, as to which no question arises. The idea occurred to them that they might use these two acres not for anything in connection with sewage, but for the purpose of establishing an isolated hospital, and, as was very frankly stated, they took steps to borrow money to erect a permanent hospital on this land, not a mere temporary user while the land was not required for sewage purposes. It is not necessary to go through the formalities of the steps that were taken which led up to an order of the 3rd of April, 1897, whereby the Local Government Board having recited the application to them under section 175 that the land which formed part of the land required by the Local Board of Hanwell for the purpose of sewage disposal, but which is not required for such purposes, shall be retained by the council as a site for the erection of an hospital for infectious diseases, the Local Government Board directed that that land should be retained by the council as a site for the erection of an hospital for infectious diseases other than small-pox.

I ought to say that, in my opinion, no special weight and no special authority can be given to the words that are added there—namely, the words directing the land to be retained by the council as a site for the erection of an hospital for infectious diseases other than small-pox. It could not be, nor is it suggested that by virtue of any implied or expressed authority the Local Government Board had any powers to enforce against an unwilling person or persons who could otherwise have objected to it the establishment of an hospital for infectious diseases. But what is said, and it is a point that gave me considerable difficulty, is that the order is an order that must be taken to be made under section 175, and on its face it purports to be so, and that that being so it is a direction that the Hanwell Authority—the defendants—may retain the land as their own, and that retaining the land they are entitled to use the land for any purposes for which they can lawfully use the land which belongs to them, and if one was able to gather that that was the intention of the Act of Parliament from the sections which prescribe the way in which the land shall be compulsorily acquired and subsequently used, there would appear to be at first sight a good deal to be said for that argument.

In my opinion, the language of section 175 is not sufficient to enable the urban authority to apply the land permanently for a purpose which is different from that for which it was originally acquired. I think the provisions of section 176 and the scheme of the Act referring to the acquisition of land are very important. The district authority have a limited authority. They possess powers which are given them by Act of Parliament, or it may be by orders that the Local Government Board have made pursuant to the provisions of the Act of Parliament. Their power to acquire land compulsorily is to acquire it for specific purposes, and I think as long as they hold it without fresh statutory authority they can only hold it for those purposes. I think that the doctrine and principle in the Southampton case would apply—I do not know that this was seriously disputed by the appellants—namely, that, with regard to the land as to which statutory power has been given to the board to apply it for sewage or other purposes (I will take sewage purposes in this instance), the whole of the negotiation and contract for compensation proceeding upon that basis, they hold the land subject to that restriction. I do not in any way base my judgment upon anything in the conveyance, because it has not been seriously pressed upon us, nor do I understand it was pressed in the court below. I think the real rights depend upon and are governed by the statute.

That being so, we must consider what is the meaning of the words, and what is the position when, setting aside all the special directions about a hospital, the Local Government Board have directed that the land should not be sold. As I ventured to point out in the course of the argument, I can imagine many reasons why it is desirable that the land should be in the hands of the local authority, even though they can only use it permanently for purposes consistent with the purposes for which they originally acquired the land. It might be very undesirable to have a third owner coming in, or an adverse owner coming in, and building houses or getting control of or acquiring rights against some particular mode of user of the land, and I can well conceive that, quite apart from the right to use it for any purposes which they are entitled to use the land for, there might be many cases in which it would be right, and when the Local Government Board might, in their discretion, think it would be right, that the land should not be sold. But, at any rate, it seems to me that it is too strong to suggest that, under a provision which is merely intended to control the question of whether the land shall or shall not be sold, you can import into that the power of the district authority—the purchasing body—to use it for a purpose wholly inconsistent with the purpose for which it was originally acquired.

I think there still remains affecting the rights of both parties the limit which was put upon a body with limited authority to buy under the provisions of section 176 for certain special purposes, and that we cannot say when there has once been given a direction that they need not sell the land, that they hold it absolutely unfettered and free so that they can use it as though it were any other piece of land that they had acquired not under compulsory powers, or that they had acquired by agreement with some person who was willing to sell them land. I am not, of course, to be supposed to be dealing at all with a case of some temporary user of the land—beneficial user of the land—either by letting or otherwise. I am dealing with the case before us, which is the intention of the defendants to permanently turn two acres of this land to a purpose to which it was not intended to be turned, and to which they had no power to turn it apart from this direction of the Local Government Board. I think it would be giving powers to the Local Government Board to affect and control the rights of parties who have never been heard and have had no statutory opportunity of being heard on the matter to a greater extent than ought to be given. In any event, I think that it would require much stronger words than that simple direction that the land shall not be sold to enable the defendants to exercise a power over this plot of land for the purpose which they desire.

For these reasons, I think the appeal should be dismissed.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. What is weighing with me—not that I suppose there is anything other than bonâ fide in the conduct of this authority—is that it would give such an opening for manipulating these sections of the Act for unjustifiable purposes. People might say: "We will obtain land for a sewage farm; we had better take more than we want, or something that we do not want, in order that we may erect an hospital." I do not for a moment suggest that that was in the minds of this local authority; but if it is lawful, why should not it be carried out? They say: "Some objection might be taken to the hospital, but we should be free to build that when we have the land and get liberty to retain it, and then we can apply it to any purpose for which we are authorized by Act of Parliament to apply land."

I think for the reasons that have been given by the Master of the Rolls, and having regard to those considerations, the appeal ought to be dismissed.

COLLINS, L.J.—I also am of the same opinion. I think that any other decision would defeat the scheme of the Public Health Act.

It is clear that this land was acquired in the first instance for a particular purpose of user—namely, for the purpose of a sewage farm. It is also clear law that having been acquired for that purpose it could not have been diverted to any other purpose, and it seems to me that the scheme of the Public Health Act in sections 175 and 176 is, that when land has to be purchased under compulsory powers, that can only be done after full notice by advertisement, apprising the persons interested about what is intended to be done, and, in particular, apprising the person from whom the land is to be taken, as it does in subsection 3, of the purposes for which they are acquiring it, and that the scheme involves that there can be no compulsory purchase of land unless the person from whom the land is to be taken has full information as to the purposes for which it is required. Obviously, that becomes one of the most important, if not the most important factor in the question as to what compensation is to be paid to him on such a purchase.

Now, those being the conditions which the Legislature has imposed for the acquisition of land compulsorily, it would be an extraordinary thing if they permitted, in the same code, land to be acquired with all those formalities and with distinct information as to the purposes for which it is required to-day, and then a sudden change arising, of which I could easily give an instance, which renders it no longer required for that purpose, they permitted that, notwithstanding these formalities interposed to protect the vendor, the purpose may be wholly changed for one much more injurious to the vendor and which would have led possibly to his getting double the compensation he did receive, and that it should be competent for the local authority without any further evidence and without any further notice and without any further inquiry to do that.

Take this instance, which is not at all an uncommon one: Supposing they acquired land compulsorily with all the proper formalities under the 175th section for the purpose of a public recreation ground; and within a year afterwards some neighbouring owner makes them a free gift of land in some other place equally or more convenient for the purposes of a recreation ground and they accept it, with the result that the land originally purchased for the recreation ground is no longer required for the purpose, so that the provisions of the 175th section obliged them to sell it subject to the clause which Mr. Warrington so much relied on—"unless otherwise directed by the Local Government Board"—is it to be suggested that the Local Government Board, by intervening and relieving them from the obligation of selling, shall enable them to turn that into a sewage farm which was bought for the purpose of a recreation ground? To hold that, would be to hold that the subsidiary clause in the parenthesis in section 175 defeats the whole of the scheme of the code contained in the 176th section. It seems to me that due effect can be given to the words in that paragraph consistent with the main scheme, and that it is not necessary to say that by a parenthesis the local authority is enabled to defeat the purpose of the Act. It seems to me, as the Master of the Rolls has pointed out, that these words "unless otherwise directed by the Local Government Board," are simply words introduced to qualify the exigency of the section compelling a sale there and then. There may be instances where the local authority, for instance, may be absolutely assured that they do not require the land in question for the purpose for which it was acquired, and, nevertheless, the Local Government Board authority may not be absolutely of the same opinion, and, without formulating an opinion that it is not so required, may think it necessary to interpose some delay before a sale takes place. That is a perfectly conceivable instance in which they might fairly and properly exercise that power, and a case for which it would be quite reasonable for the Legislature to provide something to mitigate the absolute exigency of the obligation to sell.

Now, in the case before us, it seems to me that the local authority have, by introducing the condition upon which these lands are to be held, attempted to do something that is entirely outside their power under this Act, and that there is no provision in this Act for the purpose of not merely suspending the right to sell, but of designating the purpose for which that right to sell should be suspended; and if that order were tried by the condition appended to it—namely, the condition that it should be applied for a hospital—it seems in my judgment, speaking for myself, that that order would be ultra vires, and Mr. Warrington does not contend, at all events, that it carries any further weight by the added condition as to the purpose to which it was to be applied. He divests the order of that condition appended to it, and says that he stands simply upon their general rights as a local authority in possession of land unfettered; but it seems to me that they cannot possess themselves of land through this machinery without going through the process indicated by the 176th section of the Act. To hold otherwise would, I think, be to defeat the object of the Act. I therefore agree that this appeal must be dismissed.

Solicitors, Warren S. James; Freshfields & Co.

---

From Q. B. Div. (Webster, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) — May 18.

In re ELY.
Ex parte THE TRUSTEE. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Fraudulent transfer of business to company—Avoidance by trustee—Conversion—Waiver of tort—Account against directors as well as company—No profits remaining in hands of directors—Liability of directors to account.

Where, in the case of a conversion by two joint tort-feasors, one of whom, as between themselves, has acted as principal and one as agent, the injured party elects to waive his remedy for damages against the agent and to proceed against him by way of account, the injured party is entitled to demand from such agent an account of so much of the converted property, or of its proceeds, as may still be actually remaining in the agent's hands at the time of taking the account. But he is not entitled to demand an account of so much of the converted property, or of its proceeds, as such agent has duly handed over, in the course of his agency, to his principal.

Appeal from the decision of a Divisional Court.

Stephen Ely formerly carried on a drapery business at Christchurch Road, Bournemouth, and was indebted in 1899 to the firm of Arthur & Co., of Glasgow, in a sum of about £20,600.

On the 8th of August, Messrs. Arthur & Co. commenced an action against Ely for £809, due to them on three dishonoured bills of exchange.

On the 4th of September Ely agreed with one Roantree for the sale to the latter of his business, in order to convert it into a limited company.

On the 25th of September, this company was registered under the title of Stephen Ely & Co. (Limited), and on the 26th of September the company adopted the contract of sale already mentioned of the 4th of September.

On the 29th of September judgment was obtained against Ely in the action commenced against him by Messrs Arthur & Co., and on the 20th of November, Ely was adjudicated a bankrupt in proceedings based upon this judgment.

On the 4th, 8th, and 26th of December, various transfers of the bankrupt's property were made to the company in pursuance of the agreement of the 4th of September.

The county court judge at Poole, in Dorsetshire, on the application of the trustee in the bankuptcy of Ely, (1) set aside the sale to the company carried out in pursuance of the agreement of the 4th of September, on the ground that the same was a fraudulent conveyance under section 4, sub-section 1 (b) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883; (2) declared that the business of the bankrupt had vested in the trustee as from the 4th of September; and (3) ordered that (a) the company should deliver up and pay to the trustee the property and assets of the bankrupt, and that (b) each of the five directors personally should deliver and pay to the trustee all of such property and assets as were then, or had been, and should account for such parts thereof as had been, but were not then, in the possession or control of each of the five directors.

The Divisional Court (Wright and Phillimore, JJ.), on appeal, on the 15th of March, 1900, whilst confirming the rest of the judgment, varied it so far as related to the personal liability of the five directors, on the ground that there was no evidence that the directors had in any way acted mala fide or assisted the bankrupt to defraud his creditors; and on the further ground that, although they must account for the property of the debtor actually still in their hands, yet they could not be called to account for what they had disposed of in good faith and in the ordinary course of business. It was admitted that the directors retained in their own hands none of the assets and property of the bankrupt.

Against this variation of the judgment, the trustee in bankruptcy now appealed.

Neville, Q.C., and Muir Mackenzie, for the appellant.—In cases of conversion the injured party is at liberty either (a) to proceed against the tort-feasor for damages in tort; or (b) to waive the tort, elect to treat the wrong-doer as his agent, and claim from him an account for moneys had and received: Smith v. Baker, L. R. 8 C. P. 350, 21 W. R. Dig. 260. He is at liberty, moreover, to proceed against those who have converted as mere agents equally with those who have converted as principals: Stephens v. Elwall, 4 M. & Sel. 259; McEntire v. Potter, 37 W. R. 607, 22 Q. B. D. 438, at p. 441; Barker v. Furlong, 39 W. R. 621, [1891] 2 Ch. 172; Consolidated Co. v. Curtis, 40 W. R. 426, [1892] 1 Q. B. 495, at p. 497 (distinguishing Turner v. Hockey, 56 L. J., Q. B. 301, 35 W. R. Dig. 209); Betts v. De Vitre, 16 W. R. 529; Bullen and Leake on Pleading (5th ed., 1897), p. 300. The innocence of the tort-feasor, whether principal or agent, is quite immaterial: Hollins v. Fowler, L. R. 7 H. L. 757, 23 W. R. Dig. 238. The conversion refers back to the 4th of September, and the appellant asks for an account of the property as it came into the hands of the company and directors on that date. The appellant is not concerned with what has happened to it since—it is immaterial, for instance, whether any part of it does, or does not now remain in the possession of the directors.

(a.) Reported by J. E. MORRIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

They also referred to Smith v. Sleap, 12 M. & W. 585, and In re Hirth, 47 W. R. 243, [1899] 1 Q. B. 612.

Herbert Reed, Q.C., and Cooper Willis, for three of the respondent directors.—The trustee is entitled to a real account of the property as it stands at the time of his taking the account. He is not entitled to an account of the property as it stood on the 4th of September, when it was taken over by the company. To demand an account of the property as it stood on the 4th of September, is practically to proceed against the directors by way of tort, which he has elected not to do; and having once elected to waive the tort he is not at liberty to change his mind: Smith v. Hodson, 4 T. R. 211; Smith's Leading Cases (9th ed.), Vol. II., p. 138; Ex parte Vaughan, 33 W. R. 151, 14 Q. B. D. 25.

E. Clayton, for two of the respondent directors.

Neville, Q.C., in reply.—There has never been any such election here as the respondents allege: Rice v. Reed, [1900] 1 Q. B. 54.

WEBSTER, M.R.—Some very important questions of law have arisen in the present case, but I do not feel it necessary to deal with them all. [His lordship stated the facts.] Now we have had an interesting argument from Mr. Neville as to the effect of a conversion of property by a principal and agent, but I am not disposed to give any judgment dealing with those points. Those points, indeed, do not arise as the facts are now understood. Since the business was taken over by the company it has been carried on on behalf of the company, and, as I understand it, when the trustee took possession of the stock he took possession of it as it stood on the day of his taking it—not as it stood on the 4th of September. But it is further admitted that no profits of the goods that have been sold have remained in the possession or pockets of the directors themselves—indeed, the directors have never claimed any possession of them in their own right. Under those circumstances is there any claim which can be enforced against the directors which can justify us in calling on them to account? I agree with Mr. Neville that the trustee did not adopt the company, or deal with it as a lawfully existing association. But the conclusion which I have drawn is that the trustee did elect to waive the tort as against the company and to claim an account of the proceeds. It is said that we ought to draw a line at the 4th of September, and treat the goods and stock which were in existence then as having been converted; and treat the trustee as supposed to have nothing to do with what happened afterwards. For myself, I should have great difficulty in coming to that conclusion. I think that the fair result of what happened is this, that the trustee disaffirmed the conveyance to the company, and claimed that the business was his own. Under those circumstances he had a claim against the company for a real account of what they had done. I cannot see that, after having claimed from the company an account of the goods they have sold, and after having admitted that the directors have made no personal profit, he is entitled to call upon the latter to account. The decision of the Divisional Court must be affirmed.

RIGBY, L.J., concurred.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. So soon as the transaction by which this company seemed to acquire a property in the goods of the bankrupt has been declared void, we arrive at the following result: The company has been carrying on a business which belonged to the trustee—which was not their own at all. That being so, the trustee is at liberty to say: I am in a position to sue you in tort, or, in the alternative, to call you to account for the proceeds, as money had to my use. If he choose to proceed in tort, the facts would justify judgment against the company and its directors alike. If he choose to proceed by way of account, dealings which, without his assent, would be unlawful, are not unlawful now. He has chosen to proceed by the latter course. But at this point another fact is introduced into this discussion. It is admitted that the directors have paid over everything that they have received. To ask them to account for this now would be inconsistent with the alternative that the trustee has adopted. The two states of things cannot co-exist.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Phelps, Sidgwick, & Biddle; A. Marchant; Ward, Perks, & Mackay.

---

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Stirling, J. — July 17; Aug. 7.

In re DASH.

SOLICITOR TO THE TREASURY v. LEWIS. (a.)

Donatio mortis causa—Possession—Dominion.

In order to constitute a valid donatio mortis causa, the donor must not merely part with the possession of, but also with the dominion over, the thing given.

Held, that there had not been a valid donatio mortis causa.

Action.

The plaintiff in this action was the legal personal representative of Mrs. Eliza Dash, widow, who died intestate at Bristol on the 31st of January, 1899.

The object of the action was to recover from the defendant Edwin Thomas Lewis property of the deceased of very considerable amount, to which he claimed to be entitled by virtue of a donatio mortis causa made to him by the intestate shortly before her death.

The other defendants were the representatives of certain charitable institutions who claimed to be beneficially interested in the property so given to Mr. Lewis.

(a.) Reported by PAUL STRICKLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The question to be determined was whether the alleged donatio mortis causa was valid in law. The circumstances in which the alleged gift took place are set out in the judgment.

Sir E. Carson, S.G., and Ingle Joyce, for the plaintiff.

Swinfen Eady, Q.C., and Christopher James, for the defendant Lewis.

Upjohn, Q.C., and Buckmaster, for the other defendants.

STIRLING, J., in delivering judgment, said: Mrs. Dash, the intestate, was born about 1812. She was twice married, and became a widow for the second time about twenty years ago. She derived from her second husband, Mr. John Dash, a considerable fortune. The defendant Mr. Lewis, whose integrity and straightforwardness are beyond question, realized her husband's property, and afterwards managed her affairs for her. He was in the habit of seeing her once a week, generally on Thursday evenings. He stated that he had on many occasions urged her to make a will, but she always refused; one reason being that she objected to the payment of duty and another that she did not wish anyone to know her means. Some months before her death she said to Mr. Lewis that she had been thinking over how she would like her property disposed of, and asked him to "jot it down." He proceeded to do so, but after a time she said she would go no further, and Mr. Lewis went away and left the paper with her. Thus matters stood on Thursday, the 26th of January, when Mr. Lewis called on her and found her very ill. What took place was thus stated by him in a written statement, of which a copy was furnished to the plaintiff: "I went there on the Thursday evening and found her very unwell. She then said 'I think you had better go on with what we were talking about the other night.' She produced the bit of notepaper, on which I had previously made a memorandum of amounts which she wished to give. She then said, 'You will please to write down what I tell you.' I said, 'It will be of no use, Mrs. Dash.' She said, 'Don't tell me that. If I give you everything you can certainly do what I tell you with it.' I said, 'How am I to begin?' She said, 'You know what to say. I give you everything subject to your settling my affairs, seeing to my burial, and paying the amounts to the charities and persons I name.' Before writing out the paper I said, 'I don't know what to say. You ought to have a solicitor here.' 'No,' she said, 'I am going to give you everything if you promise me (and I am sure if you promise me you will fulfil) that you will do what I tell you.' After this I wrote out on a bit of paper the heading in my own words and copied the amounts and names from the memos. previously made by me. She made her cross, and I wrote her name on the paper after she had made the cross."

The paper there referred to was in these terms: "40, Horfield-road, Bristol, Jan. 26, 1899.—I, Eliza Dash, residing at the above address, do give the whole of my property, whatever it may consist of at the time of my decease, to Edwin Thomas Lewis, of Upton Lodge, Cotham-park, Bristol, upon the distinct promise that he will settle up my affairs and see to my burial, and will also give the following sums to the charities and persons named." Then followed a list of charities and individuals, with sums of money set opposite their names, including Muller's Orphan Asylum, £10,000; Hook's Mill Orphan Asylum, £5,000; Dr. Barnardo's Homes, Stepney, London, £3,000; and many others. Mr. Lewis's statement then proceeded: "She told me where to find her securities. She said, 'Go upstairs into the back room and in a basket near the bedside you will find the deposit note and Usher's shares.' There were two keys on the table. She gave me one. I took it and went upstairs. I found the door locked, and unlocked it. I lifted up some clothes from the top of the basket and found a banker's deposit note for £30,000 and a certificate for 200 £5 preference shares in Usher's Brewery Co. There were two or three small parcels done up in paper. I have since found they were gold. She had particularly mentioned the deposit note and Usher's shares. I brought down the deposit note and the share certificate and gave them to her. She had them in her hands. She handed them back to me and said, 'You take charge of them. If I get better of course you will bring them back.'"

Mr. Lewis saw her again on the 30th of January, when he called between five and six o'clock. He went again on the following day. [His lordship then again referred to the defendant's statement, in which he gave a further account of other property of the deceased's which had come to his hands, including a sum of £300 in notes and some gold and silver.] She died (continued his lordship) on the same evening about 10.45.

It was decided in Hills v. Hills, 8 M. & W. 401, that a gift may be good as a donatio mortis causa although it is coupled with a trust or condition that the donee shall provide the funeral of the donor, but, as is pointed out by Parke, B., such a circumstance affords "a strong argument that the deceased did not intend to make a donatio mortis causa, but, as it were, to make the defendant her executor under a nuncupative will." That is one mode of formulating the question which arises in such cases. It was put to the jury in another way by the learned judge who tried the case of Hills v. Hills (Lord Cranworth)—viz., "whether it was intended as an absolute gift to the defendant after the death of the intestate or whether she intended to retain a control over the property during her life." I understand that to refer to what is established law—viz., that in order to constitute a good donatio mortis causa the donor must not merely part with the possession of, but also with the dominion over, the thing given: see Hawkins v. Blewitt, 2 Esp. 663; Reddel v. Dobree, 10 Sim. 244. In determining such a question all the circumstances must be taken into consideration. The case for the defendent is strongest with reference to the deposit note, and that I proceed to consider. According to the written statement of Mr. Lewis, Mrs. Dash more than once stated her intention to give him everything. She directed him to write down what she told him; he said it would be of no use. She then said: "Do not tell me that; if I give you everything you can certainly do what I tell you with it." He agreed to write, and asked her how he was to begin. She said: "You know what to say. I give you everything if you promise me, and I am sure if you promise me you will fulfil, that you will do what I tell you." Her intention therefore being to give everything, she could not mean to divest herself of everything at the moment when she called on him to record her wishes. That is made perfectly clear in the written document, which I regard as of the greatest importance, as being a formal contemporary record of what was intended to be done. It begins: "I . . . do give the whole of my property, whatever it may consist of at the time of my death." Over all that property, therefore, she intended during her life to retain a power of disposition. Further, the document seems to me to be distinctly of a testamentary character. In substance it contains directions for payment of debts and funeral expenses and legacies. After the paper was written and signed by a cross she directed Mr. Lewis to a place where he would find the deposit note. Upon his return she took it from him and handed it back to him, saying, "You take charge of it; if I get better of course you will bring it back"; to which is added, "If I do not you will know what to do with the money." That language might be used so as to create a donatio mortis causa; but it must, as I conceive, be interpreted in connection with what had previously taken place. In my judgment Mrs. Dash meant that Mr. Lewis was to take charge of the note and deal with it simply as part of that which she meant to dispose of as from her death, and over which she showed her intention to reserve dominion during her life. The reference to the note being brought back if she recovered does not seem to me to exclude such dominion; it only shows that she did not at the time consider that she was likely to exercise it. This is, I think, shown by the additional statement made by the deceased to Mr. Lewis—viz., "If I do not get better you will know what to do with the money," referring, as Mr. Lewis admitted, to the document of the 26th of January. In my opinion, therefore, there was no valid donatio mortis causa of the deposit note; and, as the gift fails as to that, it a fortiori fails as to the other subjects of disposition.

Solicitors, Solicitor to the Treasury; Arber & Lewis.

---

Chan. Div. }
Kekewich, J. } Aug. 3.

In re TREASURE.
WILD v. STANHAM. (a.)

Administration — Estate duty — Appointed fund — Residuary estate—"Testamentary expenses"—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 9 (1).

A fund appointed by will under a power of appointment does not pass to the executors as such within the meaning of the Finance Act, 1894, and is therefore chargeable with estate duty.

Estate duty is included in "testamentary expenses."

This was an originating summons taken out by the executors of the will of Mrs. Treasure to determine whether the estate duty payable on her death in respect of property appointed by her will under a power of appointment ought to be paid out of the property so appointed or out of the residuary estate.

It appeared that the testatrix had a power of appointment under the will of her father over one-third of his property.

By her will dated the 26th of February, 1894, she appointed the plaintiffs executors and trustees and directed and appointed with regard to all property to which any power of appointment whether general or special vested in her under her father's will extended, should be held upon trust for the plaintiff J. A. Wild and the defendant as tenants in common in equal shares, and the testatrix gave the residue of her real and personal estate to her trustees upon trust for sale and conversion and to divide the proceeds, after paying funeral and testamentary expenses and debts, among certain other persons.

The testatrix died on the 6th of May, 1899, and the will was duly proved.

J. Dixon, for the executors.

P. O. Lawrence, Q.C., and W. M. Cann, for the appointees.

Warrington, Q.C., and W. A. Peck, for the residuary legatees.

KEKEWICH, J.—The arguments on behalf of those interested in the residuary estate who desire to throw the burden of the estate duty on the appointed fund was mainly directed to the construction of section 9 (1) of the Finance Act, 1894, or rather to its application to the case in hand. In my opinion the appointed fund did not pass to the executors as such. I have arrived at this opinion independently of the law as it stood before the date of the Finance Act, and to which I do not propose further to refer, but the arguments founded on that state of the law go to confirm it. The position of executors under a will exercising a general power of appointment must be treated as settled by In re Hoskin's Trusts, 25 W. R. 779, 6 Ch. D. 281, and In re Philbrick's Trusts, 13 W. R. 570, which was there referred to by Jessel, M.R., and having regard to what was said by James, L.J., in In re Hoskin's Trusts, no distinction can be made between a power given to a married woman and one given to any other person. In In re Philbrick's Trusts Sir John Romilly explained that when a married woman made a will in exercise of a power and appointed executors, inasmuch as she could only make her will by virtue of the power, and could only have appointed the executors for the purpose of administering the appointed property, she must be considered to have appointed the property to the executors as trustees. Let me repeat that after what was said by James, L.J., in In re Hoskin's Trusts, this must be treated as applicable to a power exercised by any other person, and that, notwithstanding what was said by Sir John Romilly, is, in language and in substance, not strictly applicable to such a case. It was argued that executors appointed by a will exercising a general power could not be held responsible if they did not look after the administration of the fund and it was unfortunately lost, because they are only bound to require payment of the fund to them if required for the purposes of the will. I do not wish to conclude the question of their responsibility, but there is certainly room for contending that this argument is not consistent with the doctrine laid down in the cases cited. Nevertheless, it seems to me that the appointed fund does not pass to the executors as such, and In re Culverhouse, Cook v. Culverhouse, 45 W. R. 10, [1896] 2 Ch. 251, does not decide that it does. There the property in question was leasehold specifically bequeathed, and the judgment proceeded on the title of the executor as explained in the passage in Williams on Executors there cited. Where there is an appointed fund, on the other hand, the executors do not take it by virtue of their office, but because, to again quote Sir John Romilly's language, the donee of the power must be considered to have appointed the property to the executors as trustees. On this point, therefore, I am in favour of those who say that the estate duty must be charged on the appointed fund. On the other question—namely, whether the estate duty falls within the description of "testamentary expenses," and must therefore be paid out of the residuary estate, I am in favour of those who say that it must be so paid. I must in this follow my own judgment in In re Clemow, Yeo v. Clemow, ante, p. 541, [1900] 2 Ch. 182. It was attempted to distinguish that case on the ground that there the direction was to pay the testamentary expenses of another person. That is true, and the distinction is of importance with reference to one of the points argued and decided in that case, but as regards the point with which I am dealing here, my judgment was based entirely on the reasoning that as the payment of estate duty was essential to obtaining a grant of probate, that duty must be considered as much a testamentary expense as any other payment necessarily or properly incurred by the executors for that purpose.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, Wild & Wild; Crawford & Chester.

---

Chan. Div. } Byrne, J. } May 17.

BORN v. TURNER. (a.)

Mortgagee—Sale by mortgagee under statutory power of part of mortgaged property—Grant of implied easements over unsold land—Light—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 6, sub-sections 1, 2, 4, 5; s. 19, sub-section 1—Co-defendants—Third-party procedure—Costs—R. S. C., ord. 16, r. 55.

A conveyance by a mortgagee exercising his statutory power of sale of part of the mortgaged property will pass to the purchaser an implied easement as to light over the portion remaining unsold.

An owner of land brought an action for infringement of light and trespass against a neighbouring owner and a person engaged in building a wall for him. The builder, not being satisfied with the way in which the defence was being conducted, severed his defence, and was separately represented.

Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, he was justified in so doing, and entitled to be paid solicitor and client costs by his co-defendant.

Trial of action.

This was an action in which the plaintiff claimed an injunction to restrain (a) trespass on the ground of the plaintiff, (b) injury to light to a small greenhouse. The defendants were the owner of an adjacent property and his builder.

The facts were as follows: The property of the plaintiff consisted of property situate at Brighton used as a yard, with sheds and stables around it, and of a piece of land used as a garden upon which there was built a greenhouse or conservatory which was really a vinery, a place used for growing cucumbers and for potting plants. The premises belonging to the plaintiff and the first defendant were in 1887 mortgaged by the then owners to one Stoneham. On the 11th of July, 1887, Stoneham, in the exercise of his statutory power of sale, conveyed part of the premises, including the land the subject-matter of the action, to Wm. Born, the predecessor in title of the plaintiff.

In 1898 the mortgagee conveyed the remainder of the property to the defendant Turner.

In 1899 Turner employed a builder, the defendant Hackman, to erect a wall and building on his (Turner's) part of the premises, which the plaintiff submitted constituted an encroachment on his land and interfered with the access of light to the greenhouse.

Hackman, not being satisfied with the way in which the defence was being conducted by Turner, severed from him, and was separately represented at the hearing by solicitor and counsel.

One defence was that on a grant by a mortgagee no implied easement as to light will pass.

Rowden, Q.C., and Peterson, for the plaintiff.—A sale by a mortgagee under his statutory power passes continuous easements exactly as a sale by an owner in fee simple. A mortgagee cannot derogate from his grant any more than can an owner in fee simple.

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

They referred to Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 6, sub-section 2; Wheeldon v. Burrows, 27 W. R. 165, 28 W. R. 196, 12 Ch. D. 31; Broomfield v. Williams, 45 W. R. 469, [1897] 1 Ch. 602.

Norton, Q.C., and Bourne, for Turner.—A mortgagee selling under his power of sale cannot grant an easement over the unsold portion of the mortgaged property. Section 19, sub-section 1, of the Conveyancing Act gives the mortgagee power to sell any part of the mortgaged land; but this will not authorize a sale of trade machinery apart from the land or holdings: In re Yates, Batchelor v. Yates, 36 W. R. 563, 38 Ch. D. 112. Section 17 of the Conveyancing Act may be read with the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 3, sub-section 1, as these two Acts were part of one scheme. Express power is given by the Settled Land Act to the tenant for life to sell any easement over the settled land, but no such power is vested in the mortgagor under the Conveyancing Act.

They referred to Buckley v. Howell, 9 W. R. 544, 29 Beav. 546; Dayrell v. Hoare, 12 A. & E. 356; Wolstenholme on the Conveyancing and Settled Land Acts (8th ed.) p. 70; Robbins on Mortgages, p. 902.

Alexander, Q.C., and Tindal Robertson, for Hackman.

Rowden, Q.C., in reply.—The mortgagee has power to create an easement because all the fee simple of the estate is vested in him. It is only when he gets a surplus in his hands that he becomes a trustee for the mortgagor.

BYRNE, J.—The question of law that has been raised in this case is whether or not by the conveyance of that portion of the mortgaged property upon which the vinery was standing there was an implied grant of a quasi-easement of light to that building over the other land then in mortgage. The Conveyancing Act of 1881, s. 6 (2), provides that: "A conveyance of land, having houses or other buildings thereon, shall be deemed to include and shall by virtue of this Act operate to convey, with the land, houses, or other buildings, all lights, easements, rights, and advantages whatsoever appertaining or reputed to appertain to the land, houses, or other buildings conveyed, or any of them, or any part thereof, or at the time of conveyance demised, occupied, or enjoyed with or reputed or known as part or parcel of, or appurtenant to, the land, houses, or other buildings conveyed or any of them, or any part thereof." That is, of course, subject to their being no contrary intention expressed in the conveyance as provided by sub-section (4), and there is no contrary intention expressed in the conveyance in the present case. Then the 5th sub-section says: "This section shall not be construed as giving to any person a better title to any property, right, or thing in this section mentioned than the title which the conveyance gives to him to the land or manor expressed to be conveyed, or as conveying to him any property, right, or thing in this section mentioned, further or otherwise than as the same could have been conveyed to him by the conveying parties."

Now it is said that there are opinions in two well-known text books and that there is a case from which I ought to hold that there could not be a grant of a new easement over land retained by the mortgagee—that is by an express grant. I do not think it is necessary for me to determine that question in the present case. In my opinion the mortgagee has conferred upon him by the power of sale a power when the mortgage money has become due—I am using again the words of the Act, in the 19th section (1) (i.)

—"to sell or to concur with any other person in selling the mortgaged property, or any part thereof." The first question is: May a mortgagee under this power sell a part of the mortgaged property? Clearly he can. Did the mortgagee in this case in selling the garden and conservatory do more than sell a part of the mortgaged property? I think he was selling a part of the mortgaged property, and a part which seemed, from physical circumstances, to be naturally divided from the other part. There is no suggestion of eccentricity in division, or of impropriety in the sale. The sale seems to have been within the terms of the power, and the question is what passed by the grant by the mortgagee. The mortgagee has the legal estate; his powers, of course, are not the same as those possessed by an owner in fee simple. The owner in fee simple might sell the material of a house from off the property; he might dig up part of the property and sell gravel; he might partly pull down the house and sell the bricks; and he might certainly sell the trade machinery out of his trade manufactories. The mortgagee, of course, stands in a different position. He may not, as has been held, under the power to sell a part of the mortgaged property, sell machinery affixed to a manufactory apart from the manufactory itself: In re Yates, Batchelor v. Yates. I mention that case simply by way of illustration. Of course, other illustrations were given in the course of the case which would show that the mortgagee had no power to do more than sell the whole or part of the mortgaged property. Now I hold that this was a selling of part of the mortgaged property, and if he can sell part of the mortgaged property he can grant the mortgaged property, and he can so grant it by virtue of the power of sale which is conferred on him, and by virtue of the legal estate which he has he can so grant it as to carry with it a destruction of the equity of redemption in the part sold, and with all legal incidents ordinarily accompanying a grant, as, for instance, appurtenances such as ways over the grounds of third persons will of course pass, and I do not myself see my way to saying that the operation of the grant is not to be similar to the operation of a grant by an owner in fee, so far as concerns passing apparent continuous easements. And I may say, that I can see at once if it were not so it might operate most injuriously to the mortgagor in many cases. I will take for example the case of a mortgage of a piece of property on a portion of which a house is erected with lights. A purchaser is found who is willing to give a very handsome price for that portion of the land with the house upon it. He is not willing to buy the adjoining property included in the mortgage. The mortgagee can, by effecting the sale of the house, get a good bargain for himself and for the mortgagor, on the footing that the man who has bought the house has given his price because he thought he was to have a house with the proper enjoyment of light to that house. And it appears to me that if a mortgagee so desiring to sell a piece of land with a house upon it could only sell it so as to confer upon the person purchasing such an interest as would not entitle him to complain of his being built in all round, and of having all his light taken away from him, that would operate most injuriously for the mortgagor as well as for the mortgagee. My view is that the meaning and intention of the power in the mortgage is that the mortgagee may, so long as he does not do more than sell the whole or part of the property, grant that whole or part, as the case may be, with all the legal incidents attaching to a grant of the whole or part.

Under those circumstances I have come to the conclusion that in this case, the sale being that of a garden, with a vinery upon it, that the purchaser acquired at the same time a right to the access of light to this vinery over the land retained by the mortgagee, and that he is entitled to see that that right is not interfered with by any person subsequently acquiring the adjoining land. As a matter of fact the adjoining land was subsequently acquired by the person also claiming under the mortgagee in this particular case, but I have preferred to base my judgment on this legal point upon the broader ground that the conveyance by the mortgagee operates in the way I have mentioned. Of course, in what I have said I do not mean to suggest for one moment that the mortgagee may so deal with a mortgaged property as to infringe the rights of his mortgagor; so long as he bonâ fide sells a part of the property, I think he can sell it with the legal incidents attaching to the conveyance in granting it.

His lordship then considered the evidence, and, holding that there had been an infringement of the plaintiff's right to light, granted an injunction against Turner with costs.

Alexander, Q.C., and Tindal Robertson, who had taken no part in the former argument, but had served on Turner a third-party notice under R. S. C., ord. 16, r. 55, applied for their costs against him as between solicitor and client, and referred to Howard v. Lovegrove, 19 W. R. 188, L. R. 6 Ex. 43, and were allowed them by the court on the ground that, under the circumstances, Hackman was justified in severing his defence.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Solicitors, Mason, Soper, & Wood; Alfred Slater; Lowndes, for Griffith, Brighton.

---

Chan. Div. Buckley, J. — Aug. 8.

In re ROBINSON.
CLARKSON v. DIXON. (a.)

Trustee—Charges for time and trouble—Will—Trustees' remuneration clause.

A will provided that "Any trustee and executor hereunder, being a solicitor or other persons engaged in any profession or business, shall be entitled to charge and be paid all usual professional or other charges for any business done by him or his firm in relation to the management and administration of my estate . . . whether in the ordinary course of his profession or business or not, and although not of a nature strictly requiring the employment of a solicitor or other professional person."

Held, that a trustee was not entitled to charge generally for his time and trouble in the management of the estate, but only for work done in the course of his profession or business.

In re Fish, [1893] 2 Ch. 413, 41 W. R. Dig. 236, distinguished.

The question in this case was as to the remuneration of trustees, and arose under the will of Mr. John Peter Robinson, the well-known hosier and draper of Oxford-street, London.

The testator appointed five persons as his executors and trustees, of whom one, Mr. Clarkson, was an architect, one, Mr. Rabbidge, a chartered accountant, one, Mr. Hitchens, a solicitor, and the two others were engaged in the business of the testator.

The will provided that the children should be entitled to the residuary estate in equal shares. The trustees had power to postpone the sale and conversion of the estate and to manage it meanwhile. Towards the end the will contained the following clause: "I direct that the said William Hitchens shall be the solicitor to my estate and to my trustees and executors in the management and administration of my estate and carrying out of the trusts, powers, and provisions of this my will. And also that he, and any trustee and executor hereunder being a solicitor or other person engaged in any profession or business, shall be entitled to charge and be paid all usual professional or other charges for any business done by him or his firm in relation to the management and administration of my estate, and carrying out the trusts, powers, and provisions of this my will, whether in the ordinary course of his profession or business or not, and although not of a nature strictly requiring the employment of a solicitor or other professional person." This, with slight alteration, is the power for the purpose given in Key and Elphinstone's Precedents in Conveyancing.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The testator died in October, 1895, leaving children, some of whom were infants, and the share of one was settled. His estate was of great value, the personalty being sworn for probate at more than a million pounds, and there being besides real estate of large value. It comprised many leasehold buildings.

The trustees and executors brought the action for admistration of the estate under the direction of the court, and in December, 1898, the court directed the usual accounts and inquiries, and the master made his certificate, and therein disallowed certain items of the trustees' accounts amounting altogether to nearly £1,900. These items related partly to professional work done for the estate, as for preparing plans for buildings by Mr. Clarkson, and by making up various accounts in connection with the estate by Mr. Rabbidge, and partly of the charges of the executors for attendances at their meetings when they transacted the business of the estate, and certain other charges for loss of time in other transactions connected with the estate.

The case now came on for further consideration upon prepared minutes which proposed that the items disallowed by the master should be allowed.

H. Terrell, Q.C., and MacSwinney, for the plaintiffs.—Trustees are allowed to charge not only for their professional services, but also for their trouble under a clause such as this: In re Fish, [1893] 2 Ch. 413, 41 W. R. Dig. 236. The words "or other charges," and "whether in the course of ordinary business or not" are very wide and intended to enable the trustees, if professional or business men, to charge for their time and trouble in the administration of the estate.

Astbury, Q.C., and Brabant, for some of the defendants and parties attending; and

Methold, for the remaining defendants, adopted the arguments of the plaintiffs, and stated they considered it for the benefit of the persons they represented that the charges made should be allowed, as the estate was greatly benefiting by the attention and management of the trustees.

BUCKLEY, J.—I think that under the clause in question a trustee may charge for work done, whether done in the ordinary course of business or not in the ordinary course of business; or to put it another way, the charge may be made if the work is done in the course of his profession or business, whether it is done in the ordinary course or not in the ordinary course. This becomes more plain from the next part of the clause, "and although not of a nature strictly requiring the employment of a solicitor or other professional person." The question is, whether what has been done has been done in the course of his profession or business, and, if that is so, then he may make his usual charges in that profession or business, notwithstanding that he is a trustee or executor. We have not to see whether it has been done in the ordinary course of the profession or business, but whether it has been in fact done in the course of the profession or business, and if so the clause is satisfied. I have been referred to In re Fish. In the construction of one will the language of another is not a good guide. I have to construe this will, and not that in In re Fish. In that case the remuneration clause contains the words "including all business of whatever kind not strictly professional, but which might have been performed or would necessarily have been performed in person by a trustee not being a solicitor." Directly you get such words, you have words which show that everything which the trustee does personally he is entitled to be paid for, and the Court of Appeal said that under that clause the trustee was entitled to be paid for his trouble. I have looked carefully to see whether there are any such words in the will before me, but I cannot see any which show that the trustee is to be paid for his trouble without reference to his usual charges. It has been argued that under the clause if a person is engaged in a profession or business he is to be paid for his trouble, but if he is not so engaged he is not to be paid. I do not think that that is a sensible conclusion. Then it is said that the allowances asked for would be beneficial to the infants interested. I have not been shown this. I think that the Master should allow only those charges I have indicated.

Solicitors, Capron, Hitchins, Brabant, & Hitchins; Dangerfield, Blythe, & Hodgson.

---

Chan. Div. } July 9-13, 16-19, 27.
Buckley, J. }

ASSETS DEVELOPMENT CO. v. CLOSE BROTHERS. (a.)

Practice—Costs—Higher scale—Special ground—Allegation of fraud—Ord. 65, r. 9.

The mere fact of an allegation of fraud being made in an action by the unsuccessful party is not a special ground for obtaining costs on the higher scale under ord. 65, r. 9, even when the amount at stake is large and the questions of law and fact raised are difficult.

This was an action to set aside or vary an agreement made in May, 1898, between the plaintiff company and the defendants, Close Brothers, as the result of previous transactions of a long and complicated character.

The story began in 1895, when the plaintiff company was formed, and when a scheme was set on foot by the agents of another company, called in the trial the "B. C. D. A." Co., for making a railway from Skagway in the State of Washington or the Province of British Columbia (the territory being in dispute between the two countries) to the White Pass, and thence to the Yukon River, for the purpose of providing access to the Klondike Goldfields.

Various concessions were obtained from the Dominion of Canada and the Province of British

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Columbia, and a separate company was formed for each separate territory through which the railway was to pass.

These rights were, in January, 1898, agreed to be purchased by the plaintiff company. And at the same time the defendants, Close Brothers, advanced the sum of £10,000 to the plaintiff company upon the security of an agreement by the plaintiffs to repay the sum, and to transfer certain shares in one of the companies to the lenders.

After various later transactions an agreement dated the 16th of May, 1898, was made between the plaintiff company and the defendants, Close Brothers, for the transfer by the company of certain shares in the other companies and in a company about to be formed, and thereupon the debt of £10,000 was to be released.

The plaintiff company alleged that they had been induced to enter into this agreement by false representations, and that the effect of the agreement of the 16th of May, 1898, and of a later agreement entered into by them upon the same representations, had been to lessen by £50,000 certain moneys payable to them, and to vest certain shares in the defendants, Close Brothers, without consideration. They, therefore claimed to have the agreement of May, 1898, set aside or varied, and to be declared entitled to certain shares held by defendants.

The trial lasted nine days, although no evidence was given on behalf of the defendants; and the judgment occupied more than thirty folio pages of print. The learned judge gave judgment for the defendants, Close Brothers, with costs. They thereupon applied for the costs to be taxed upon the higher scale under ord. 65, r. 9.

Sir Edward Clarke, Q.C., Warmington, Q.C., and Austen Cartmell, for the defendants.—The case deals with a large amount of money; it has caused great expense because the allegation of the plaintiffs who have failed is that practically a conspiracy existed in America, and the allegation of fraud involved a large number of persons. The charge was so unfounded that it has been rejected without any evidence being called by the defendants, and it would be a hardship to give the defendants only costs upon the lower scale, leaving them to bear the burden of defending themselves from a baseless charge. It may be that neither the large pecuniary amount at stake nor the difficulty of the questions raised is a special ground standing by itself; but here in addition is a charge of fraud. Costs on the higher scale have been allowed in Harrison v. Leutner, 31 W. R. 837, 24 Ch. D. 594, and in Pooley's Trustee v. Whetham, 34 W. R. 689, 33 Ch. D. 111, at p. 120. [His lordship referred to Williamson v. North Staffordshire Railway Co., 32 Ch. D. 399, 34 W. R. Dig. 44, and Paine v. Chisholm, 39 W. R. 353, [1891] 1 Q. B. 531, at p. 534, where costs on the higher scale were refused.]

Haldane, Q.C., Astbury, Q.C., and Martelli, for the Plaintiffs, referred to the American Braided Wire Co. v. Thompson, 38 W. R. 329, 44 Ch. D. 274, 296.

Swinfen Eady, Q.C., Younger, Q.C., and Bryan Farrer; H. Terrell, Q.C., and Jessel, for other parties.

July 27.—BUCKLEY, J.—I wish it were in my power in every case to make the unsuccessful litigant indemnify the successful against costs, but it is not so. There is a scale of costs which is allowed, and my only power to enlarge that is under circumstances which are defined in ord. 65, r. 9. Under that rule I can allow costs on the higher scale if on special grounds arising out of the nature or importance or the difficulty or urgency of the case I think that such allowance ought to be made. That is the only power I have. In Williamson v. The North Staffordshire Railway Co., Cotton, L.J., said (32 Ch. D. at p. 402) that he had great difficulty in understanding the meaning of the rule. I share the difficulty. Now I have the guidance of the Court of Appeal to this extent, that Williamson v. The North Staffordshire Railway Co. plainly decided that the fact that the amount in dispute is large, and the fact that the questions of fact and law to be determined are difficult, does not bring the case within the rule. I must, therefore, disregard that which Sir Edward Clarke urged, that the preparation of the brief is a matter of great difficulty or labour. It would be so in all cases which involved difficult questions of fact and law. The Court of Appeal says that that is not enough. That is not a special ground, and you must have a special ground. In the case of Paine v. Chisholm Lord Esher says this: "The conditions, therefore, on which such an order may be made are these: first, there must be something in the nature and importance of the case, or there must be difficulty or urgency in it; and then there must also be special grounds arising therefrom for making the order." Now the special ground put forward here is that the statement of claim alleges fraud and misrepresentation, and attributes to the defendants fraudulent conduct. Is that sufficient alone, or is it not? I do not see in the fact that the fraud is alleged that there necessarily arises a special ground, so that the party in the wrong ought to pay more. I think the meaning of the rule is that there is a special ground where the nature of the case, or the importance of the case, necessitates the plaintiff spending more money, in that he has to call a more expensive class of witnesses. Upon that footing it has been held in patent cases that where the evidence given by the successful party is that of expert witnesses who have to be paid according to their professional experience and capacity, that that is a special ground arising from the nature of the case. One can lay hold of something there, but I do not find myself in a position to lay hold of anything from the mere fact that fraud is alleged, and to say that that is a special ground for the plaintiff paying more. On these grounds, it appears to me, I ought to refuse this application. In the case of Paine v. Chisholm, which was a case of fraudulent misrepresentation as to the sale of a public-house, the Court of Appeal refused costs on the higher scale. That is, therefore, a case in which, although fraud was alleged, the higher scale was refused. But I do not know that Paine v. Chisholm went as far as I am going here. The judgment went on the fact that there was no difficulty in getting up the case, that it was an ordinary sort of case. I do not say at all that this is an ordinary sort of case, it has involved a great deal of investigation; but according to Williamson v. North Staffordshire Railway Co., the fact that the amount at stake is so large and the questions of fact and law so difficult is not enough. Adding to that that fraud is alleged, if it be a simple case, is not enough. It seems to me I must hold consistently with those two decisions of the Court of Appeal that the mere fact here that fraud is alleged is not a special ground within ord. 65, r. 9. I therefore give the costs on the lower scale.

Solicitors, Watson-Thomas & Co.; Longbourne, Stevens, & Co.; Lee & Pembertons.

Chan. Div.
Buckley, J. } July 24.

BLACKBURNE v. HOPE EDWARDES. (a.)

Settlement—Rent-charge—Term to secure—Arrears of rent-charge—Whether raisable by sale of inheritance.

A legal rent-charge was by deed charged upon and payable out of land, and besides the usual powers of distress and entry, a term was limited by the deed to the use of trustees upon the usual trusts if the rent-charge fell into arrear by mortgage or demise for all or part of the term, or by other reasonable means to raise the arrears.

Held (applying Hall v. Hurt, 2 Joh. & Hem. 76, 10 W. R. Ch. Dig. 5), that the limiting of the term negatived the right to have arrears raised by a sale of the inheritance.

Action.

By an indenture of settlement executed on the 22nd of July, 1867, previously to and in anticipation of the marriage of William John Hope Edwardes and Emily Blackburne, the father of the said W. J. Hope Edwardes (hereinafter called the settlor) granted to trustees and their heirs certain farms and lands in the county of Salop, to hold the same to the use, intent, and purpose that the said W. J. Hope Edwardes should have a rent-charge of £500 during his life, and from and after his decease that the said Emily Blackburne in case she should become his widow and her assigns might receive and take during her life the like annual sum or yearly rent-charge of £500 to be charged upon, issuing, and payable out of the said hereditaments thereby assured. And by the said settlement the usual powers of distress and entry and perception of rents and profits for securing payment of the said rent-charges and arrears thereof were limited to the said W. J. Hope Edwardes and E. Blackburne and their assigns respectively. And subject to and charged with the said rent-charges and the said powers and remedies for enforcing payment thereof, the said hereditaments were limited to the use of the said trustees, their executors, &c., for the term of ninety-nine years from the said marriage, and from and after the expiration of the said term, and in the meantime subject thereto and to the trusts thereof, to the use of the settlor, his heirs and assigns. And the said term was limited to the said trustees upon the usual trusts that if either of the said rent-charges should be in arrear for sixty days they should out of the rents and profits, or by mortgage or demise of the said hereditaments for all or part of the said term, or by bringing actions against the tenants for recovery of rents and profits, or by other reasonable ways or means, raise and pay the said rent-charges and all arrears thereof, and all costs, charges, and expenses sustained by reason of the non-payment thereof.

The marriage took place in July, 1867, and the said W. J. Hope Edwardes, the husband, died in the following September, leaving the said E. Blackburne, then E. Hope Edwardes, his widow. She by indenture dated the 1st of August, 1873, assigned the said rent-charge given to her by the settlement of the 22nd of July, 1867, to the plaintiff and another assignee, who has since died. The said rent-charge was paid in full until 1895, when it fell into arrear, and it appeared that the amount of arrears at the present time exceeded £1,200. It also appeared that the net rents available for payment of the rent-charge were insufficient to pay the same owing to the decrease in the rentals caused by agricultural depression, and that there was no prospect of any improvement.

This was an action for payment of the arrears of the rent-charge, and to have the amount thereof raised by sale of the land charged, and the action was brought against the present trustees of the will of the settlor, who had long been dead, and against the tenant for life and remainder men, devisees of the land, which was limited in strict settlement by the said will.

H. Terrell, Q.C., and Rutherford, for the plaintiff.—The plaintiff has a legal rent-charge, and is therefore entitled to a sale of the property charged, to realize it.

Astbury, Q.C., and Brinton, for the defendants.—Where a term is created for security the remedy is against the term, and not against the inheritance: Hall v. Hurt, 2 Joh. & Hem. 76, 10 W. R. Ch. Dig. 5. In Taylor v. Taylor, 22 W. R. 349, L. R. 17 Eq. 324, Hall, V.C., refused to apply Cupit v. Jackson, 13 Price 721, where a sale had been ordered, because the land was in settlement. The court has a discretion in the matter, whether the corpus is or is not charged: Hambro v. Hambro, 43 W. R. 92, [1894] 2 Ch. 564, and In re Tucker, Tucker v. Tucker, 41 W. R. 505, [1893] 2 Ch. 323.

They also cited Davidson's Conveyancing, vol. 3, pt. 1 (3rd ed.), pp. 315*n*, 447; Champernoon v. Gubbs, 2 Vern. 382; and Elphinstone on Interpretation, r. 19, p. 89. [BUCKLEY, J., referred to Scottish Widows v. Craig, 30 W. R. 463, 20 Ch. D. 208.]

Edward Ford, for the trustee of the term.

H. Terrell, in reply.—Taylor v. Taylor was decided upon the principle of Graves v. Hicks, 11 Sim. 536, but see Horton v. Hall, 22 W. R. 391, L. R. 17 Eq. 437, where a sale was ordered by Hall, V.C.

He also cited Hooper v. Cooke, 20 Beav. 639, 4 W. R. Ch. Dig. 90. [Astbury.—That case was appealed (Davidson's Conveyancing, vol. 3, pt. 1 (3rd ed.), p. 315*n*), and no determination was come to on appeal.]

BUCKLEY, J.—The decision of Wood, V.C., in Hall v. Hurt supplies a principle which is a guide to me that I ought to follow in this case. It is admitted by both sides that it would not be convenient to raise the arrears or to keep down future payments of the annuity by dealing with the term. The rent-charge is clearly a charge upon the lands themselves. The limitations are legal limitations of a rent-charge and rights to distrain and enter and receive and take the rents and profits, and discharge arrears thereout, and of a term. The question is a pure question of the construction to be placed upon the deed containing these limitations. Is the charge on the inheritance intended to be enforced by sale of the inheritance? There are numerous reported cases, and one of the earliest is Cupit v. Jackson. The result of the cases is that the plaintiff is primâ facie entitled to a sale of the inheritance, but the court has a discretion in the matter. The court would refuse to order a sale in certain cases. By way of illustration I may refer to Graves v. Hicks, where in the opinion of the court it was advisable to wait for a time, and Tucker v. Tucker, where North, J., instanced the case of the amount of arrears being small. That shows the sort of discretion which the court exercises where there is no term. But the question is, what is the effect of the term that is limited by the deed creating this rent-charge? In Hall v. Hurt a term was vested in trustees to raise a sum of £5,000 charged on an estate, and Wood, V.C., was of opinion that the term was created for the purpose of avoiding a sale of the fee. That was a decision on the construction of a will, but it is a guide to me in the present case, and shows that I ought to see whether the existence of the term is consistent with the right to have a sale of the inheritance. There is express power to raise the arrears out of the term, and I hold, that is not consistent with a right to have them raised out of the inheritance. I say, like Wood, V.C., in Hall v. Hurt, looking at the whole scope and contents of this deed, my impression is that the freehold was not intended to be sold, but the term was created for that purpose, with the view of avoiding a sale of the fee. I therefore refuse to make an order for sale.

(a.) Reported by J. F. WALEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, Chester & Co., for Peele & Peele, Shrewsbury; Field, Roscoe, & Co., for Greenall & Buckton, Warrington; Rowcliffe, Rawle, & Co., for P. & J. Watson, Bury.

---

C. C. R.
(Mathew, Lawrance, Wright, Kennedy, and Darling, JJ.) July 28.

THE QUEEN v. STREETER. (a.)

Criminal law—Receiving stolen goods—Property stolen by wife from husband—Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 91—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), ss. 12, 16.

A woman and her paramour were indicted under the Larceny Act, 1861, for stealing certain goods, and also for receiving the same knowing them to have been stolen. The goods were the property of the woman's husband. The woman was found guilty of stealing the goods, and the man of receiving them.

Held, that, as the stealing by a woman of her husband's goods did not amount to a felony either at common law or by virtue of the Larceny Act, 1861, but was only made criminal by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the man could not properly be convicted under section 91 of the Larceny Act, 1861, of the offence of receiving.

Reg. v. Smith, 18 W. R. 932, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 266, followed.

Case stated by the chairman of the West Sussex Quarter Sessions.

Ellen Tickner and William Streeter were tried for larceny in a dwelling-house of some household goods, a sewing-machine, and £27 in money. A count for receiving, in the usual form, was added to the indictment.

It appeared from the evidence that the defendant Ellen Tickner was living with her husband, James Tickner, to whom she had been married twenty-six or twenty-seven years, at Stammerham, near Horsham. The defendant William Streeter was lodging with them.

On the 21st of April, 1900, James Tickner turned Streeter out of the house.

On the 11th of May, Ellen Tickner packed, and sent by the carrier to Horsham, two boxes labelled "Streeter, passenger to Brighton," which the carrier handed to Streeter at Horsham Station.

Ellen Tickner shortly afterwards left her husband's house while he was at work, and joined Streeter at Southwater Station on the line to Brighton. They were subsequently found living together as man and wife at Farnham.

James Tickner, after his wife's disappearance, missed the money and goods referred to in the indictment, and gave information to the police which led to the arrest of the prisoners.

At the time of the arrest the missing goods were found in the boxes which Ellen Tickner had sent to Streeter, and £27 in money was found in Streeter's box, the key of which was found in Ellen Tickner's purse.

There was no evidence of any of the goods being missed before Ellen Tickner's departure.

At the close of the case for the prosecution, counsel for Streeter submitted that, as regarded him, there was no case, inasmuch as, on the first count, there was no evidence against him; and upon the second count, even if it were proved that Ellen Tickner had committed a felony against her husband, under the provisions of section 12 and section 16 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), by taking away his goods, yet Streeter could not be indicted for receiving the goods knowing them to be stolen, as that statute had not made such receiving a felony; that under section 91 of the Larceny Act, 1861, only persons who received goods the stealing of which amounted to a felony, either at common law or under the provisions of that Act, could be indicted as receivers, and that, as the stealing by a wife of goods belonging to her husband was not a larceny at common law or under the Larceny Act, no receiver of such goods could be indicted for a felony, and the attention of the chairman was called to the case of Reg. v. Smith, 18 W. R. 932, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 266.

The chairman left the case to the jury, but reserved the point.

After hearing evidence on behalf of the prisoners, the jury found the prisoner Ellen Tickner guilty upon the first count, and the prisoner William Streeter not guilty on the first count, and guilty on the second count.

The question for the decision of the court was, whether, upon the facts set out above, Streeter could be indicted for receiving goods stolen by Ellen Tickner from her husband.

Raven, for the prisoner Streeter.—The conviction is bad. Streeter was indicted under section 91 of the Larceny Act, 1861, and no conviction can be obtained under that section unless the stealing of the property received amounts to a felony either at common law or by virtue of that Act. Stealing by a wife from a husband is not such a felony (Reg. v. Kenny, 25 W. R. 679, 2 Q. B. D. 307); it is made an offence by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, ss. 12, 16. A similar question arose in Reg. v. Smith as to the receiving of partnership property stolen by a partner, the stealing of which was made criminal by the Larceny Act, 1868, and was decided in favour of the prisoner. [He was stopped.]

Graham-Campbell, for the prosecution.—Reg. v. Smith was adversely commented on in Stephen's Digest of the Criminal Laws, art. 383 (5th ed.), p. 320 note, and it ought not to be extended to a case arising under a different statute.

He also referred to Reg. v. Caspar, 2 Moo. C. C. 101.

MATHEW, J.—The conviction in this case must be quashed. The point is really concluded by the decision in Reg. v. Smith. Formerly there were two cases in which an indictment for larceny could not be preferred. The first case was that of a wife taking the goods of her husband, and the second was that of a partner taking the goods of the partnership. Both these cases have been brought within the criminal law by Act of Parliament, the case of a partner by the Larceny Act, 1868, and that of a wife by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, ss. 12, 16.

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The question which we have to determine is, whether the present case comes within the terms of the Larceny Act, 1861, s. 91, so as to render the male prisoner liable to be convicted of receiving. The material words of that section are as follows: "Whosoever shall receive any chattel, money, valuable security, or other property whatsoever, the stealing, taking, extorting, obtaining, embezzling, or otherwise disposing whereof shall amount to a felony, either at common law or by virtue of this Act, knowing the same to have been feloniously stolen . . . shall be guilty of felony." Here the act of the woman in taking her husband's property, which would not have been a felony either at common law or by virtue of the Larceny Act, 1861, has been made a criminal offence by another Act, the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, ss. 12 and 16, but this does not bring it within the words, "either at common law or by virtue of this Act"—that is, the Larceny Act, 1861. Reg. v. Smith was a case in which partnership property had been stolen by a partner and received by the prisoner, the stealing being a criminal offence by virtue of the Larceny Act, 1868, and it was held that the prisoner could not be convicted of receiving under the Larceny Act, 1861, s. 91. Our decision must be to the same effect—that is, that the prisoner cannot be convicted under the Larceny Act, 1861, of receiving property stolen by a wife from her husband.

LAWRANCE, J., concurred.

WRIGHT, J.—I agree that this prisoner could not properly be convicted under the Larceny Act, 1891, but in future cases it seems that there might be an indictment for receiving at common law.

KENNEDY and DARLING, JJ., concurred.

Conviction quashed.

Solicitors for prisoner, Biggs, Roche, Sawyer, & Co., for Buckwell & Berkeley, Brighton.

Solicitors for prosecution, Preston, Stow, & Preston, for Rawlison & Butler, Horsham.

---

C. C. R.
(Mathew, Lawrance, Wright, Kennedy, and Darling, JJ.) July 28.

THE QUEEN v. BUTTON. (a.)

Criminal law—False pretences—Remoteness—Competitor in handicap race—False statements as to previous performances as a runner—Attempt to obtain prize.

The defendant was convicted of attempting to obtain prizes for foot-races by false pretences. At the trial it was proved that entries for two races at an athletic meeting were made in the name of one Sims, and that such entries contained correct statements as to the recent performances of Sims as a runner, including a statement that he had never won a race. The entries were not written either by Sims or by the defendant. At the meeting the defendant ran in the races in the name of Sims. By reason of the statements in the entries he obtained long starts, and won both races. He was in fact a superior runner and a previous winner. After the races he falsely stated, in reply to questions put to him by the handicapper, that he really was Sims, and that the statements in the entries were true statements as to his performances. He did not apply to have the prizes handed over to him.

Held, that there was evidence for the jury of an attempt to obtain the prizes by false pretences, and that the attempt was not too remote from the pretence; and that the defendant was properly convicted.

Reg. v. Larner, 14 Cox C. C. 497, disapproved.

Case stated by the Recorder of Lincoln.

The prisoner was charged with attempting to obtain goods by false pretences.

On the 26th of August, 1899, there were athletic sports at Lincoln, for which prizes were given. Among the contests were a 120 yards race and a 440 yards race, in respect of each of which a prize was given of the value of ten guineas.

Among the names sent in for these two contests was the name of "Sims, C., Thames Ironworks A.C.," and two written forms of entry were sent in to the secretary of the sports, containing (as appeared to be usual) a statement as to the last four races in which Sims had run, together with a statement that he had never won a race. These forms were not sent by Sims, nor were they in his handwriting, and he knew nothing of them. They were, however, signed in his proper name, and with his true address, and contained a correct amount of his last four performances. The forms were proved to be not written by the prisoner.

The performances of Sims were very moderate, and, as a fact, he was only a moderate runner, and as a result the supposed Sims was given by the handicapper of the sports a start of 11 yards in the 120 yards race and a start of 33 yards in the 440 yards race.

Sims was ill at Erith when the races were run, and was not at Lincoln at all, and he was personated by the defendant, who was a fine performer and won both contests very easily.

The suspicion of the handicapper being aroused, he asked the defendant, after the 120 yards race, whether he was really Sims, whether the performance given in the entry form was really his, and whether he had never won a race. To these questions the defendant answered that he was Sims, that the performances were his own, and that he had never won a race. All these statements were untrue, and in particular he had won a race at Erith in his own name. The handicapper was called as a witness, and swore that he would not have given the defendant such favourable starts if he had known his true name and performances.

These facts were all admitted, and no evidence was called to contradict them. It was, however, suggested for the defence that the defendant might have done it for "a lark," or might have possibly done it in order to keep himself in good training. In summing up the case to the jury the recorder told them that if the defendant did it for "a lark," without any criminal intent, and without intending to get the prizes, they ought to find him not guilty; but that if he made the false representations wilfully, intentionally, and fraudulently, with intent to obtain the prizes, they ought to find him guilty of attempting to obtain them by false pretences.

The jury found a verdict of guilty.

It was contended for the defendant, on the authority of Reg. v. Larner, 14 Cox C. C. 497, that the obtaining the prizes was too remote from the false representation and that he ought to be acquitted.

The recorder overruled the objection, but agreed to state this case.

A case decided by Lindley, J., at Nottingham Assizes appeared to be contrary to Reg. v. Larner.

The questions of law for the opinion of the court were:

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(1) Whether the recorder had summed up the case correctly to the jury.

(2) Whether the attempt to obtain the prizes was too remote from the pretence.

J. P. Hughes, for the defendant.—The conviction is bad. There was no completed offence; even if the defendant represented Sims's performance as his own for the purpose of obtaining longer starts there is nothing to show that he did this with any fraudulent intention. He never applied for the prizes, and until he did that, he had a locus pœnitentiæ even if he ever intended to obtain them (which was not proved). [MATHEW, J.—These are questions of fact, and are disposed of by the verdict.] The intention to obtain the prizes is too remote from the false pretence. What the defendant really obtained was the good starts. His winning the races was due to his good running. Reg. v. Larner (in which the Common Serjeant directed the jury after consultation with Stephen, J.) is a strong authority against the conviction.

He also cited Reg. v. Eagleton, 4 W. R. 17, 6 Cox. C. C. 559; Reg. v. Gardner, 4 W. R. 526, 7 Cox. C. C. 136.

Montague Shearman and T. Hollis Walker, for the prosecution, was not called upon to argue.

MATHEW, J.—This conviction must be upheld. The case of Reg. v. Larner, 14 Cox. C. C. 497, is relied upon as an authority for the defendant. In that case the question was one of fact, and the Common Serjeant appears to have directed the jury according to his impression of the view of the law taken by Stephen, J., whom it appears from the report he had consulted; but that case appears to have been differed from by Lindley, J., in a case tried before him at the Nottingham Assizes, and I am clearly of opinion that Lindley, J., was right. The questions in the present case were pure questions of fact—namely, whether the intention of the defendant, when he entered for the races, was to obtain the prizes, and whether he made the false representations with that intention. It appears that he represented himself to be a man who had never won a race, and he was handicapped on the faith of that statement, as is shown by the evidence given by the handicapper; but it also appears that his statement was false, for he had won races. Then it was suggested that he competed in the name of Sims, as it is put in the case, "for a lark"; but that question was for the jury, and they have negatived the suggestion. It was also suggested that his coming in first in the races was owing to his own good running; but it was also owing, in part at least, to the false pretences, by means of which he obtained a longer start than he would have had if his true name and performances had been known. It is also said that some other act had to be done in order to make the offence complete, and that he could not rightly be convicted because he had not applied for the prizes, and that the criminal intention was exhausted. The argument is exceedingly subtle, but unsound. In fact, he was found out before he had the opportunity of applying for the prizes, as no doubt he otherwise would have done. The pretences which the prisoner made were not too remote, and the conviction was good.

LAWRANCE, J., concurred.

WRIGHT, J.—I am of the same opinion. If nothing more had been shown than that the defendant had entered for the races in a false name, possibly the case might have been different, but here there was proof of distinct false pretences as to matters of fact.

KENNEDY and DARLING, JJ., concurred.

Conviction affirmed.

Solicitors for defendant, Tolhurst, Lovell, & Clinch, Gravesend.

Solicitor for prosecution, A. L. Rayner.

[THE END.]

THE

WEEKLY REPORTER DIGEST

OF ALL THE

CASES DECIDED IN THE SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE; WITH

APPEALS TO THE HOUSE OF LORDS AND PRIVY COUNCIL;

FROM THE 24TH OF OCTOBER, 1899, TO THE 12TH OF AUGUST, 1900.

VOL. XLVIII.

LONDON: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

1900.

A DIGEST

OF ALL THE

CASES DECIDED IN ENGLAND,

FROM

THE 24TH OF OCTOBER, 1899, TO THE 12TH OF AUGUST, 1900,

AS REPORTED IN

VOL. XLVIII. OF THE WEEKLY REPORTER, 1899-1900;

AND IN

CERTAIN OTHER LEGAL REPORTS DURING THE SAME PERIOD,

TOGETHER ALSO WITH CERTAIN OTHER CASES REPORTED THEREIN DURING THE SAME PERIOD, BUT DECIDED PREVIOUSLY THERETO.

---

 In the following Digest the letters H.L. after a case indicate the House of Lords; P.C., the Privy Council; C.A., the Court of Appeal; LUN., Lunacy; CH.D., the Chancery Division; Q.B.D., the Queen's Bench Division; BKCY., the Queen's Bench Division sitting in Bankruptcy; P.D. & AD.D., the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division; C.C.R., the Court for Crown Cases Reserved.

 This Digest will contain at the end thereof a Tabular Index of the Names of all Cases Reported up to the end of August, 1899, as well in this Volume (48) of the WEEKLY REPORTER as in certain other Contemporaneous Reports. In this Digest, figures following the name of a case denote the page in the WEEKLY REPORTER at which it will be found. Where the name of a case has no figures attached, the case is not reported in this Volume of the WEEKLY REPORTER; but the references to the case in other Reports are given in this Digest.

---

ADMINISTRATION:—

1. Estate duty—Appointed fund—Residuary estate—"Testamentary expenses"—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 9 (1).—A fund appointed by will under a power of appointment does not pass to the executors as such within the meaning of the Finance Act, 1894, and is therefore chargeable with estate duty.

Estate duty is included in "testamentary expenses."—TREASURE, RE, WILD v. STANHAM, Ch D. Kekewich, J., 696.

2. Estate duty—Settlement estate duty—Will—Incidence of duty—Settled legacy—General estate—Construction—Finance Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28), s. 19.—A testatrix by her will directed that "my debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, including all duties payable by law out of my estate," and including the duties payable on certain annuities and legacies which she had bequeathed duty free, should be paid out of a fund which constituted her residuary general estate.

Held, that the words "all duties payable by law out of my estate" meant "duties payable by law out of my residuary general estate," and did not include settlement estate duty on a settled legacy, and were not "an express provision to the contrary" within the meaning of section 19 of the Finance Act, 1896.—LEWIS, RE, LEWIS v. SMITH, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 426; [1900] 2 Ch. 176; 69 L. J. Ch. 406; 82 L. T. 291.

3. Insufficient estate—Abatement of annuities—Married woman—Restraint on anticipation—Capital value of annuity—Legal personal representative.—Where a married woman was entitled restrained from anticipation, to an annuity, from an insufficient estate, and agreed to an abatement thereof, the capital value of the annuity abated by an order of the court being laid out in the purchase of an annuity; and where she died before the purchase of the annuity,

Held, that the capital of the abated annuity should be paid to her legal personal representative, and formed part of her estate.—ROSS, RE, ASHTON v. ROSS, Ch.D. North, J., 264; [1900] 1 Ch. 162; 69 L. J. Ch. 192; 81 L. T. 578.

4. Practice — Parties — Devisees — Heir-at-law — Costs—Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65). —A summons was taken out by the executors of a testator, who died after the Land Transfer Act, 1897, came into operation, for the determination of the question whether, under the terms of the will, a certain piece of freehold land was included in a specific devise, or went to the heir-at-law. The will contained no general devise of real estate.

The devisees and the heir-at-law were made respondents.

Held, that the land went to the heir-at-law; the devisees had made their claim and failed, and were in the same position as if they had brought an action under the old law. The costs of the heir-at-law, therefore, would be taxed as between party and party, and paid by the devisees.—PEEL, RE, WOODCOCK v. HOLROYD, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 81 L. T. 504.

5. Separate account fund in court—Assignment of —Notice—Equity against assignee.—Where a fund in court in an administration suit is carried to a separate account it is released from the general questions in the cause, and marked as being subject only to the questions arising on the particular matter specified in the heading of the account, and the persons specified in the heading are to be regarded as the owners of the fund.

Where a fund standing to a separate account is specifically assigned for value by the person entitled thereto according to the heading of the account,

Held, that the assignor's liability towards other parties to the suit for breach of trust in respect of the estate generally cannot be enforced against the separate account fund in the hands of its assignee for value without notice. Notice that the assignor was a trustee and defendant in a suit for an account in which his fund might be made answerable in case of default, is not sufficient to affect the assignee.—EDGAR v. PLOMLEY, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 431; 82 L. T. 573.

6. Testamentary expenses—Administration expenses —Costs of probate action—Estate duty.—The expression "testamentary expenses" includes estate duty.

A testator, after giving the income of his residue to his wife for life, directed his executors, after his widow's death, out of the residue to pay "my widow's funeral and testamentary expenses and debts." The testator's wife survived him, and died leaving what purported to be a will. B., one of the two next-of-kin of the widow, brought an action in the Probate Division for a grant of letters of administration of the widow's estate to him. The judge pronounced against the will, but made no order as to costs. Letters of administration were subsequently granted to Y., the other next-of-kin of the widow, with the assent of B. The widow's estate consisted entirely of personalty. Upon summons to determine what costs and expenses ought to be allowed out of the testator's estate as testamentary expenses of the widow,

Held, that costs and expenses properly incurred in the administration of the estate of the intestate widow were within the meaning of the term "testamentary expenses," and that there must be allowed as such testamentary expenses the costs of B. of the probate action and also the estate duty payable on the death of the widow.—CLEMOW, RE, YEO v. CLEMOW, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 541; [1900] 2 Ch. 182; 69 L. J. Ch. 522; 82 L. T. 550.

7. Testamentary expenses—Costs of ascertaining identity of legatees—Costs out of residue—Ord. 65, r. 14*b*.—The costs of ascertaining the identity of the legatees of pecuniary bequests are "testamentary expenses," and where there is a general direction to pay funeral and testamentary expenses out of the residuary estate they are payable thereout, and not out of the pecuniary legacies.

In re Groom, [1897] 2 Ch. 407, discussed.—BAUMGARTEN, RE, BEVAN v. ROSENBAUM, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; 82 L. T. 711.

8. Trustee carrying on testator's business—Tort by trustee—Damages—Indemnity—Claim to indemnity out of estate by person recovering damages against the trustee.—Where a trustee is entitled to indemnity from his testator's estate in respect of damages for a tort committed by him in carrying on testator's business, the person entitled to such damages from the trustee may prove for them against the testator's estate direct. — RAYBOULD, RE, RAYBOULD v. TURNER, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 301; [1900] 1 Ch. 199; 69 L. J. Ch. 249; 82 L. T. 46.

See also Bankruptcy, 18; Limitation Statutes, 5; Lunacy, 2; Partition, 1; Probate, 8.

ADMIRALTY:—

1. Practice—Damages—Unpaid balance of—Action in rem—Arrest—Bail—Release—Judgment—Practice —Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (24 Vict. c. 10), s. 15— Writ of fieri facias.—A collision occurred in the River Thames between a British and a foreign vessel. The owners of the British vessel commenced an action in rem and arrested the foreign vessel, the owners of which, domiciled abroad, appeared, and, having put in bail for the full value of the vessel and her freight, she was released. The foreign vessel was subsequently found alone to blame, and the decree in the usual form, in the case of owners who have appeared, condemned the defendants and their bail in damages and costs. The damages proved to be in excess of the amount of the bail, and the plaintiffs, in respect of this balance, sued out a writ of fieri facias under which the foreign vessel was seized. On application to the court the sheriff was ordered to withdraw.

Held, that the owners of the foreign vessel had, by appearing, rendered themselves personally liable, and, therefore, payment of the balance could be enforced under section 15 of 24 Vict. c. 10 by a writ of fieri facias against any of their goods and chattels, including the released vessel, within the jurisdiction.

The Dictator, [1892] P. 304, followed.—"GEMMA," THE, C.A.; [1899] P. 285; 81 L. T. 379.

2. Practice—Ship—Action of restraint—Bail bond for safe return of vessel—Forfeiture—Discretion of court.—A bail bond given in an action of restraint was conditioned for the safe return of the vessel to the port of Liverpool. On the termination of the voyage the vessel did not return to Liverpool, but put into the port of Dundee, outside the jurisdiction of the English Admiralty Court, from whence she was sent under a charter-party on a fresh voyage.

On the application of the plaintiff, Barnes, J., made an order, declaring the bond to be forfeited.

Held, that the order was right.—"CAWDOR" THE, C.A. 293; [1900] P. 47; 69 L. J. P. 23; 81 L. T. 705.

3. Practice — Ship — Caveat warrant — Arrest — Personal undertaking to put in bail—Release—Condemnation in damages and costs occasioned by arrest—Rules of the Supreme Court, ord. 29, r. 18.—The plaintiffs in an action in rem against a foreign vessel caused the vessel to be arrested by the marshal, notwithstanding that a caveat warrant had been taken out and an undertaking given by the defendants' solicitors to put in bail in the suit or pay money into court within three days of its institution. At the time of the arrest the vessel was not under the arrest of the court in any other action, and was about to leave the port where she was then lying.

The defendants, on the day after the arrest, applied to the court for the vessel to be released and that the plaintiffs should be condemned in damages and costs. At the hearing of the application the plaintiffs never objected in any way that the personal security of the defendants' solicitors was inadequate.

Held, that the vessel must be released and the plaintiffs condemned in the damages and costs occasioned by the arrest.—"CRIMDON," THE, P.D. & Ad.D. 623; [1900] P. 171; 69 L. J. P. 103; 82 L. T. 660.

4. Ship—Limitation of liability—Foreign ship—Foreign certificate of registry—Deduction of crew space—Sections 79, 84, 210, 503, and 6th schedule of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.—The owners of a Danish ship are not entitled in limiting their liability to deduct crew space from the gross tonnage, although the tonnage regulations of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, have been adopted by Denmark, and according to the Danish certificate of registry the crew space is stated therein and it is proved that the dimensions of crew space have been cut up over the hatchway. To entitle a ship to such deduction it is necessary to prove that the certificate mentioned in the third paragraph of the 6th schedule of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, has been given by a surveyor of ships to the collector of customs.—"CATHAY," THE (No. 2), P.D. & Ad.D.; 69 L. J. P. 89; 82 L. T. 823.

5. Ship—Limitation of liability—Ship not exceeding fifteen tons burden—Exemption from registry—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 3, sub-section 1.—The meaning of the words "not exceeding fifteen tons burden" in section 3, subsection 1, of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, is not exceeding a net register tonnage of fifteen tons.

Judgment of Barnes, J. (47 W. R. 288), affirmed. —"BRUNEL," THE, C.A., 243; [1900] P. 24; 69 L. J. P. 8; 81 L. T. 500.

6. Ship—Limitation of liability—Sum paid into Admiralty Division—Actions under Lord Campbell's Act in the Queen's Bench Division—Transfer of actions.—The owners of a ship, on which great loss of life had occurred in consequence of the negligence of their servants, obtained in the Admiralty Division an order limiting their liability to £15,400, and they paid that sum into the Admiralty Division. Actions under Lord Campbell's Act having been commenced against the owners in the Queen's Bench Division, Held, that there was no reason for transferring such actions to the Admiralty Division.—ROCHE v. LONDON AND SOUTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO., C.A., 1; [1899] 2 Q. B. 502; 81 L. T. 315.

7. Ship—Limitation suit—Free pass by railway and steamer — Conditions of non-liability — Claim against fund—Loss of life—Loss of luggage—Lord Campbell's Act (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93) — Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 503.—A free pass, obtained by an official of another railway company for himself and wife, from the London and South-Western Railway Co., for the journey from London to Jersey, referred, on the face of it, to the following condition printed on the back: "That it shall be taken as evidence of an agreement that the company are relieved from all responsibility for any injury, delay, loss, or damage, however caused, that may be sustained by the person or persons using this pass." Through the negligence of the servants of the railway company, and during the transit from Southampton to the Channel Islands, the steamer stranded, and the official was drowned. His own, and his wife's, luggage were also lost.

The widow on behalf of herself and infant children claimed, against the fund paid by the railway company into court in a limitation suit, for the loss of her husband and father of the children. The registrar disallowed the claim.

Held, that, in respect of the loss of life, as the widow and children could only claim under Lord Campbell's Act, where, if death had not ensued, the party injured would have been entitled to maintain an action for damages, the conditions on which the free pass was granted, and which the deceased must, from his official position, be taken to have known, included the sea passage as well as the land transit, and barred the claim:

Held, also, that in respect of the claim by the widow, as administratrix of her husband, for the loss of his personal effects, and in her own right, for the loss of her luggage, the condition attaching to the pass equally precluded any claim, for the London and South-Western Railway special Act of 1848—under sections 47, 48, 49 of which (made perpetual by an Act of 1860) the company is empowered to maintain steamers—is not controlled by section 31 of the subsequent Railway Clauses Act, 1863, extending to steamers the provisions of section 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854.

The words "or other things whatsoever on board the ship" in section 503, sub-section 1 (b), of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, include passengers' luggage.—"STELLA," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1900] P. 161; 69 L. J. P. 70; 82 L. T. 390.

ADULTERATION:—

1. Food and drugs—"Chewing chum"—Paraffin wax—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), ss. 3, 6.—On the hearing of two informations under sections 3 and 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, it was proved or admitted before the justices that the appellant was a shopkeeper, carrying on business at 5, P.-road, T., where he retailed sweets and groceries.

On the 13th of May, 1899, the respondent visited the appellant's shop, and purchased some "chewing chum." Each of the packets of "chewing chum" was labelled "B. & Co.'s chewing. This must not be eaten. For chewing only." The respondent, after looking at the packets and reading the labels, asked the price, and bought three pennyworth. It was proved, or admitted, that the "chewing chum" was sold as an article to be chewed and not as an article to be eaten. It could not be dissolved by the saliva of the mouth, nor could it be masticated by the teeth. It was, however, capable of being swallowed whole, although it was not intended to be swallowed. Paraffin wax was one of the ingredients, and each packet contained 8·3 per cent. thereof. The wax was an essential ingredient. Paraffin wax if received into the stomach was injurious to health, and the quantity of wax in the packets was sufficient to make the article as a sweet injurious to health if passed into the stomach. If swallowed, therefore, it was injurious to health, but if it was used in the manner in which it was intended to be used—namely, for chewing—it was not in any way injurious to health. The justices convicted the appellant.

Held, that on the facts the justices were wrong. —BENNETT v. TYLER, Q.B.D.; 81 L. T. 787.

2. Food and drugs—Compounded drug—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), ss. 6, 7.—A sale to the prejudice of the purchaser of a compounded drug, which is not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded, is an offence under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, and proceedings for the recovery of a penalty may be taken under that section.—BEARDSLEY v. WALTON & Co., Q.B.D.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 1; 69 L. J. Q. B. 344; 82 L. T. 119.

3. Food and drugs — Margarine — Evidence — Analyst's certificate—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), ss. 6, 14, 21, 25—Margarine Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 29), ss. 6, 7, 12.—L., a retail grocer, sold to the appellant from a tub marked "pure butter," a certain quantity of margarine without delivering it in a package marked with the word "margarine" as required by section 6 of the Margarine Act, 1887. The sample sold was, on analysis, found to contain 10 per cent. of foreign fat not butter fat. L. having satisfied the justices that he had been sold the margarine by the respondents with a warranty that it was pure butter, the appellant took out a summons against the respondents for selling margarine to L. without the word "margarine" being marked on the package containing the article. At the hearing, the analyst's certificate obtained in the former proceedings against L. was tendered in evidence against the respondents.

Held, that the certificate was not evidence against the respondents and should be rejected.—TYLER v. KINGHAM, Q.B.D.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 413; 69 L. J. Q. B. 630.

4 Food and drugs—Milk—Ten per cent. added water—Milk exceptionally good—Trifling offence.—The respondent was charged with selling milk contrary to section 6 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1875.

At the hearing of the information the certificate of the analyst was produced and proved on behalf of the appellant, and showed as follows: "I, the undersigned public analyst for the county of Essex, do hereby certify that I received on the 5th of June, 1899, a sample of milk. . . . I am of opinion that the same contained the parts as under: Fat, 3·55 parts; non-fatty solids, 7·46 parts; water, 88·99 parts; total, 100·00. I am therefore of opinion that this milk contains 10 per cent. of added water."

The justices received the certificate of the analyst as sufficient evidence of the facts as herein stated, but it appeared to them that the milk was exceptionally good, the butter fat being above normal, and, having regard to all the circumstances, they thought that, though the charge was proved, the offence was of so trifling a nature that it was inexpedient to inflict any punishment, and they therefore dismissed the information.

Held, remitting the case to the justices, that if the milk was exceptionally good after the adulteration they need not convict, but if it was only exceptionally good before, the offence was one for which they should convict.—BANKS v. WOOLER, Q.B.D.; 81 L. T. 785.

5. Food and drugs—Procedure—Offence under Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1879—Repeal of procedure section—Power of amendment—Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 38 (2)—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 51), s. 19.—Where an Act creating an offence is kept in force, and the section providing procedure is only repealed, and other procedure is provided by the repealing Act, although an offence is committed while the repealed section is in force, if proceedings are not taken until after the repeal takes effect, they are governed by the requirements of the repealing Act.

In such a case the old form of procedure is not kept alive by section 38 (2) of the Interpretation Act, 1889, as to offences committed under the earlier Act.

The non-fulfilment of the requirements of section 19 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, is not a matter capable of amendment under Jervis' Act. —BATT v. MATTINSON, Q.B.D.; 82 L. T. 800.

6. Food and drugs—Sample—Mode of dividing sample—Analysis—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 14.—Where a purchase for the purpose of analysis is made of several articles of food or drugs at the same time, each article purchased must be divided into three parts and dealt with as provided in section 14 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875.

Where a purchase is made of six bottles of the same article of food or drug each bottle is for the purposes of the Act a separate article, and, therefore, it is not a sufficient compliance with the requirements of section 14 for the purchaser to divide them into three lots of two bottles each without opening any of the bottles, and to hand one lot to the analyst and one to the seller, and to retain one himself.—MASON v. COWDARY, Q.B.D.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 419; 69 L. J. Q. B. 667; 82 L. T. 802.

7. Food and drugs—Warranty—Contract to supply milk over an extended period—Necessity of written warranty with each particular delivery—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 25.—On information by a medical officer of health, H., a dairyman, and his servant were respectively charged with unlawfully causing to be sold and selling milk as "new milk" which was not new milk, contrary to section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875. At the hearing an agreement in writing was put in as an answer to the complaints under section 25 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, and section 20 (4) of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, and it was proved that the milk had been purchased as new milk, and that it was sold in the same state as when it was purchased; and that the defendants had no reason to believe at the time the milk was sold it was otherwise than pure milk. On analysis the article sold was found to contain 10 parts added water to 90 parts milk.

By the aforesaid agreement S. agreed to sell to H. "one thousand gallons of milk weekly in such quantities as arranged, the milk to be pure new milk, delivered at ." Then followed the names of the stations and prices per gallon, and the dates of delivery, ranging from the 21st of January, 1899, to the 20th of January, 1900. The question was whether in this agreement there was or was not a written warranty within the meaning of section 25 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875.

Held, that there was nothing to show that the agreement for the delivery of the milk covered the particular milk in question.

In order to support a defence under section 25, there must be something more than a general warranty; there must be something to show that the warranty covers the particular article, and that the article was purchased with a warranty.—ROBERTSON v. HARRIS, Q.B.D., 571; [1900] 2 Q. B. 117; 69 L. J. Q. B. 526; 82 L. T. 536.

ADVANCEMENT.—See Will, 2.

AGENT.—See Arbitration, 5; Bankruptcy, 8; Company, 32; Contract, 15; Frauds, Statutes of, 2; Principal and Agent, 1, 2; Stock Exchange, 1-3; Vendor and Purchaser, 3, 20.

ANNUITY:—

Deed—Construction—Charge on moiety of tenant in common—Right of distress—Rent of whole less than annuity—Power to distrain for full amount.—By his will, dated November, 1831, J. W. devised certain lands and premises to his daughters A. and H. as tenants in common in tail. A. married H. A. and H. the defendant.

In 1858 by a deed of settlement on her marriage H. disentailed her moieties, and settled them upon trust to pay the income to the defendant for his life or until he became bankrupt, and then for the issue of the marriage, and in default of issue (which was the case) in default of appointment for her next-of-kin. H. died in 1863, and the defendant became bankrupt in 1878, and thereupon A. became entitled to the whole.

In 1881 a deed was executed between A., her husband and the defendant, whereby A. with the assent of her husband, in contemplation of the defendant's second marriage, agreed to grant to the defendant an annuity of £300 charged upon the moieties, shares, and premises comprised in the marriage settlement of 1858 payable out of the rents and profits and income thereof respectively. And by that deed if the annuity should be in arrear the defendant could enter and distrain upon all or any of the said moieties, shares, or premises, and hold them and receive and take the rents and profits thereof until the arrears were satisfied.

The rental value of the undivided moiety has been of late years quite insufficient to satisfy the annuity, the profits of the whole hardly amounting to that sum.

Held, that, although there was power to distrain on the entirety of the lands the deed gave him no power to distrain for more than one-half of the rents and profits of the whole.—ASHWIN v. BULLOCK, Q.B.D.; 81 L. T. 48.

See also Administration, 3; Inland Revenue, 2.

APPOINTMENT.—See Power, 1-5; Will, 15, 16.

APPORTIONMENT.—See Landlord and Tenant, 25.

APPRENTICE.—See Master and Servant, 1.

ARBITRATION:—

1. Award—Enlargement of time—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), ss. 9, 24—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 180, sub-section 9.—The court has power, under section 9 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, to enlarge the time for making an award under the Public Health Act, 1875, at any time.

Section 9 of the Arbitration Act is not inconsistent with section 180, sub-section 9, of the Public Health Act.

Warburton v. Haslingden Local Board, 48 L. J. Q. B. 451, 27 W. R. Dig. 11, approved.

In re Mackenzie and the Ascot District Gas Co., 34 W. R. 487, 17 Q. B. D. 114, overruled.—KNOWLES v. BOLTON (MAYOR), C.A., 433; [1900] 2 Q. B. 253; 69 L. J. Q. B. 481; 82 L. T. 229.

2. Award—Validity—Evidence taken on matters not referred—Jurisdiction.—In an action to enforce an award, the defendants pleaded that the sum awarded included matters not referable to the arbitrators under the terms of the contract, and in respect of which, therefore, the arbitrators had no jurisdiction.

Held, that, as it appeared that the matters actually referred were those contained in the submission, the award was not bad, either (a) on the face of it, for not stating that matters not referred had been rejected; or (b) because the arbitrators had taken evidence on matters not referred, the defendants failing to prove that such matters were irrelevant to the inquiry, or were in fact included in the award, which was for a lump sum.

Held, further, that a counterclaim for liquidated damages by the defendants for delays not allowed in writing by their engineer-in-chief must be dismissed, for the refusal to allow delays was itself, by the terms of the contract, subject to arbitration, and capable of being dealt with by the arbitrators in their award without sending the matter back to the engineer.—FALKINGHAM v. VICTORIAN RAILWAYS COMMISSIONERS, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 452; 82 L. T. 506.

3. Costs of reference—Local government—Transference of district—Local Government Act, 1888, s. 62 (3)—Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 34.—By a Local Government Board's order part of the plaintiffs' district was transferred to the district of the defendant council, and the parties being unable to agree to an arbitrator to adjust a difference between them, one was appointed by the Local Government Board, under section 62 (2) of the Local Government Act, 1888. By his award he directed the defendants to pay the plaintiffs a certain sum, and directed the costs of the award—viz., £10 10s., should be paid by both parties in equal shares. No mention was made of the costs of the reference.

Subsequently he determined the costs of the reference to be £34 2s. 10d., and the costs of the taxation to be £4 4s., but did not direct that the defendants were to pay these sums.

In an action to recover these sums from the defendants,

Held, that the arbitrator having made no direction by whom these sums should be paid, they could not be recovered from the defendants.—SOUTH MIMMS RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL v. BARNET URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, Q.B.D.; 82 L. T. 421.

4. Lands Clauses Acts—Costs—Lands Clauses Act, 1845, ss. 23, 34, 38.—An offer made by the promoters of an undertaking to purchase under section 38 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, is not abrogated by a notice given by the claimant under section 23 of his desire to have the compensation settled by arbitration. But if the sum offered by the promoters was not less than that awarded by the arbitrators, the claimant must bear his own costs incident to the arbitration.—LASCELLES v. SWANSEA SCHOOL BOARD, Q.B.D.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 24.

5. Master and servant—Staying proceedings—Action for damages—Contract for service—Arbitration clause—Wrongful dismissal—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), s. 4.—A contract for the employment of the plaintiff by the defendants as their agent for the sale of maize and other products for seven years, at a remuneration by commission, provided that "any dispute arising in connection with" the contract should be referred to arbitration pursuant to the arbitration clause in the bye-laws of the Liverpool Corn Trade Association. The arbitration clause in those bye-laws provided that "all disputes arising out of transactions connected with the trade" should be referred to arbitrators, and that neither contracting party should bring any action against the other in respect of any dispute until the dispute had been settled by the arbitrators. Disputes as to the plaintiff's conduct as agent were subsequently referred arbitrators, who made an award adverse to the plaintiff, whereupon the defendants dismissed him. The plaintiff then brought an action against the defendants for damages for wrongful dismissal.

Held, reversing Phillimore, J., that the dispute in the action was within the arbitration clauses in the contract and bye-laws, and that the defendants, having always been "ready and willing" to refer the dispute to arbitration, were entitled to have the action stayed under section 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889.

Renshaw v. Queen Anne Mansions Co., [1897] 1 Q. B. 662, followed.

Davis v. Starr, 41 Ch. D. 242, explained.—PARRY v. LIVERPOOL MALT CO., C.A.; [1900] 1 Q. B. 339; 69 L. J. Q. B. 161; 81 L. T. 621.

6. Railway—Contract to construct—Clause referring all matters to consulting engineer—Point of law—Discretion of court to order arbitrator to state special case—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), s. 19.—By a contract for the construction of a railway for a lump sum it was provided that, "in the event of any dispute or question arising as to the intent and meaning of any part of the specification . . . or the interpretation, meaning, or effect of the clauses and conditions of the contract, or as to any other matter or thing whatever connected with or arising out of the contract or incidental thereto or not thereby provided for, such questions or disputes should be referred to the consulting engineer, whose decision should be conclusive and binding on both parties."

The cost of construction was greatly increased by the necessity of blasting rock instead of excavating earth, and the contractor claimed a large sum beyond the contract price, alleging that the contract provided for excavation of earth only.

This claim was referred to the consulting engineer as arbitrator.

Held, that, as a substantial and serious point of law arose upon the construction of the contract, the case was one in which the court would, in the exercise of its discretion, order the arbitrator to state a special case for the opinion of the court under section 19 of the Arbitration Act, 1889.—NUTTALL v. LYNTON AND BARNSTAPLE RAILWAY CO., C.A.; 82 L. T. 17.

7. Railway—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 35—Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 78.—Upon an application to compel a railway company to take up an award properly made under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act of 1845, the question as to whether compensation should be paid under that or other Acts cannot be entertained.

Objections of this character should be made in the action to enforce the award.

Reg. v. London and North-Western Railway Co., [1899] 1 Q. B. 921, affirmed.—LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO. v. WALKER, H.L., 384; [1900] A. C. 109; 69 L. J. Q. B. 367; 82 L. T. 93.

8. Staying proceedings—Interested arbitrator.—Under an agreement matters in dispute were to be referred to the sole arbitration of X., whose decision was to be final and binding. On the 13th of June a motion was made raising the question whether an action brought by one of the parties to the arbitration should be allowed to proceed, and the motion was dealt with on the assumption that the arbitration should go on. After one or two appointments before X., an application was made to remove X. from being arbitrator on the ground that he was a gentleman at the bar who had constantly been employed by solicitors whose conduct would have to be considered by the arbitrator. At the time of the motion of the 13th of June all the circumstances were known to the plaintiff. No charges whatever were made against X. When X. was originally named as arbitrator it was known to the plaintiff's solicitors that X. was habitually employed by the solicitors whose conduct might come before the arbitrator, but they were told, as was the fact, that he had not been consulted in this particular matter. For the plaintiff it was said that the arbitrator ought to be a perfectly unbiassed person. For the defendant it was said that this rule does not apply to the case of an arbitrator named in the contract.

Held, that the motion must be dismissed with costs.—BRIGHT v. RIVER PLATE CONSTRUCTION CO., Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; 82 L. T. 793.

9. Submission to three arbitrators—Power of court to stay action—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), s. 4.—Section 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, applies to all submissions, including those in which the reference is to three arbitrators.

In re Smith & Service and Nelson & Sons, 39 W. R. 117, 25 Q. B. D. 545, distinguished.—MANCHESTER SHIP CANAL CO. v. PEARSON, C.A., 689.

See also Local Government, 8; Practice, 15.

ASSIGNMENT.—See Administration, 5; Contract, 5; Practice, 8.

AUCTIONEER.—See Inland Revenue, 1.

BANKER:—

1. Bill of exchange—Cheque—Crossed cheque—Receipt of payment for customer—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 82.—A rate collector had been for many years in the habit of taking cheques which he received in payment of rates to a branch bank of the defendants and getting them to cash the cheques, but he did not keep any account with the defendants. Having fraudulently obtained a cheque from the plaintiffs by falsely pretending that a rate had been made, he took the cheque to the branch bank in accordance with his usual practice. The cheque was drawn on a London bank and was made payable to the collector or order, and was crossed generally and marked "Not negotiable." The defendants cashed the cheque and sent it up to their head office in London for collection, and it was duly presented and paid. In an action to recover the amount of the cheque,

Held, that the proper inference to be drawn from the facts was, first, that the collector was a customer of the defendants; and, secondly (Vaughan Williams, L.J., doubting as to this), that the defendants received payment of the cheque for him; and therefore the defendants, having acted in good faith and without negligence, were protected from liability by section 82 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882.

Judgment of Bigham, J. (ante, p. 144), affirmed. —GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO. v. LONDON AND COUNTY BANKING CO., C.A., 662; 69 L. J. Q. B. 741; 82 L. T. 746.

2. Negligence—Order in writing for payment of money—Trover—Conversion—Measure of damages—Money had and received—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), ss. 3 (1) (2), 11 (2), 73, 82—Inland Revenue Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 55), s. 17. —An order in writing, directing a bank to pay to the plaintiffs or their order a sum of money conditionally upon the signature by the plaintiffs of a receipt form at the foot of the document, was stolen from the plaintiffs and taken to the defendant bank for collection on behalf of a customer of theirs. The signature of the plaintiffs had been forged, both on the indorsement and on the receipt, but both signatures were badly written and the name of one of the plaintiffs was written as "Trench" instead of Junior. The defendant bank, without making any inquiries, received the order, collected the amount from the paying bank, and placed it to the credit of their customer. The plaintiffs subsequently gave notice to the defendant bank that the order had been stolen, and claimed the amount received by the defendant bank. The account of the customer of the defendant bank had been drawn upon in the interval, but nothing had occurred to disentitle the defendant bank from cancelling the credit given to their customer.

Held, that the defendant bank had been guilty of negligence, and consequently could not avail itself of the benefit of section 82 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, as enlarged by section 17 of the Inland Revenue Act, 1883; and that the plaintiffs could recover the amount from the defendant bank as money had and received to the use of the plaintiffs.

Semble (per A. L. Smith and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.), that the plaintiffs could also recover the amount as damages for the conversion of the order. —BAVINS v. LONDON AND SOUTH-WESTERN BANK, C.A., 210; [1900] 1 Q. B. 270; 69 L. J. Q. B. 164; 81 L. T. 655.

3. Separate accounts—Deposit of securities for debt due on one account—Rights of third parties.—Securities belonging to the clients of a firm of stockbrokers were deposited with a bank to secure a debt due from the stockbrokers to the bank. The stockbrokers had two accounts with the bank—a loan and a current account. This debt was due on the loan account, but there was no agreement that the securities were deposited to secure the loan account exclusively. The stockbrokers became bankrupt. At the date of the bankruptcy they had a balance in their favour on the current account, which was at any rate partly made up of money they had received from clients for investment. The bank did not set off the balance due on the current account against the indebtedness on the loan account, but sold the securities and discharged the debt.

Held, that the securities were deposited to secure the indebtedness of the stockbrokers to the bank, and that this indebtedness was the amount due on all their accounts. Consequently, the clients of the stockbrokers were not entitled to be repaid out of the balance on the current account money which had been paid by them to the stockbrokers for investment and paid by the stockbrokers into their current account.

Decision of Byrne, J. (ante, p. 62, [1899] 2 Ch. 556), reversed.—MUTTON v. PEAT, C.A., 486; [1900] Ch. 79; 69 L. J. Ch. 484; 82 L. T. 440.

BANKRUPTCY:—

1. Act of bankruptcy—Assignment of property for the benefit of creditors generally—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section (1) (a)—Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 57), s. 19.—Where the act of bankruptcy alleged in a petition is a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors generally, a receiving order ought not to be made if the deed relied upon is for the benefit of trade creditors only. The expression "creditors generally" must be considered to mean "all creditors."—PHILLIPS, RE, BARTON, EX PARTE, Bkcy; [1900] 2 Q. B. 329; 69 L. J. Q. B. 604; 82 L. T. 691.

2. Discharge—Suspending discharge—Bankrupt without means or prospects—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 51), s. 28—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 8.—An order suspending a bankrupt's discharge until a dividend of 10s. in the pound has been paid, ought not to be made unless there is a reasonable prospect that some funds or property will be forthcoming, and will be available for payment of the debts of the bankrupt.—MARLEY v. MARLEY, Q.B.D.; 82 L. T. 692.

3. Execution—Completion by seizure and sale—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 45—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 11.—A creditor put in execution against a debtor, and withdrew from possession on receiving £40 in part payment of his debt and an undertaking to pay the remainder by instalments. A receiving order was made against the debtor before the remainder of the debt had been paid.

Held, that the creditor, not having completed the execution by seizure and sale, was not entitled to retain the £40 as against the trustee in the bankruptcy.—FORD, RE, OFFICIAL RECEIVER, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 173; [1900] 1 Q. B. 264; 69 L. J. Q. B. 74; 81 L. T. 648.

4. Execution creditor—Sheriff, sale by—Proceeds of sale—Landlord—Rent in arrear—Lien—Priority—Payment by sheriff—Indemnity—Title to proceeds of execution—Official receiver—Trustee—"Goods of a debtor"—8 Anne, c. 14 (c. 18 in Rev. Stat.), s. 1—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 11—Appeal—Trustee in bankruptcy—Costs.—Where under an execution the sheriff sells the goods of the judgment debtor, and subsequently, under section 11 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, receives from the official receiver notice of bankruptcy proceedings commenced against the debtor since the sale, together with a demand for payment of the proceeds of sale, he is entitled to retain out of the proceeds and pay the landlord of the premises on which the execution was levied any arrears of rent due to him from the debtor, not exceeding the amount of one year's rent, even though he, the sheriff, has not received notice of the landlord's claim until after the sale, and notwithstanding that the sale has deprived the landlord of the lien given him on the goods themselves by section 1 of 8 Anne, c. 14 (c. 18 in Revised Statutes).

The right of the landlord to be paid out of the proceeds of sale in the hands of the sheriff, where no bankruptcy intervenes—a right established by the practice uniformly adopted under the statute of Anne and recognized by judicial authority long before the present law of bankruptcy—is not affected by section 11 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890. The expression "the goods of a debtor" in that section does not include the goods of a judgment debtor, which are by the statute of Anne impounded until the landlord is paid; nor are the

The defendant, Sarah Jenkins, borrowed from the claimant prior to the 29th of April, 1899, at various times sums of money amounting to £40. On that date it was agreed that the claimant should advance her a further sum of £50, and that she should give a bill of sale on her farm stock to secure the sum of £90; and a bill of sale was thereupon executed and the £50 advanced. In the bill of sale the consideration was stated to be "the sum of £90 now due and owing," and the grantor, who farmed the farm herself, was merely described as "Sarah Jenkins, of Ynysgwas Farm, in the county of Glamorganshire, married woman." In the schedule the farm stock was described as "two horses, four cows."

An execution having been levied by the plaintiff upon the goods comprised in the bill of sale, the claimant claimed the goods, and the bailiff interpleaded. The county court judge held the bill of sale to be good, and gave judgment for the claimant. The plaintiff appealed.

Held (following Carpenter v. Deen, 23 Q. B. D. 566, 38 W. R. Dig. 22), that the words "two horses, four cows," were not such a specific description of the farm stock as to satisfy section 4 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, and therefore they must be excluded from the schedule.

Held, also (sed dubitante), that the bill of sale was void, on the ground that the consideration was not truly stated, since the bill omitting to acknowledge the receipt of the £50 then advanced was not in accordance with the form prescribed by the Act.

Held, also, that the point raised as to the sufficiency of the description of the grantor's occupation must be decided in favour of the validity of the document — DAVIES v. JENKINS, Q B D., 286; [1900] 1 Q. B. 133; 69 L. J. Q. B. 187; 81 L. T. 788.

2. Consideration—True statement—Money "now paid"—Promissory note not yet due—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 8.—A bill of sale stated the consideration therefor to be a sum of money "now paid" by the grantee to the grantor. Of the money paid by the grantee to the grantor a part was, in pursuance of a previous agreement between them, applied by the grantor to the retirement of a promissory note then current upon which the grantor and grantee were jointly and severally liable to a third party.

Held, that as the liability, to the satisfaction of which the money was agreed to be applied, was a liability to a third person and not to the grantee, the fact that the liability was not a debt already due did not render it obligatory to set out in the bill of sale the agreement as to the application of the money, and that the consideration of the bill was not untruly stated.—WILTSHIRE, RE, EYNON, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 256; [1900] 1 Q. B. 96; 69 L. J Q. B 145; 81 L. T. 616.

3 Payment by instalments—Authority to sell mortgaged property—Sale before instalments were due—Interest subsequent to sale.—Where repayment under a bill of sale was to be made by monthly instalments extending over a certain period, and where before the expiration of that period the mortgagee by agreement with the mortgagor sold the security, and deducted from the purchase-money the principal and interest due to him up to the end of the period.

Held, that the mortgagee could only claim the principal and the interest up to the date the security was realized.—WEST v. DIPROSE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 389; [1900] 1 Ch. 337; 69 L. J. Ch. 169; 82 L. T. 20

4. Registration—Validity—Affidavits—Description of grantor's occupation—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 10 (2).—A married woman living apart from her husband was employed as manager of a dressmaking business at a weekly salary. In a bill of sale of which she was the grantor, and in the affidavit filed on registration, she was merely described as a married woman.

Held, that the registration was bad because her occupation was not described.—KEMBLE v. ADDISON. Q.B.D., 331; [1900] 1 Q. B. 430; 69 L. J. Q. B. 299; 82 L. T. 91

5. Statutory form—Time of payment—Validity—Deviation from statutory form—"Stipulated time of payment"—Covenant to pay "on or before" a named day—Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), s. 9. —By a bill of sale, given as security for money, the grantor agreed to pay the principal "on or before" the 1st of November.

Held, that this amounted to an agreement to pay on a fixed day, with a provision for the defeasance of the security (at the option of the grantor) on payment at an earlier date, and that the bill of sale was, therefore, "in accordance with" the form given in the schedule to the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, and was valid.

The provision in the statutory form that there must be a "stipulated" time of payment means that the time at which payment is to become obligatory upon the grantor must be fixed.—DE BRAAM v. FORD. C.A.; [1900] 1 Ch. 142; 69 L. J. Ch. 82; 81 L. T. 568.

6. Validity—Form—Covenant to produce last receipt for rents, rates, and taxes "when called upon" —Power to seize on breach of any covenant—Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), ss. 7, 9.—A bill of sale contained a covenant by the grantor to produce "when called upon" his last receipts for rents, rates, and taxes, and a proviso giving power to seize and sell on breach of any covenant. It also contained the usual proviso that the chattels included under the bill of sale should not be liable to seizure for any other cause than those mentioned in section 7 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882.

Held, that the covenant to produce "when called upon" must be read as subject to the importation, in the subsequent proviso, of section 7 of the Act, and that consequently the bill of sale contained no power of seizure for non-production of the receipts except without reasonable excuse after demand in writing, and that it was a valid bill of sale.—BULLOCK, RE, WARD, EX PARTE, Q.B.D., 46; [1899] 2 Q. B. 517 81; L. T. 268.

BOND:—

Bond to secure loan—Breach of condition—Interest from date of breach—Damages—4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, ss. 12, 13—Husband and wife—Loan to husband of wife's separate property—Statute of Limitations, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42), s. 5.—Interest is payable as interest, and not as damages, under a bond having a condition or defeasance to make void the same upon payment of a lesser sum at a day or place certain, even though no express mention of interest is made in the bond. The fact that the bond is conditioned for payment of principal at, and of interest up to, a certain date does not preclude interest being payable subsequently to that date in accordance with the before-stated rule.

Acting within the provisons of a marriage settlement, the trustees of the settlement lent the trust fund in 1852 to the husband on the security of his bond, conditioned for repayment of the sum advanced six months after date, with interest thereon at £4 per cent. This interest was payable under the trusts of the settlement to the wife for life, and to the husband for life after her death. Husband and wife lived together in perfect amity. The wife died in 1876, and the husband in 1896. The husband had never paid the sum secured by the bond, or any part thereof, and had never paid any interest on the same.

Held, that, under the circumstances, the hand to pay and the hand to receive the interest having been the same, no payment over was necessary; and that, therefore, the Statute of Limitations did not run, and the bond was still subsisting.

Held, also, that, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, the husband must be considered to have kept possession of the trust fund in the capacity of a quasi-trustee, and, that being so, the Statute of Limitations could not in any case have run in his favour.

Decision of Byrne, J. (ante, p. 71, [1899] 2 Ch. 561), affirmed.—DIXON RE, HEYNES v. DIXON, C.A., 665; 69 L. J. Ch. 609.

BREAD:—

Sale of, otherwise than by weight—3 Geo. 4, c. 106, s. 4.—An inspector employed by the London County Council sent a man to purchase a loaf of bread at the respondent's shop. The man entered the shop and asked for a twopenny loaf, and was accordingly served by the respondent with a loaf for which he paid twopence. The loaf, before being handed to him, was not weighed by anyone in the shop in his presence, nor was any statement made to him as to its weight. On being weighed by the inspector, it was found to be 2¾oz. short of a 2lb. loaf. The loaf was similar in shape and appearance to loaves which are usually sold as 2lb. loaves.

Held, on a summons being taken out against the respondent under section 4 of the Bread Act of 1822, for selling bread otherwise than by weight, that it was no answer to the charge that the purchaser asked for a loaf of a specified value, and did not ask for a loaf of any particular weight.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. READ, Q.B.D., 393; [1900] 1 Q. B. 288; 69 L. J. Q. B. 39; 81 L. T. 452.

BURIAL.—See Ecclesiastical Law, 2.

BYE-LAW.—See Local Government, 1, 10, 20; Market, 1.

CANADA, LAW of:—

1. British Columbia—Cattle—Powers of provincial legislature—Ultra vires—British Columbian Cattle Protection Acts, 1891, 1895 (54 Vict. c. 1; 58 Vict. c. 7).—The provision in the British Columbian Cattle Protection Act, 1891, as amended in 1895, to the effect that a Dominion railway company, unless they erect proper fences on their railway, shall be responsible for cattle injured or killed thereon, is ultra vires of the provincial parliament.

Canadian Pacific Railway Co. v. Corporation of the Parish of Notre Dame de Bonsecours, [1899] A. C. 367, distinguished. — MADDEN v. NELSON AND FORT SHEPPARD RAILWAY CO, P.C.; [1899] A. C. 626; 81 L. T. 276.

2. British Columbia—Corporation—Liability of—Accident to bridge under corporate control—Bye-law—British Columbia Municipal Act, 1892 (55 Vict. c. 33). —The appellant corporation having, under 55 Vict. c. 33, de facto taken over the care and control of a certain bridge,

Held, that their acts with regard to it were primâ facie competent corporate acts. It would lie on the corporation to show clearly that any acts done by their officers under their direction were ultra vires and illegal, and that conclusion could not be reached merely by reason of their not having passed a bye-law under 55 Vict. c. 33 actually vesting the bridge in them.

In an action to recover damages from them for a fatal accident caused by the breaking down of the said bridge over which a tramcar containing the deceased was running,

Held, that the finding of the jury that an act done by their officer had materially weakened the beam which afterwards broke amply justified a verdict against them; and that the liability, if any, of the tram company for passing an extraordinarily heavy weight over it not having been before the jury, could not be raised in appeal.—VICTORIA CORPORATION v. PATTERSON, SAME v. LANG, P.C.; [1899] A. C. 615; 81 L. T. 270.

3. British Columbia—Naturalization and aliens—Chinamen—Legislative power—Ultra vires—British North America Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 3) s. 91, sub-section 25, and s. 92, sub-sections 10, 13—British Columbia "Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1890" (53 Vict. c. 33), s. 4.

Held, that section 4 of the British Columbian "Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1890," which prohibits Chinamen of full age from employment in underground coal workings, is in that respect ultra vires of the provincial legislature.

Regarded merely as a coal-working regulation, it would come within section 92, sub-section 10, or section 92, sub-section 13, of the British North America Act. But its exclusive application to Chinamen who are aliens or naturalized subjects establishes a statutory prohibition which is within the exclusive authority of the Dominion Parliament conferred by section 91, sub-section 25, in regard to "naturalization and aliens." — UNION COLLIERY CO. OF BRITISH COLUMBIA v. BRYDEN, P.C.; [1889] A. C. 580; 81 L. T. 277.

4. Gas—Right to stop supply of gas generally—Canada Act (12 Vict. c. 183), s. 20—Construction—Gasworks Clauses (Imperial) Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 15).—Held, that, by the true construction of section 20 of the Canada Act (12 Vict. c. 183), borrowed from the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847 (Imperial Parliament), the appellant company is authorized to cease supplying the respondent with gas at any of his houses on his neglect to pay its bill for any one of them. There is nothing in the section to limit the authority of the company to the particular building in respect of which there has been default, and such a limitation cannot be implied.—MONTREAL GAS CO. v. CADIEUX, P.C.; [1899] A. C. 589; 81 L. T. 274.

5. Insurance, life—Validity of life policy—Lawful holder—Civil Code of Lower Canada, art. 2590.—In an action on a policy of life insurance, Held, that the plaintiff was not a lawful holder. As "the protector of the deceased whenever he stood in need of protection," he had not an insurable interest in his life within the meaning of article 2590 of the Civil Code of Lower Canada.

Held, further, that a condition in the policy that the same should, on the lapse of a year or upwards during which premiums have been regularly paid, become incontestable is no answer to an objection founded on the terms of the Code.—ANCTIL v. MANUFACTURERS' LIFE INSURANCE CO., P.C.; [1899] A. C. 604; 68 L. J. P. C. 123; 81 L. T. 279.

6. Lower Canada—Civil Code. art. 1233 (1), (6), (7)—"Commercial matters"—"Notice to produce"—"Commencement of proof in writing"—Stock Exchange — Authority to broker. — A person who gives authority to stockbrokers to do business for him on the Stock Exchange must be taken, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to have employed them on the terms of the Stock Exchange, and therefore to have authorized the sale of his shares on failure to supply them with the requisite funds.

In an action by stockbrokers against their principal to recover the balance of their account in respect of sales and purchases of shares for private speculation on his account,

Held, (1) that such transactions were "commercial matters" within article 1233 of the Civil Code of Quebec, which the plaintiffs might prove by oral evidence given by themselves; (2) an admission by the defendant that he employed the plaintiffs as his stockbrokers, and that they bought and sold something for him, is a sufficient "commencement of proof in writing" under article 1233 (7) to let in oral evidence of the particulars; and (3) that article 1233 (6) authorizes reception of secondary evidence of bought and sold notes in possession of the adverse party without a notice to produce — FORGET v. BAXTER, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 467; 82 L. T. 510.

7. Quebec—Advances—Purchase of land by husband in names of wife and daughter—Account by mandatory before action — Civil Procedure Code, s. 6. — The appellant after his wife's death, sued the respondent, his daughter, to recover as creditor of herself and his wife's estate moneys which he alleged he had advanced to purchase properties in Quebec, to which the respondent was entitled either in her own right or under his wife's will.

Held, on the evidence, that he had failed to establish his claim.

Quære, if the advances made as his wife's mandatory were in the nature of gifts, whether gifts were valid by the Quebec law or by section 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure.—EDDY v. EDDY, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 299; 69 L. J. P. C. 58.

8. Quebec—Intoxicating liquors—Canada Temperance Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 13), s. 17—Construction.—There having been numerous convictions of the respondent, with accumulated penalties amounting to 1,400dols., for having on various occasions sold intoxicating liquor, and thereby committed offences under the Canada Temperance Act of 1864, a certiorari was granted in one case by the superior court, on the ground that by the true construction of section 17, which provides that two or more offences by the same party may be included in the same complaint, a penalty of 100dols. was sufficient for all offences under the Act during the limitation period of three months prescribed by section 15,

Held, that, in the absence of express words to that effect, section 17 must be construed as permissive merely, and not imperative.—WENTWORTH v. MATHIEU, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 212; 69 L. J. P. C. 11; 82 L. T. 161.

CAPE of GOOD HOPE, LAW of:—

Act of State—Concessions granted before cession—Rights after annexation—Jurisdiction of municipal courts—Crown Liabilities Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. No. 37).—Held, that the appellants as grantees of concessions made by the paramount chief of Pondoland cannot, after the annexation of Pondoland by her Majesty, enforce against the Crown the privileges and rights conferred.

Annexation is an act of State, and any obligation assumed under a treaty to that effect, either to the ceding sovereign or to individuals, is not one which municipal courts are authorized to enforce.

The Crown Liabilities Act, 1888, permits such an action to be brought, but it does not empower the court to make a declaration of right.

Secretary of State for India in Council v. Kamachee Boye Sahaba, 13 Moo. P. C. 22, followed.—COOK v. SPRIGG, P.C.; [1899] A. C. 572; 81 L. T. 281.

CHARITY:—

1. Charitable trust—Charitable foundation—Voluntary association—Inn of Chancery.—By a deed of feoffment made in 1618 it was witnessed that the grantors having an intent that a capital messuage which had for many years by the allowance of the grantors been used and employed as an Inn of Chancery for the furtherance of the study and practice of the common laws of the realm of England and during that time had been well governed by the Principal and Rules, might be assured and settled as the same should for ever thereafter continue and be employed as an Inn of Chancery for the furtherance of the practisers and students of the common laws of the realm as aforesaid, and that the Principal, Rules, and other gentlemen of the society might from thenceforth be assured of a certain estate therein, did principally for that purpose, intent, and consideration, and in consideration of £600 paid by the Principal and Rules for and on behalf of themselves and the rest of the gentlemen of the society, grant, enfeoff, and confirm the capital messuage to trustees, and it was thereby agreed by and between the parties thereto that the true intent and meaning thereof was that the messuage should be continued and employed as an Inn of Chancery for the good of the gentlemen of the society and for the benefit of the commonwealth as aforesaid and not otherwise, nor to any other use, intent, or purpose. The society was a voluntary independent unincorporated society of lawyers and law students, governed by a council consisting of a Principal and members called Rules, which made its own regulations respecting the election or admission, rights, privileges, payments, obligations, and conduct of its members, and the management of its property, which could not be compelled to elect new members, and to which no person had a right to claim admission.

In an action by certain members of the society against the remaining members and the Attorney-General for the determination of the question whether the property so vested in trustees by the deed of 1618 was subject to a charitable trust or belonged absolutely to the members for the time being of the society, Held, that the property was subject to a trust for charitable purposes.—SMITH v. KERR, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; 82 L. T. 795.

2. Highway—Repair of road—Road transferred to local authority—Failure of trust.—The testator bequeathed £3,000 upon trust to build galleries in a church and to construct a causeway, and directed that £40 a year should be laid aside for the repairs of the galleries and the road as there should be occasion, and as the trustees should think fit, and gave the residue after these things were performed to other objects. An additional sum of £40 a year out of the funds was subsequently ordered by the Court of Chancery to be applied to the repairs of the road. The road had recently come under the control of a county council and a district council, so that the obligation to repair it rested on these bodies.

Held, that this circumstance did not put an end to the trust, and that so much of the £80 a year as was available for the repairs of the road ought to be paid to the councils.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v.

DAY, Ch.D. North, J.; [1900] 1 Ch. 31; 69 L. J. Ch. 8; 81 L. T. 806.

3. Unknown origin—Dispute as to objects—Letter of Charity Commissioners—Final determination—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 70 (2).—In consequence of disputes as to the proper objects of a charity and of an application made to them by the defendant, who was a trustee, the Charity Commissioners caused a local inquiry to be held, and subsequently wrote to the defendant stating their views on the matter. No appeal was brought against their decision.

Held, that the letter constituted a determination of the commissioners under section 70, sub-section 2, of the Local Government Act, 1894, and was conclusive upon the question.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. HUGHES, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 150; 81 L. T. 679.

4. Will—Gift limited to old and worn-out clerks of firm—Amalgamation of firms.—A gift to form a fund for the purpose of pensioning off the "old and worn-out clerks" of a firm is a good charitable bequest, and the court will direct a scheme for its administration.—GOSLING, RE, GOSLING v. SMITH, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 300.

See also Common Lodging-House, 1, 2.

CLUB.—See Licensing Law, 7.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSE:—

1. Charitable institution—House containing cubicles—Persons congregated together—Danger of spread of disease—Necessity for registration and inspection—Common Lodging Houses Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 28), s. 7.—The respondent kept a house (containing, inter alia, 128 single-bedded cubicles) for the reception of male lodgers of the poorer class, each inmate being accommodated with the use of a single-bedded cubicle to sleep in and the use of certain common rooms, at a charge of from 6d. to 8d. a night. Drunken or disorderly persons, or persons suspected to be of the criminal class or verminous, were excluded; but, with these exceptions, the house was open to any male who paid the above charge. The house was not carried on by the respondent for profit, and efforts were made by him to find situations for any inmates and to befriend them in sickness. The majority of the usual inmates were of the class that frequented common lodging-houses, but some were of a better class.

Held, that the house was a common lodging-house within the meaning of the Common Lodging Houses Acts, 1851 and 1853, and that the respondent had been guilty of the offence of keeping a common lodging-house without having his name registered as the keeper thereof.

Logsdon v. Booth, ante, p. 266, [1900] 1 Q. B. 401, discussed.—LOGSDON v. TROTTER, Q.B.D., 365; [1900] 1 Q. B. 617; 69 L. J. Q. B. 312; 82 L. T. 151.

2. Charitable institution—Salvation Army shelter—Non-registration—Penalty for keeping—Common Lodging Houses Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 28)—Common Lodging Houses Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 41), s. 3.—The respondent had opened and kept a lodging-house for men of the poorest class, known as a Salvation Army shelter, which, though not kept for the purpose of gain, was conducted upon business principles. The house was not registered, nor had it been inspected and approved by the local authority in accordance with section 3 of the Common Lodging Houses Act, 1853.

The facts as found in the case were substantially the same as those in Booth v. Ferrett, 38 W. R. 718, 25 Q. B. D. 87, and the magistrate held himself bound by that decision, and dismissed the summons against the respondent charging him with the offence of keeping an unregistered common lodging-house.

Held, that Booth v. Ferrett was wrongly decided, and that these shelters, being of a class of lodging-house in which persons of the poorer sort were received for short periods, and, although strangers to one another, were allowed to inhabit one common room, were common lodging-houses; and therefore the magistrate should have convicted the respondent.—LOGSDON v. BOOTH, Q.B.D., 266; [1900] 1 Q. B. 401; 69 L. J. Q. B. 131; 81 L. T. 602.

COMPANY:—

1. "Company acting in execution of public duties"—Company incorporated by Act of Parliament to manage pier and harbour—Paying a dividend out of profits—Commercial company—Limitation of action—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), Title, s. 1 (a).—A company incorporated by private Act of Parliament for the purposes of completing and maintaining a pier and harbour, and empowered to raise money by rates and dues to be applied for those purposes, and also for the purpose of paying to the shareholders a yearly dividend limited in amount, is a commercial company, and is not a company acting in the execution of statutory or other public duties within the benefit of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893.

The dictum of Jeune, P., in The Ydun, [1899] P. 236, 47 W. R. Dig. 166, followed.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. MARGATE PIER AND HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 518; [1900] 1 Ch. 749; 69 L. J. Ch. 331; 82 L. T. 448.

2. Debentures—Floating security—Sale of part of the securities—Injunction.—The holders of debentures in a company had a floating security over the property of the company, which consisted of a business carried on in three distinct branches. Power was reserved to the company in the trust deeds to sell the business carried on at one of the three branches, and to take shares in other similar companies.

Held, that the debenture-holders could not restrain the company from getting rid of one of the three businesses, as it was being done in good faith and for the benefit of the company.—METROPOLITAN BANK OF ENGLAND AND WALES v. VIVIAN & Co., Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 636; 82 L. T. 674.

3. Debentures — Winding up — Debenture-holder's action—Judgment—Transfer—Right of transferee to registration—Cross-claim by company against transferor—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 131.—Where debentures are issued subject to the condition that the principal and interest were to be paid without regard to any equities between the company and the original or any intermediate holder thereof, a transferee for value in good faith, after judgment in a debenture-holder's action, is entitled to payment of dividends in respect of his debentures, although the company had an equitable claim against the transferor. — GOY & Co., RE, FARMER v. GOY & Co., Ch.D. Stirling, J., 425; [1900] 2 Ch. 149; 69 L. J. Ch. 481.

4. Debenture-holders — Receiver — Debt due from French company—Unsecured creditor—Attachment of French debt—Contempt of court.—Receivers were appointed in three actions by debenture-holders of all the property of an English company, the defendants in the action. Among the assets of the company was a debt due from a French firm. After the date of the appointment of receivers, another English company, P. & Co., holding a dishonoured acceptance of the defendant company, took proceedings in France and according to French law to attach the debt due from the French firm. The plaintiffs in the debenture-holders' action moved to restrain P. & Co. from obtaining payment of this debt.

Held, that, although the debenture-holders had, according to English law, a charge upon all the assets of the company, including the French debt, yet there was no equity in favour of the debenture-holders as against P. & Co., and the debenture-holders could not restrain P. & Co. from asserting and enforcing their rights according to French law.

Held, further, that, though receivers had been appointed, the mere order of the court did not put the receivers in possession of the foreign property; something else had to be done, and until that had been done in accordance with foreign law, any person not a party to the suit who took proceedings in a foreign country was not guilty of contempt.—MAUDSLAY, RE, MAUDSLAY v. MAUDSLAY, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 568; [1900] 1 Ch. 602; 69 L. J. Ch. 347; 82 L. T. 378.

5. Director—Contracts—Interest of director in contracts—Disclosure—Profits—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), Table A.—The articles of association of a railway company provided for the vacation of his office by a director concerned in the profits of any contract with the company unless he declared in writing the nature of his interest, but that "no director shall vacate his office by reason of his being a member of any corporation, company, or partnership which has entered into contracts with, or done any work for, the company, or by reason of his being interested, either in his individual capacity or as a member of any company, corporation, or partnership in any adventure or undertaking in which the company may also have an interest."

The railway company sought to make the estate of a director liable for profits received by him by reason of contracts made with the company by a company and firm in which he was interested, but which interest he had not disclosed.

Held, following Imperial Mercantile Credit Association v. Coleman, 18 W. R. 570, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 558 (not overruled on this point in 21 W. R. 696, L. R. 6 H. L. Cas. 189), that the exception in the article applied, and that the action must be dismissed, there being no liability to account for profits received by reason of contracts made with the railway company.—COSTA RICA RAILWAY CO. v. FORWOOD, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 553; [1900] 1 Ch. 756; 69 L. J. Ch. 408.

6. Director—Dividends—Loss of capital—Ultra vires—Negligence—Fraud—Reliance of director on officers of company—Statements honestly made—Damage—Statute of Limitations.—If the annual receipts of a company exceed the annual outgoings, dividends may be declared out of such excess of receipts, notwithstanding that there has been a loss of paid-up capital of the company. Even a limited banking company is not prohibited by law from paying dividends unless its paid-up capital is intact.

If a director make misstatements to his shareholders, he is liable for the consequences unless he can show that he made them honestly believing them to be true, and took such care to ascertain the truth as was reasonable at the time.

What constitutes reasonable care, and how far a director is justified in trusting his subordinates, are questions of degree in each case. The fact that if a director had made inquiries he might have discovered that he was being deceived is not in itself sufficient to prove that he did not act with reasonable care.

Articles of a company gave the company a lien on the shares of any shareholders who were indebted to the company. The directors were empowered to make advances to shareholders with or without security, but no advance was to be made to a director without security. Advances were made to directors, the only security being the lien on their shares conferred on the company by the articles.

Held, that, in point of law, the shares might be accepted as security if the board of directors considered them sufficient as regarded value.

A liquidator of a company, representing shareholders, is not debarred from recovering moneys which have been improperly paid by way of dividend by the fact that the claims of all creditors of the company have been satisfied.—NATIONAL BANK OF WALES, RE, CORY'S CASE, C.A., 99; [1899] 2 Ch. 629; 81 L. T. 363.

7. Director—Remuneration—Yearly payment—Apportionment.—The articles of association of the defendant company provided that "The directors shall be paid out of the funds of the company, by way of remuneration for their services, and exclusive of travelling expenses, the sum of £125 per annum, per director, and such further sums as shall from time to time be determined by the company in general meeting, and the same shall be divided among them in such proportion and manner as the directors by agreement may determine, and in default of such determination, equally. The said sum of £125 per annum may be increased, but not diminished, by the company in general meeting."

Held, that a director could not recover in respect of his services as director for any period less than a completed year.—INMAN v. ACKROYD, Q.B.D.; 82 L. T. 621.

8. Director—Wrongful allotment of shares—Measure of damages.—Allotments of shares were made ultra vires to directors or their nominees.

Held, that the measure of damages was the value of the shares at the date when the shares were allotted to the directors.—SHAW v. HOLLAND, C.A., 680; [1900] 2 Ch. 305; 69 L. J. Ch. 621; 82 L. T. 782.

9. General meeting—Conditional notice—Validity of notice.—The articles of association of a company required thirty days' notice of every general meeting. On the 19th of February the company issued a notice of an extraordinary general meeting for the 23rd of March following, at which a resolution for reduction of capital was to be proposed. In the same document the company also gave notice of an extraordinary general meeting for the 7th of April, at which the said resolution, if passed at the first meeting, should be confirmed. The notice then continued: "Should the said resolution not be passed by the requisite majority at the meeting to be held on the 23rd of March, due notice will be given to the shareholders that the meeting on the 7th of April, of which notice is now given, will not be held."

Held, that the notice convening the second meeting was valid.—ESPUELA LAND AND CATTLE CO., RE, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 684.

10. Memorandum—Alteration of memorandum—

No capital—Jurisdiction—Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 62), s. 1, sub-section 1—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63), s. 1, sub-section 1.—The High Court has jurisdiction to sanction an alteration in the memorandum of association of a registered company with unlimited liability, because it has also jurisdiction to wind it up.—NORTH OF ENGLAND IRON STEAMSHIP ASSOCIATION, RE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 604; [1900] 1 Ch. 481; 69 L. J. Ch. 211; 82 L. T. 598.

11. Memorandum of association—Alteration of—Objects—Reconstruction—Rights of dissentient shareholders—No opposition—Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 62), s. 51—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 161.—The memorandum of association of a limited company stated its objects to be: (a) To purchase a certain steamship, the building of which had already been contracted for; (b) on the sale or loss of that steamship, or other the steamship for the time being, to acquire any other steamship, but there shall only be built one steamship at the same time; (c) to employ the steamship in or for any trade or work of any kind; (d) to carry on the business of steamship owners, with power to sell, let, charter, or otherwise dispose of the steamship; (e) to do all such other things as may be incidental to the attainment of the above objects.

Shortly after its incorporation the company purchased the steamship referred to and carried on business until 1898, when the steamship was totally lost, and thereupon the company had a new steamship built.

In 1899, by special resolution, the company resolved that for (a), (b), (c), (d), and (e) of the memorandum of association there be substituted: (a) To acquire by purchase, exchange, or otherwise, steamships, vessels, lighters, or other seagoing craft, or any shares or share as such, with power to sell, let, charter, or otherwise dispose of the property, and to carry on as a joint-stock company limited the management, working, and using of such property, and to do all such other things as may be found expedient in connection therewith; (b) to pay for any purchase of the company by cash, paid-up shares, bills, debentures, or other consideration, and to draw, accept, and negotiate bills or other documents, and to borrow or raise money on security of any of the property of the company; and (c) to contract for the rendering of salvage or towage services; and presented a petition under the Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890, for the confirmation by the court of the special resolution. There were no debenture-holders; the only creditor consented; and there was evidence that the proposed extension of the objects of the company was necessary to enable it to carry on its business more efficiently.

Held, that the court had jurisdiction under the Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890, to confirm the proposed alteration; and although, having regard to its extensive nature, it would be more properly effected by a reconstruction under the Companies Act, 1862, yet, as there was no opposing shareholder, the only creditor consented, no one was prejudiced, and the heavy expense of reconstruction would be avoided, the court made the order asked for.—BERNICIA STEAMSHIP CO., RE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; 69 L. J. Ch. 194; 81 L. T. 816.

12. Promoters—Directors—Sale by promoters to company—No independent board—Duties of directors—Validity of contract—Breach of trust—Misrepresentation—Voidable contract—Rescission—Change of position.—There is no obligation on promoters of an intended company to furnish the company with an independent board of directors, if the truth is disclosed to the persons who are induced to join the company. Consequently, if a company is avowedly formed with a board of directors who are not independent, but who are stated to be the intended vendors, or agents of the intended vendors, of property to the company, the company cannot set aside an agreement entered into by the directors for the purchase of such property simply because they are not an independent board.

In the absence of fraud, the right to rescind such a contract on the ground of misrepresentations contained in the prospectus of the company cannot be enforced where the property has been worked so as to materially alter the position of the parties.

Directors who act within their powers and honestly for the benefit of the company, and with reasonable care, discharge both their legal and equitable duties to the company. The fact that they are both promoters and directors will not necessarily be held to prove that it was impossible for them to discharge their duties to the company, at any rate in a case where there was full disclosure of their position.

A syndicate formed a company to buy certain property of the syndicate. The directors of the company were the directors of the syndicate, and before a prospectus was issued they entered into an agreement with the syndicate to buy the property. A prospectus was subsequently issued, which disclosed the fact that the directors were vendors, but contained misrepresentations of fact. The company bought and worked the property. Subsequently fresh directors were appointed, and they commenced an action against the syndicate for misrepresentation. The company continued to work the property after the action had commenced.

Held, by Lindley, M.R., and Collins, L.J. (Rigby, L.J., dissentiente), that the company were not entitled to rescission merely on the ground that the contract had been entered into without independent advice, and that the working of the property by the company had so altered the position of the parties as to deprive the company of its right to rescission on the ground of misrepresentations contained in the prospectus. The directors of the company, having acted intra vires and with reasonable care and honesty for the benefit of the company, were not liable to make good any loss the company might have sustained through entering into the agreement with the syndicate.—LAGUNAS NITRATE CO. v. LAGUNAS NITRATE SYNDICATE, C.A., 74; [1899] 2 Ch. 392; 81 L. T. 334.

13. Promoters—Secret profit—Liability to account.—A limited company was being wound up, and part of its property consisted of land and buildings used for exhibitions, which were subject to debentures for £100,000, and a mortgage for £10 000, the incumbrances exceeding the value of the property. A "syndicate" was formed to buy the land and buildings with a view to a resale. The appellant was a member of the syndicate, and was also one of four "trustees" with power to do whatever was necessary for the purchase and resale, and to purchase as an interim investment debentures of the old company, and the four trustees agreed to become directors of a new company if formed. They bought up the debentures and the mortgage at a price much below the amount which they realized, and thus made a profit of £20,000. The syndicate bought the property for £140,000, and resold it to a new company, of which the four trustees were directors, for £180,000. The prospectus stated that "profits made by the syndicate from interim investments were excluded from the sale to the company."

Held (affirming the judgment of the Court of Appeal reported as In re Olympia, [1898] 2 Ch. 153, 46 W. R. Dig. 32), that there was no sufficient disclosure of the profit made on the debentures, and that the four directors were liable to replace their share of the £20,000 as a secret profit for which they were jointly and severally liable.—GLUCKSTEIN v. BARNES, H.L.; [1900] A. C. 240; 69 L. J. Ch. 385; 82 L. T. 393.

14. Prospectus — Misrepresentation — Misleading statement—"Untrue statement"—Director—Promoter—Shareholder — Contract — Rescission — Damages — Compensation—Directors' Liability Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 64), s. 3, sub-section 1—Contract by company, directors, or promoters—Omission from prospectus—Concealment — "Fraudulent" prospectus — Waiver clause in prospectus or application form—Catching conditions—Notice—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 38.—A misleading statement in a prospectus is an "untrue statement" within section 3, sub-section 1, of the Directors' Liability Act, 1890. The liability imposed by that section for any untrue statement in a prospectus is absolute and is in no way affected by the consideration whether the statement was untrue in the sense in which it was used by those who issued the prospectus. Persons issuing a prospectus containing an untrue statement can only escape liability under the statute by proving that they had "reasonable ground" for believing the statement to be true in fact.

Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867—which enacts that every prospectus shall specify the dates and names of the parties to any contract entered into by the company or the promoters, directors or trustees thereof, and that any prospectus not specifying the same shall be deemed "fraudulent" on the part of the promoters, directors and officers of the company knowingly issuing the same—cannot be evaded by a general waiver clause in the prospectus, or in a form of application for shares, to the effect that a subscriber for shares shall waive all claim for non-compliance with the section. A waiver clause, to be effectual as against a subscriber must fairly disclose the circumstances which confer the rights which by the clause he agrees not to enforce.

The court will refuse to give effect, as against a shareholder, to a "tricky" waiver clause in a prospectus or application form, upon the same principles as are applicable to catching conditions of sale as between vendor and purchaser or to general words in releases.

Judgment of Kekewich, J. (47 W. R. Dig. 33), affirmed.—GREENWOOD v. LEATHER SHOD WHEEL Co., C.A.; [1900] 1 Ch. 421; 69 L. J. Ch. 131; 81 L. T. 595.

15. Quorum—Articles of association.—The articles of association of a company provided (38) that the number of members of the council of administration (which was invested with power to conduct the affairs of the company) should not be less than three; (42) that the continuing council might act notwithstanding any vacancy; and (53) that the council might determine the quorum necessary for the transaction of business.

The number of members of the council became reduced to two. It was alleged that the council had passed a resolution fixing the quorum at three.

Held, that even if the resolution had been passed, a security given by the two members of the council in favour of persons who had no knowledge or notice of the irregularity was valid.

Kirk v. Bell, 16 Q. B. 290, distinguished.—BANK OF SYRIA, RE, OWEN AND ASHWORTH'S CLAIM, WHITWORTH'S CLAIM, Ch.D. Wright, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 272; 69 L. J. Ch. 412.

16. Reconstruction—Filing of reconstruction agreement—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25.—An agreement effecting the reconstruction of a company, by which it is provided that, in consideration of the transfer of the assets of the old company, the liquidator of the old company should be entitled to have allotted to him or his nominees 200,000 10s. shares of the new company, on which 7s. 6d. was to be deemed paid up, on applying within two months from the date of the agreement and making a small additional payment, was filed with the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies. Application was made for 6,500 of these 200,000 shares under such option.

Held, that, by the filing of the reconstruction agreement, section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, had been sufficiently complied with.

Elsner and Macarthur's case, 44 W. R. 361, [1895] 2 Ch. 759, followed.—TRANSVAAL EXPLORING Co. v. ALBION GOLD MINES, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 108; [1899] 2 Ch. 370.

17. Reconstruction scheme—Sanction of court—Underwriting agreements—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 161—Joint Stock Companies Arrangement Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 104).—A company having passed special resolutions for a voluntary winding up and the adoption of a scheme of arrangement with their debenture-holders, the scheme was assented to by the statutory majority of the debenture-holders as provided by the Joint Stock Companies Arrangement Act, 1870.

The scheme provided (inter alia) that a new company should be formed, and that the liquidator should enter into an agreement with that company for the transfer to it of the undertaking and assets of the old company; that the new company should issue debenture stock to the debenture-holders of the old company in satisfaction of their debentures; that every shareholder in the old company should be entitled to claim a share in the new company in respect of each share held by him in the old company; that the new company should not be bound to allot any share unless the member entitled thereto should, within three weeks of the sanction of the scheme by the court, claim his allotment and make a specified payment on account of the liability thereon; and that as regarded unclaimed shares the liquidator should use his best endeavours to sell the same, and should divide the net proceeds of sale rateably among the non-claiming members of the old company. Subject to the provisions of the scheme, the new company was to take over and discharge all the liabilities of the old company and to indemnify the old company.

Among the special resolutions passed by the shareholders of the old company was one which authorized the directors and the liquidator or either of them to "procure underwriting for all or any of the capital of the new company, on such terms and conditions as they or he may approve, and to pay for the same out of the assets of the company."

In pursuance of this resolution the liquidator entered into two agreements with persons who agreed to apply for and take up all the shares in the new company which should not be taken up by the shareholders in the old company, in consideration of a commission of 3d. per share on all the shares of the new company, 250,000 in number.

No shareholder of the old company had given a notice under section 161 of the Companies Act, 1862, requiring the liquidator to purchase his shares.

Upon a petition under the Joint Stock Companies Arrangement Act, 1870, for the sanction of the court to the scheme,

Held, by Cozens-Hardy, J., that the underwriting agreements were illegal, and that the court ought not to sanction the scheme.

The Court of Appeal sanctioned the scheme on the undertaking of the liquidator (1) to pay the unsecured creditors of the old company in full out of the assets in his hands; (2) not to act upon the resolution as to underwriting, and to procure the cancellation of the underwriting agreements, and (3) that three shareholders of the old company who opposed the scheme should, if they elected within three days to dissent from the special resolutions passed by the company, be entitled to all the statutory rights of dissentient shareholders under sections 161 and 162 of the Companies Act, 1862.—CANNING JARRAH TIMBER CO., RE, C.A.; [1900] 1 Ch. 708; 69 L. J. Ch. 416; 82 L. T. 409.

18. Reconstruction scheme—Validity—Limited time for application for shares by old shareholders—Shares at the disposal of new company—Application after the limited time—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 161.—A scheme for liquidation and reconstruction of a limited company, which provides, as part of the consideration for the sale of the assets, for the issue to members of the old company of shares in the new company, but also provides that to obtain the shares members must apply within a limited time (e.g., twenty-one days) after receiving notice, that shares not applied for within that time shall be otherwise allotted, and generally that all the shares shall be at the disposal of the new company, is authorized by section 161 of the Companies Act, 1862. A member of the old company, therefore, who, having by accident omitted to make an application in due time, applies for shares after the limited period has expired, and is refused an allotment, is not entitled to an injunction to restrain the two companies and the liquidator from carrying out such a scheme without providing for the claim of such member.

Decision of Kekewich, J., reversed.

Dicta of Lord Esher, M.R., in Nicholl v. Eberhardt Co., 61 L. T. Rep. 489, 38 W. R. Dig. 46, dissented from.—BURDETT-COUTTS v. TRUE BLUE (HANNAN'S) GOLD MINE, C.A. 1; [1899] 2 Ch. 616; 81 L. T. 29.

19. Shares—Deceased member—Notices—Calls—Special resolutions—Forfeiture—Fully paid-up shares—Vendor's shares—Company's lien.—Notices addressed to a member at his registered place of address in the books of a company are not invalidated by the fact that the company was aware, at the time the notices were sent out, that such member was dead, so long as his executors have not been registered as the holders of the shares of such member. A limited company formed with articles which confer no lien on fully paid-up shares has, under the Companies Act, 1862, s. 50, power to alter the articles so as to impose a lien and restrictions on the transfer of those shares by members indebted to the company, and such lien and restriction can be imposed in respect of debts contracted before and existing at the time of the alteration of the articles, as well as in respect of debts subsequently contracted.

In the absence of a special bargain, there is no distinction between fully-paid shares allotted to the vendor by the company and any other fully-paid shares; and, consequently, the altered articles apply to vendor's shares.

Order of Kekewich, J. (47 W. R. 568, [1899] 2 Ch. 40), varied.—ALLEN v. GOLD REEFS OF WEST AFRICA, C.A., 452; [1900] 1 Ch. 656; 69 L. J. Q. B. 266; 82 L. T. 210.

20. Shares—Forfeited shares—Past member—Reduction of capital—Special resolution—Irregularity—Order of court confirming resolution—Certificate of registration of order—Companies Act, 1862, ss. 38, 51—Companies Act, 1867, ss. 9, 11, 15, 16.—It was provided by the articles of association of a company that any member whose shares had become forfeited should nevertheless be liable to pay all calls owing at the time of forfeiture. The defendant's shares were forfeited, and more than a year afterwards the company went into liquidation, and an action to recover the amount of unpaid calls due at the time of forfeiture was brought against the defendant.

Held, that notwithstanding the provisions of section 38 of the Companies Act, 1862, the defendant was liable, not as a contributory, but as a debtor to the company.

Where the resolution to confirm a previous resolution for the reduction of capital did not comply with section 51 of the Companies Act, 1862—there not being an interval of fourteen days between the passing of the two resolutions—but an order of court had been made under section 11 of the Companies Act, 1867, in accordance with the resolutions, and the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies had certified the registration of the order of the court under section 15 of that Act,

Held, that the certificate was conclusive that the resolutions for the reduction of capital had been duly passed.—LADIES' DRESS ASSOCIATION v. PULBROOK, C.A.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 376; 69 L. J. Q. B. 705.

21. Shares—Fully paid up—Certificate of incorporation—Contract—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25—Companies Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 26), s. 1.—The certificate of incorporation of a company was dated the 9th of August, 1870. A contract under which the vendor to the company was to receive a certain number of fully-paid shares was signed on the 21st of October and registered on the 27th of October, 1870. The vendor had subscribed for the same number of shares in the memorandum of association. It was held in the case of Dalton Time Lock Co. v. Dalton, 66 L. T. Rep. 704, 40 W. R. Dig. 40, that the certificate of incorporation operated as the issue of the shares signed for in the memorandum of association.

Held, that, in the special circumstances of the case, relief would be granted to the personal representative of the vendor; and the court ordered the company to file a memorandum, which should operate as a sufficient contract in writing within the meaning of section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, and as if it had been duly filed at or before the issue of the shares.—WHITEHEAD BROTHERS, RE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 585; [1900] 1 Ch. 804; 69 L. J. Ch. 607; 82 L. T. 670.

22. Shares—Fully paid—Contract—Companies Act, 1867, s. 25.—On the 6th of December, 1894, a written agreement was made between a syndicate and H., as trustee for an intended company, whereby it was agreed that the vendors should sell, and the company should purchase, a property called Millwood, in the Cape Colony, which was fully described, and that as consideration for the sale H., as the trustee for the intended company, should on or before the 15th of December allot to the vendors, or as they might direct, 22,500 fully-paid shares of 10s. each in the intended company, and should also allot to the vendors, or as they might direct, 277,493 shares of 10s. each in the intended company upon each of which 8s. should be deemed to have been paid. This agreement was never filed with the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies. The company was registered on the 6th of December, 1894, and on the 11th of December the directors resolved to adopt the agreement. On the 12th of December an agreement in writing was made between the syndicate (called the vendors) and the company which provided that the company would forthwith allot to the vendors, or their nominee or nominees, 22,500 fully-paid shares of 10s. each in the company, and should allot to the vendors, or as they might direct, 277,493 shares of 10s. each in the company upon each of which 8s. should be deemed to have been paid "as mentioned in an agreement dated the 6th of December, 1894. In consideration of the allotment of such shares as aforesaid the vendors will forthwith thereafter give to the company possession of the premises more particularly mentioned in the said agreement. In all other respects the said agreement is hereby confirmed." On the 19th of December, 1894, another agreement in writing was made between the company and the syndicate, which provided that, in consideration of the syndicate agreeing to give the company immediate possession of "the lands and premises situate in the mining district of Millwood, in the Cape Colony, more particularly mentioned and referred to in an agreement dated the 6th of December, 1894, made between the syndicate and H., as trustee for the company," the company should forthwith allot to the syndicate, or to their nominee or nominees, 22,500 fully-paid shares of 10s. each in the company, and for all purposes the said shares should be deemed fully-paid shares in the company. The syndicate should, with all possible expedition, procure the lands and premises to become vested in the company free from all incumbrances. Both the contracts of the 12th of December and the 19th of December were filed with the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies—the first on the 13th of December and the second on the 28th of December. On the 2nd of January, 1895, 1,406 shares of 10s. each were allotted and issued as fully paid to Markham and Darter respectively as nominees of the syndicate. The company being in liquidation,

Held, that the filed contract of the 19th of December was a sufficient compliance with the requirements of section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, or that at any rate the two contracts of the 12th of December and the 19th of December were sufficient.

Decision of Wright, J. (47 W. R. 509, [1899] 1 Ch. 414), affirmed.—AFRICAN GOLD CONCESSIONS Co., RE, MARKHAM AND DARTER'S CASE, C.A.; [1899] 2 Ch. 480; 68 L. J. Ch. 724; 81 L. T. 145.

23. Shares—Issue of fully-paid shares—Registered contract—Statement of mode of payment otherwise than in cash—Sufficient statement of consideration—Property purchased described merely by reference to prior contract—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25.—Where the contract registered under section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, on the issue of fully paid-up shares, merely described (by way of recital of a prior contract entered into between the vendor and a trustee for the company) the property sold as "certain leasehold messuages, shops, and premises, together with the goodwill of the several businesses carried on by the vendor upon the same, together with the machinery, plant, horses, vans, carts, fixtures, and fittings used in connection with the said several businesses."

Held, that the contract sufficiently complied with the requirements of the section.

Judgment of Romer, J. (47 W. R. 27), affirmed.

In re Maynards (Limited), 46 W. R. 346, [1898] 1 Ch. 515, overruled.—FROST & Co., RE, C.A., 39; [1899] 2 Ch. 207; 68 L. J. Ch. 544; 80 L. T. 849.

24. Shares—Partly paid-up shares—Sufficiency of filed contract—Statement of nature of consideration—Character of transaction—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25—Companies Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 26).—A mere recital in a contract filed under section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, stating that, by an unfiled contract, "the vendors agreed to sell and the company to purchase the property in the agreement now in recital mentioned for the consideration and on the terms and conditions therein expressed and contained," is not a sufficient statement of the consideration.

The filed contract must at least state generally the nature of the consideration, and not merely set forth the character of the transaction.

In re S. Frost & Co. (Limited), 47 W. R. 27, [1898] 2 Ch. 556, on appeal ante, p. 39, [1899] 2 Ch. 207, commented on.—WATSON (ROBERT) & Co., RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 40; [1899] 2 Ch. 509; 81 L. T. 85.

25. Shares—Registered contract—Shares subscribed for in memorandum—Sale to company for similar number of shares—Identity of shares—Relief—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25—Companies Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 26), s. 1.—A company was formed to take over the business of D., and it was agreed that D. should sell the business to the company for 4,069 fully-paid shares. On the formation of the company D. signed the memorandum of association for 4,069 shares. Subsequently a contract setting out the terms of the sale to the company was duly filed in accordance with section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867. There was evidence that the shares for which D. signed the memorandum were considered by all parties to be the same as those issuable to him under the contract.

Held, on a motion under the Companies Act, 1898, s. 1, for an order for filing a fresh contract, that the court had no power to grant the relief.

In re Jarvis & Co. (Limited), 47 W. R. 186, [1899] 1 Ch. 193, followed.—DAWNAY, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 600.

26. Shares—Share certificate—Duty of director—Putting to rest—Estoppel—Conduct—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 31.—The duty of examining and checking share certificates issued by a company may as a rule be properly left to the secretary. In that case a director is not estopped from denying the accuracy of a certificate passed at a board meeting at which he is present.

Whether the same rule applies to a director who signs the certificate, quære.

A certificate, though inaccurate, estops the company from denying its accuracy against any person relying on it, including (unless it is based on a forged transfer lodged by him) the person to whom it is issued, and that person, if put to rest by the certificate, so as to lose his remedy against his broker or transferor, is entitled to damages against the company.

The onus of proving that there is no present effective remedy against the broker or transferor lies on the person put to rest by the certificate; the onus of proving that there was no effective remedy at the date of the certificate lies on the company.

Knights v. Wiffen, L. R. 5 Q. B. 660, 665, and Balkis Consolidated Co. v. Tomkinson, [1893] A. C. 396, followed and applied.

Simm v. Anglo-American Telegraph Co., 5 Q. B. D. 188, distinguished.—DIXON v. KENNAWAY & Co., Ch.D. Farwell, J.; [1900] 1 Ch. 833; 69 L. J. Ch. 501; 82 L. T. 527.

27. Shares—Subscribers to memorandum of association—Liability on shares—Payments on allotment—Special bargain—Directors—Breach of duty.—Subscribers to a memorandum of association of a company limited by shares are only liable by virtue of their subscription to pay up the amount of their shares as and when called up.

It follows that, in the absence of any special agreement or article requiring a subscriber of a memorandum of association to make some payment on subscription or allotment, nothing is payable by him as a subscriber in respect of his shares until calls are made on them.

Where, however, directors who were subscribers to the memorandum of association of a company allotted to themselves the shares set opposite their names in the memorandum without payment on allotment, but required payment on allotment from other shareholders, and then proceeded to make a further call on the shares without paying the allotment money on their own shares,

Held, that, as the other shareholders had not known or sanctioned the directors obtaining the advantage of deferring their own contributions to the company at the expense of the other shareholders, there was a distinct breach of duty on the part of the directors, and that they were bound to pay up the allotment moneys in the same manner as the other shareholders.

Decision of Cozens-Hardy, J., [1899] 2 Ch. 302, reversed.—ALEXANDER v. AUTOMATIC TELEPHONE Co., C.A., 546; [1900] 2 Ch. 56; 69 L. J. Ch. 428; 82 L. T. 400.

28. Winding up—Contributory—Action for payment of calls—Summons for leave to enter final judgment—Affidavit—Leave to defend—Misrepresentation—Rescission—Proceedings taken before commencement of winding up.—A shareholder who, in an action for calls brought against him by a company, obtains leave to defend an application to enter final judgment under order 14 on an affidavit which sets up misrepresentation as a ground of defence, and states that he intends to counterclaim for rescission, has done all that can reasonably be expected in the way of commencing legal proceedings to establish his right to repudiate his shares.

He is not made, therefore, too late for relief owing to a petition for the winding up of the company being presented before delivery of his defence and counterclaim.—GENERAL RAILWAY SYNDICATE, RE, WHITELEY'S CASE, C.A., 440; [1900] 1 Ch. 365; 69 L. J. Ch. 250; 82 L. T. 134.

29. Winding up—Costs—Practice—Instructions for brief—Trial of issue of fact before judge—Originating summons—R.S.C., 1883, ord. 71, r. 1*a*; Appendix N, items 81, 82, 82*a*.—A petition was presented for the compulsory winding up of a company which was already in voluntary winding up; but at the hearing the judge made no order except that the question was to be tried as on a summons under section 138 of the Companies Act, 1862, "costs reserved"; he also fixed a certain date for the trial. On that date witnesses were examined, and the judge decided substantially in favour of the applicant with costs. No summons had so far been taken out, and on drawing up the order the registrar required a summons to be taken out in the voluntary winding up. As an originating summons had previously been taken out by the liquidator for a private examination under section 115 of the Act of 1862, on which an order had been made for an examination and reserving "liberty to apply," the registrar directed that the summons to be taken out and mentioned in the order was to be an ordinary and not an originating summons. On taxation the registrar disallowed the costs of instructions for brief.

Held, that as the direction for trial treated the summons as issued in a "pending cause or matter," within the meaning of R. S. C., 1883, ord. 71, r. 1*a*, the summons was not an originating summons; that although, if Appendix N to the rules, item 81, was construed strictly, it referred to an issue of fact directed to be tried as such, yet on taxation substance was to be regarded, and in substance the trial was of an issue of fact before a judge; and that the costs of instructions for the brief of the applicant's counsel must be allowed.—CONSOLIDATED EXPLORATION AND FINANCE Co., RE, Ch.D. Wright, J.; [1899] 2 Ch. 599; 81 L. T. 522.

30. Winding up—Creditor—Director—Fees—Apportionment.—The fact that a creditor of a company is also a contributory entitles him to make an application under section 138 of the Companies Act, 1862, in respect of a claim in which he is concerned only as creditor.

Where the articles of association provided that "the directors shall be paid out of the funds of the company as follows—namely, a sum of £100 per annum to each ordinary director by way of remuneration for their ordinary services,"

Held, that the fees were for a whole year's services, and were not apportionable.—CENTRAL DE KAAP GOLD MINES, RE, Ch.D. Wright, J.; 69 L. J. Ch. 18.

31. Winding up—Creditor's petition—Right of creditor to winding-up order for his own benefit only.—When a company is insolvent and has no assets distributable amongst its creditors generally other than debenture-holders, an unpaid creditor of the company is not entitled to a compulsory winding-up order which would benefit himself only, but which would not benefit the general body of creditors.—GREENWOOD & Co., RE, Q.B.D., 607; [1900] 2 Q. B. 306; 69 L. J. Q. B. 751; 82 L. T. 843.

32. Winding up—Debentures—Receiver—Agency—Jurisdiction.—Where debentures by way of mortgage over the whole property of a company give power to the debenture-holders to appoint a receiver without stating that he is the agent of the company or what he is to do with any surplus which may come into his hands after paying the debenture-holders, such receiver is the agent of the debenture-holders only, and not of the company.

The liquidator of a company cannot by summons in the winding up obtain an order to make a receiver of it account for any surplus in his hands, as the court has no jurisdiction to consider the matter. If he wishes to enforce such a claim, he must bring an action against the receiver in the ordinary way.—VIMBOS, RE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 520; [1900] 1 Ch. 470; 69 L. J. Ch. 209; 82 L. T. 597.

33. Winding up—Discovery of documents—Income tax returns—Misfeasance summons—Public department—Discretion of judge—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 115.—Section 115 of the Companies Act, 1862, gives a discretion to the judge which will not be interfered with primâ facie by the Court of Appeal.

Accordingly the judge of first instance having in his discretion refused an application by the liquidator of a company for production of certain balance-sheets of the company, which had been deposited with the district surveyor of taxes for the purpose of income tax returns, on an affidavit by the secretary of the Board of Inland Revenue that in the opinion of the board such production was injurious to the public interest,

Held, that this decision would not be reviewed by the Court of Appeal.—HARGREAVES, RE, C.A., 241; [1900] 1 Ch. 347; 69 L. J. Ch. 183; 82 L. T. 132.

34. Winding up — Fraudulent preference — Discharging legal obligation—Payment to satisfy conscience—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 164—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 48.—If a company make a preferential payment to a creditor within three months of winding up (which by section 164 of the Companies Act, 1862, is equivalent to an act of bankruptcy), not from a sense of legal obligation, but from a sense of moral obligation, such payment is a fraudulent preference. —BLACKBURN, RE, BUCKLEY'S CASE, Ch.D. Wright, J., 186; [1899] 2 Ch. 725; 81 L. T. 520.

35. Winding up —Jurisdiction—Compulsorily or voluntary—Shareholder's petition — Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 79 (5), 129 (3), 145—Directors' meeting—Formalities.—An order to wind up a company compulsorily will be made on the petition of a paid-up shareholder notwithstanding the fact that an extraordinary resolution to wind up voluntarily has been passed under section 129 (3) of the Companies Act, 1862.

After a committee of investigation had reported in favour of proceedings for misfeasance being taken against the directors, an extraordinary resolution was passed to wind up the company voluntarily, and steps were taken to dissolve the company and destroy the books. The company was ordered to be wound up compulsorily on the petition of a holder of a paid-up share. The extraordinary resolution was also held ineffectual because the notices summoning the meeting had been issued by the secretary without the authority of a resolution of the directors duly assembled at a board.—HAYCRAFT GOLD REDUCTION AND MINING CO., RE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 230; 69 L. J. Ch. 497.

36. Winding up—Jurisdiction—Voluntary winding up—Creditors' wishes—Discretion of court—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 91, 145, 149.—The voluntary winding up of a company is no bar to a compulsory order if the general body of the creditors desire it, although no individual creditor proves in accordance with section 145 of the Companies Act, 1862, that his rights will be prejudiced by a voluntary winding up.

In such a case the right of the general body of the creditors to have effect given to their wishes under sections 91 and 149 is untouched by section 145, although the primâ facie right of an individual creditor to a compulsory order, ex debito justitiæ, is restricted by that section.

In re West Hartlepool Ironworks Co., L. R. 10 Ch. 618; In re Gold Co., 11 Ch. D. 701; and In re The Varieties (Limited), [1893] 2 Ch. 235, followed.—BISHOP & SONS, RE, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 254; 69 L. J. Ch. 513; 82 L. T. 756.

37. Winding up—Liquidator—Notice of proposed appointment of particular person—Subsequent appointment, without previous notice, of another person—Validity.—It is competent for a company, after passing a resolution for voluntary winding up, to proceed forthwith, without previous notice of intention, to the election of a liquidator; and this general power will not be abrogated even in cases in which notice has been given of intention to elect a particular person as liquidator, and such person is not elected.

Decision of Kekewich, J., ante, p. 200, reversed.—TRENCH TUBELESS TYRE CO., RE, BETHELL v. TRENCH TUBELESS TYRE CO., C.A., 310; [1900] 1 Ch. 408; 69 L. J. Ch. 213; 82 L. T. 247.

38. Winding up — Misfeasance — Director — Unauthorized payment of capital to shareholders—Ultra vires act—Order on directors to refund—Right of indemnity from shareholders. — The directors of a shipping company, having received a sum of money under a policy of insurance on one of the company's ships which had become a total loss, distributed the money among the shareholders, who had notice of the facts and consented to the distribution. Subsequently the company was wound up. An order was made in the winding up under section 10 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, declaring that the payments to the shareholders were payments in reduction of the capital of the company, and were unlawful, and the directors were ordered to repay the amount to the liquidator.

Held, that the directors were entitled to recover from the shareholders the money paid to them.

Judgment of the Divisional Court (47 W. R. 282, [1899] 1 Q. B. 480) affirmed.—MOXHAM v. GRANT, C.A., 130; [1900] 1 Q. B. 88; 69 L. J. Q. B. 97; 81 L. T. 431.

39. Winding up— Official receiver—Liquidator—Jurisdiction.—In making a compulsory winding-up order on a creditor's petition the court cannot appoint as permanent liquidator any person other than the official receiver, for at that stage of the proceedings the creditors have not in fact been consulted in the manner contemplated by the Companies (Winding-up) Act. 1890.—REID & SONS, RE, Q.B.D.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 736.

40. Winding up—Order for public examination—Summons to discharge order—Time—Evidence of not being concerned in promotion of company—Admissibility.—A summons to discharge an order for public examination under section 8 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, must be made with promptness to be in time. Thus, an application made two months after the order was served is too late.

Decision of Wright, J. (ante, p. 185, [1899] 2 Ch. 773), affirmed.

Per Wright, J.—Evidence that the applicant did not take part in the formation or promotion of the company cannot be admitted in support of a summons to discharge the order, as that is the very question which it is the object of the examination to ascertain.—NATIONAL STORES, RE, C.A.; [1900] 1 Ch. 27; 81 L. T. 529.

41. Winding up—Voluntary winding up—Liquidator—Subsequent supervision order—Remuneration of liquidator—Costs of solicitor—Priority—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 110, 133 (3), 144, 151—Companies Winding-up Rules, 1890, r. 31.—The costs of a solicitor properly incurred during the voluntary winding up a company are payable in priority to any remuneration awarded by the company to its liquidator.—SANITARY BURIAL ASSOCIATION, RE, WINGFIELD, EX PARTE, C.A., 529; [1900] 2 Ch. 289; 69 L. J. Ch. 551; 82 L. T. 639.

42. Winding up—Voluntary winding up—Reconstruction — Sale of assets — Dissentient member — Purchase of interest—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 161.—Where a company is being wound up voluntarily, and a shareholder has dissented from a sale to a new company, he cannot be deprived by the articles of association from having the benefit of the provisions of section 161 of the Companies Act, 1862, relating to the purchase of his interest.—PAYNE v. CORK CO., Ch.D. Stirling, J., 325; [1900] 1 Ch. 308; 69 L. J. Ch. 156; 82 L. T. 44.

See also Bankruptcy, 8, 18, 19; Contract, 13; Landlord and Tenant, 7; Limitation Statutes, 2; Practice, 16, 42, 46; Solicitor, 13; Trustee, 4.

CONFLICT of LAWS:—

1. Foreign judgment—Tort committed in foreign country—Judgment in rem—Approval of judgment by sovereign of the foreign country—Ratification of unlawful act.—The plaintiffs shipped on a British ship ammunition for delivery at a port in Persia, or "optional Muscat."

While the ship was on her voyage the master, under instructions from the plaintiffs, altered the bill of lading and the marks on the goods so that the goods became deliverable at Muscat only.

The Sultan of Muscat a few days later issued proclamations giving notice that the importation into India or Persia of all munitions of war was illegal, and that by agreement with the British and Persian Governments ships of war of those two countries were authorized by him to search British and Persian vessels in Muscat waters, and to confiscate all munitions of war found on such vessels and intended for Indian or Persian ports.

The defendant, who was in command of a British ship of war, seized the plaintiffs' ammunition on the arrival in Muscat waters of the ship carrying it.

The Sultan appointed a court to inquire into the circumstances of the seizure, and this court decided that the plaintiffs' goods were intended for a Persian port, and were lawfully seized under the Sultan's proclamation. This decision was approved by the Sultan.

The plaintiffs afterwards brought an action for damages against the defendant for wrongfully seizing their goods, and the jury found that the goods when seized by the defendant were not for any Indian or Persian port, but for Muscat only.

Held, that there was no judgment in rem by the court at Muscat binding the plaintiffs in the present action, because there was no sufficient proof that that court was acting judicially, and because the decision of that court did not expressly affect the status of the goods.

Semble, that the courts would not give effect in England to a judgment in rem in a foreign court as to which there was no evidence of any public notice of the intention to hold the inquiry which resulted in the judgment.

Held, also, that as the seizure purported to have been done, not on behalf of the Sultan, but only by his permission, his approval of the decision of his court could not ratify the seizure so as to make it lawful by the law of Muscat.—FRACIS v. CARR, C.A.; 82 L. T. 699.

2. Marriage — Validity — Marriage solemnized abroad before British consul—British subject and foreigner — Foreign decree of nullity — Consular Marriage Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 68).—A marriage between a British subject and a foreigner solemnized abroad in accordance with the requirements of the Consular Marriage Act, 1849, is valid in England, although such marriage has been declared void by a foreign court.—HAY v. NORTHCOTE, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 615; [1900] 2 Ch. 262; 69 L. J. Ch. 586; 82 L. T. 656.

See also Contract, 2; Domicil, 1, 2; Will, 14, 17

CONSPIRACY:—

Besetting persons on board ship—Persons on board ship without licence from Board of Trade—Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), s. 7—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 111.—A shipping federation, which kept a depot ship for the purpose of receiving on board men intending to serve as seamen on vessels belonging to members of the federation, entered into contracts with certain persons whereby these persons were to remain on board the ship until engaged as seamen on board vessels belonging to members of the federation. These persons remained on board, but while on board they did not work as seamen or otherwise, though they received daily wages from the federation. The federation had no licence from the Board of Trade under section 11 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, for engaging or supplying seamen to be entered on board ship. The respondents beset the ship with a view to compel these persons on the ship from remaining on board and fulfilling their engagements with the federation.

Justices having dismissed an information against the respondents under section 7 of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, for besetting the ship, on the ground that the federation, in entering into these engagements without a licence from the Board of Trade, had contravened the provisions of section 111 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and that therefore the persons on board had no legal right to be there.

Held, that, whether the contracts made by the federation with the persons on board the ship were legal or illegal contracts, the men had a legal right to be on board the ship; that, therefore, there was a besetting of the ship within the meaning of the section, and that the respondents ought to have been convicted.—FARMER v. WILSON, Q.B.D.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 496; 82 L. T. 566.

CONTEMPT:—

1. Abuse of judge in his conduct as judge—Power to punish on summary process.—The publication in a newspaper, after the conclusion of a trial in court, of an article containing scurrilous abuse of the judge in his character of judge in the hearing of the case, is a contempt of court which may be punished by the court on summary process.—REG. v. GRAY, Q.B.D., 474; [1900] 2 Q. B. 36; 69 L. J. Q. B. 502; 82 L. T. 534.

2. In face of the court—Libel—Publication.—The appellant who was neither printer nor publisher innocently and without any knowledge of the contents of a newspaper handed a copy to a friend.

Held, that there was no obligation on the appellant to make himself acquainted with its contents, and should scandalous matter reflecting on the court thus become known, these circumstances were not in themselves sufficient to justify a committal for contempt of court.

Committals for contempt of court by scandalizing the court itself have become obsolete in this country.—MCLEOD v. ST. AUBYN, P.C., 173; [1899] A. C. 549.

See also Company, 4.

CONTRACT:—

1. Audit—Finality of—Agreement—Charges of fraud—Costs.—The appellant advanced £15,000 to the respondent, to be used in the business of the respondent for five years. In return for the advance the appellant was to receive interest and 37½ per cent. of the profits of the respondent's business. The contract stipulated that there should be an annual audit of the respondent's business by the firm of M. & Co., accountants, and that their certificate as to the profits should be binding on both parties. For four years the respondent's books were audited by G., a member of the firm of M. & Co. Subsequently the appellant raised this action against the respondent for a judicial account on the ground that the audits had not been in terms of the agreement in respect that the auditor did not know that his estimate of the profits was to be binding on the appellant and respondent. G. swore in his evidence that he did not know of this agreement, and that if he had he would have made out the account in a somewhat different form.

Held, reversing the decision of the First Division of the Court of Session, (1898) 25 R. 661, that there must be a new account taken, the auditor being unaware that his audit was to be final between the parties.—TEACHER v. CALDER, H.L. (Sc.); [1899] A. C. 451.

2. Conflict of laws—English law and law of South African Republic—Locus solutionis.—Where a contract is made in a foreign country between two Englishmen, and is intended to be performed primarily in that foreign country, this fact is in itself sufficient, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to prove an intention on the part of the parties that the contract shall be governed by the law of the foreign country.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (47 W. R. 681, [1899] 2 Ch. 173), affirmed.—SOUTH AFRICAN BREWERIES v. KING, C.A., 289; [1900] 1 Ch. 273; 69 L. J. Ch. 171; 82 L. T. 32.

3. Consideration of marriage — Representation — Testamentary intentions—"Share"—Performance.—Testator wrote to the plaintiff, his intending son-in-law: "You are, of course, aware that, with my large family, E. (his daughter) will have little fortune. She will have a share of what I leave after the death of her mother, who I wish to leave in a comfortable independence if I leave her a widow." The plaintiff married the daughter, relying upon the letter. The testator, dying subsequently, leaving eight children, left E. a legacy much less than one-eighth of his estate.

Held, that, if the letter was an offer, the court would presume it to be accepted; and Held, also, that the letter was not an offer resulting in a contract, but a mere statement of intention as to the future, and which, although relied on, gave no right either to specific performance or damages.

Held, also, that, if the letter imposed an obligation upon the testator, it was satisfied by the bequest of the legacy.—FICKERS, RE, FARINA v. FICKERS, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 250; [1900] 1 Ch. 331; 69 L. J. Ch. 161; 81 L. T. 749.

4. Construction—Question of fact—Agreement to convey adjoining houses to different persons—Right of way over one tenement for apparent use of other tenement—Practice—Order 54a.—By an agreement for the distribution of an estate left to the plaintiff, the defendant, and another, it was agreed that the "freehold house and premises known as Bedeburn, let to A. F.," should forthwith be conveyed to the plaintiff, and that the "freehold house and premises known as Stanley Villa, let to J. H.," should forthwith be conveyed to the defendant. These were adjoining houses, and the back of Bedeburn could only be approached by a private road at the side of and forming part of Stanley Villa, by which also the back of Stanley Villa was approached. This way had in fact been used by the tenants of both houses since the houses were built.

On a summons under order 54*a* to determine whether under the description of Bedeburn the plaintiff was entitled to a right of way over this private road,

Held, (1) that under the agreement the plaintiff was entitled to a conveyance of Bedeburn together with the ways, rights, and appurtenances to the premises belonging, and that, therefore, a roadway over a portion of Stanley Villa for the apparent use of Bedeburn would pass to the plaintiff; (2) that the court was not precluded from determining this question of fact by reason of the procedure being under order 54*a*.—NICHOLLS v. NICHOLLS, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; 81 L. T. 811.

5. Equitable assignment—Notice—Undertaking to indorse and hand over cheque when received.—A contract for the sale of flour contained the following: "I also agree to indorse the cheques from the asylum and hand over to you as received by me in payment of the accounts."

Held, that this constituted an equitable assignment of the moneys from the cheques as and when received from the asylum.—WEST v. NEWING, Q.B.D.; 82 L. T. 260.

6. Evidence—Extrinsic evidence—Meaning of words used—Parol evidence to explain.—Extrinsic evidence is always admissible, not to contradict or vary a written contract, but to apply it to the facts which the parties had in their minds and were negotiating about.

Therefore where S. undertook to do certain work on terms embodied in a letter of his to the appellants, and which "provided that S. should be allowed an additional percentage on the estimate of £35,000 in the event of his being able to reduce the total cost of the work below £30,000,"

Held, that evidence as to the meaning of the expressions "the total cost of the work" and "the estimate of £35,000" was admissible.—BANK OF NEW ZEALAND v. SIMPSON, P.C., 591; [1900] A. C. 182; 69 L. J. P. C. 22; 82 L. T. 102.

7. Fraudulent inducement—Concealment of identity—Materiality—Right to repudiate.—The plaintiff, a money-lender whose reputation was such that the defendant would not have dealt with him, by fraudulently concealing his identity, induced the defendant to borrow money from him. On discovering the plaintiff's fraud, the defendant, within a reasonable time, repudiated the contract.

Held, that he was entitled so to do, the fraud being material to the inducement which brought about the contract.—GORDON v. STREET, C.A., 158; [1899] 2 Q. B. 641; 69 L. J. Q. B. 45; 81 L. T. 237.

8. Illegality—Corporation—Interest of member.—The fact that a Commissioner of Sewers, or a member of the Court of Aldermen, or of the Common Council of the City of London, is interested or concerned in a contract made by the Commissioners of Sewers with a company by reason simply of his being a shareholder in such company, does not invalidate the contract.

City of London Sewers Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. clxiii.), s. 42, and 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. cxi.), s. 53, 57, discussed and explained.—CITY OF LONDON ELECTRIC LIGHTING CO. v. LONDON (MAYOR), Ch.D. Farwell, J.; 82 L. T. 530.

9. Illegality—Indemnifying a bail—Shares transferred to bail—Innocent transferor.—It is just as much contrary to public policy for a third party to indemnify a bail as it is for the prisoner himself to do so.

Wilson v. Strugnell, 7 Q. B. D. 548, 30 W. R. Dig. 50, and Herman v. Jeuchner, 33 W. R. 606, 15 Q. B. D. 561, considered.—CONSOLIDATED EXPLORATION CO. v. MUSGRAVE, Ch.D. North, J., 298; [1900] 1 Ch. 37; 69 L. J. Ch. 11; 81 L. T. 747.

10. Illegality — Remoteness — Uncertainty — Statutory confirmation—Contract to give "first refusal" of land—Interest in land—Purchasers with notice—Injunction—Manchester Ship Canal (Surplus Lands) Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. lxxiii.), s. 3.—Action by the Manchester Ship Canal Co. for an injunction to restrain the Manchester Racecourse Co. from selling their racecourse to the Trafford Park Estates (Limited), or any other person without first offering it to the Manchester Ship Canal Co. at the same cash price that the intending purchasers were willing to give, and to restrain the Trafford Park Estates (Limited) from completing an agreement to purchase the same until this had been done.

The action was based on an agreement of the 7th of March, 1893, entered into between the canal company and the racecourse company and scheduled to the Manchester Ship Canal (Surplus Lands) Act, 1893, by which it was "confirmed and declared to be valid and binding upon the parties thereto." The parties to the agreement were in each case defined to include their successors and assigns where the context so required or admitted.

Clause 3 of the agreement was as follows: "If and whenever the lands and hereditaments belonging to the racecourse company and now used as a racecourse shall cease to be used as a racecourse, or should the aforesaid lands and hereditaments be at any time proposed to be used for dock purposes, then and in either of such cases the racecourse company shall give to the canal company the first refusal of the aforesaid lands and hereditaments en bloc."

Held, (1) that the effect of the Act of 1893 was to give statutory validity to every clause of the agreement of 1893, so that no question of remoteness or uncertainty could arise; (2) that the racecourse company could not sell the racecourse without informing the canal company of the actual cash price offered by an intending purchaser, and offering it to the canal company at that price; (3) that this right of the canal company of first refusal could be enforced against an intending purchaser with notice.—MANCHESTER SHIP CANAL CO. v. MANCHESTER RACECOURSE CO., Ch.D. Farwell, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 352.

11. Implied warranty—Hire of chattel—Breach of warranty of fitness — Damage to third person—Remoteness.—The defendant supplied sacks to the plaintiffs for the purpose of being used in unloading a cargo of peas from a ship. One of these sacks, while it was being hoisted full of peas from the hold of the ship, broke and fell and injured a man who was engaged in the work. The injured man recovered from the plaintiffs £25 damages and costs. The sack in question, when supplied by the defendant, was unfit for the purpose for which it was supplied.

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover, as damages for breach of warranty, the damages and costs which they had incurred.—VOGAN v. OULTON, C.A.; 81 L. T. 435.

12. Impossibility of performance—Implied condition.—By a contract made in October, 1899, the defendants sold to the plaintiffs a cargo of cotton-seed, to be shipped at certain Egyptian ports during the month of January, 1900, per steamship Orlando, and to be delivered to the plaintiffs in the United Kingdom. The contract provided that, "In case of prohibition of export, blockade, or hostilities, preventing shipment, this contract or any unfulfilled part thereof is to be cancelled." In December, 1899, The Orlando was, without default on the part of the defendants, stranded, and was so much damaged as to render it impossible for her to arrive at the ports of loading before the end of January; and on the 20th of December notice of that fact was given to the plaintiffs. Upon receipt of that notice the plaintiffs might have bought in the market another cargo of cotton-seed in substitution for that sold to them by the defendants, but they declined to do so. The market was rising, and by the end of January the market price had risen considerably above the point at which it stood at the time when the plaintiffs had notice of the stranding. The plaintiffs sued the defendants for breach of their contract, claiming as damages the difference between the contract price and the market price at the end of January.

Held, that the contract must be read as subject to an implied condition that, in the event of the ship not arriving at the ports of loading within the stipulated time in a fit state to receive the cargo, the contract should be treated as at an end; that the implication of that condition was not excluded by the clause expressly providing for the cancellation of the contract in the specified events; and that the defendants were not liable.—NICKOLL v. ASHTON, Q.B.D.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 298; 69 L. J. Q. B. 640; 82 L. T. 761.

13. Offer—Acceptance by post—Withdrawal of offer before acceptance — Company — Shares —Companies Act, 1862, ss. 35, 39, 62.—J. applied for shares in a company, but before the letter of allotment was posted—except by being delivered to a postman in a London street to be posted by him—a letter withdrawing his application was delivered at the company's registered office and opened by the secretary. By the rules of the post office town postmen are forbidden to take charge of letters for the post.

Held, that the withdrawal was received by the company before the allotment letter was posted, and that there was no contract by J. to take the shares.—LONDON AND NORTHERN BANK, RE, JONES, EX PARTE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1900] 1 Ch. 220; 69 L. J. Ch. 24; 81 L. T. 512.

14. Penalty or liquidated damages—Contract in two separate parts.—A contractor agreed with the owner of a house to carry out certain work for an electric light installation in the house in accordance with a certain specification for a fixed sum, and consented to pay £5 as liquidated damages for each day exceeding the number of days within which the work had to be completed.

By the specification the wiring was to be handed over to the owner of the house in faultless condition within twenty days from the signing of the contract, and the fittings (which the house owner was to supply) were to be fixed and handed over in similar condition within fourteen days of their delivery by the owner of the house to the contractor.

Held, that the £5 was agreed upon as liquidated damages for each day's delay in executing each part of the contract, the times limited in the contract being two separate periods at the expiration of each of which the damages began to accrue.—STEGMANN v. O'CONNOR, C.A.; 81 L. T. 627.

15. Principal and agent—Authority of agent—

Lump sum — Variation — Ratification.—Where the plaintiffs contracted with the agent of an absent shipowner to effect certain specified repairs (all confined to damage by stranding), and instead of doing the work as stipulated alleged that they had, on the agent's authority, done the equivalent thereto or better, and in the same contract stipulated that they should be paid for repairs due to deterioration at scheduled prices stated by them.

Held, that, it appearing that the agent's authority to their knowledge was limited to the said specified repairs, they could not recover on the contract, which was an entire one, and in its entirety had never been performed.

Held, further, that the fact of the shipowner having taken the ship as repaired and sold did not ratify the contract.

Appleby v. Myers, L. R. 2 C. P. 651, followed.—FORMAN v. THE SHIP "LIDDESDALE," P.C.; [1900] A. C. 190; 69 L. J. P. C. 44; 82 L. T. 331.

16. Restraint of trade—Master and servant—Hay and corn dealers—Limit of space—No limit of time—Reasonableness—Assignment of benefit of contract—Injunction.—The defendant was in the employ of the plaintiffs' predecessors in business, who were hay and corn dealers, as salesman and manager of one of their branches, at a salary of 24s. per week, with the use of four living rooms over the shop.

In consideration of a small increase by way of commission in his salary, he undertook in the event of ceasing to represent his employers "not to enter into business for myself, or with others, or with any other firm within a radius of two miles from the shop in which I have been engaged."

The agreement was written out on the firm's business paper, which stated the nature of the business.

Held, that the agreement must be construed with reference to the scope of the business, and not in a wide sense so as to render it void; that, although unlimited as to time, it was in the circumstances unreasonable; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction restraining a breach.—HOOD v. JONES, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; 81 L. T. 169.

17. Telegraphic code—Mistake—Onus probandi.—Where parties have corresponded by means of a telegraphic code, it is for the plaintiff in an action for breach of contract to show that the offer made by him and accepted by the defendant is so clear that the defendant cannot be heard to say that he misunderstood it. It is not a matter for the court to construe.—FALCK v. WILLIAMS, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 176; 69 L. J. P. C. 17.

See also Company, 5, 12, 14, 21-26; Frauds, Statute of, 1-3; Inland Revenue, 25; Lunacy, 2; Married Woman, 4; Practice, 6; Principal or Agent, 2; Sale of Goods, 1, 2; Ship, 1, 6, 14; Vendor and Purchaser, 3.

CONVERSION.—See Banker, 2; Bankruptcy, 8; Trover.

CONVEYANCING ACTS.—See Landlord and Tenant, 9, 13, 15, 18, 19, 22; Merger, 2; Mortgage, 5, 7, 9, 13; Vendor and Purchaser, 5, 18, 23; Will, 6.

COPYHOLD.—See Limitation Statutes, 3.

COPYRIGHT:—

1. Artistic copyright—Infringement by printer who is mere agent—Fine Arts Copyright Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 68), s. 6.—International copyright—Infringement—Nature of remedies—International Copyright Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 33), s. 2, sub-section 3—Minimum penalty—Costs.—Printers who infringe artistic copyright, though only as mere agents, are equally liable with their principals to penalties under section 6 of the Fine Arts Copyright Act, 1862. An owner of international copyright is not restricted under section 2, sub-section 3, of the International Copyright Act, 1886, in case of infringement in a foreign country, to the remedies available for infringement in the country of origin. A farthing is the minimum penalty that will be inflicted in a court of justice. Where in an action for infringement of copyright the defendant is guilty of infringement, but the plaintiff is held not to be entitled to any remedy in a court of equity because of his own misconduct, the action will be dismissed without costs.—BASCHET v. LONDON ILLUSTRATED STANDARD CO., Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 56; [1900] 1 Ch. 73; 69 L. J. Ch. 35; 81 L. T. 509.

2. Infringement — Book — Sheet of Music—Perforated sheets for use in a mechanical instrument—Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), ss. 2, 15.—A copy is that which comes so near the original as to give every person seeing it the idea of the original. Things, therefore, which are used for purposes wholly and fundamentally distinct from those of their originals are not copies of such originals within the meaning of the Copyright Act, 1842. Nor do they become copies within the Act because they might possibly be used for the purposes of their originals, so long as no such use is either intended or made.

The plaintiffs were proprietors of the copyright of certain sheets of music. The defendants sold certain perforated sheets to be used as part of a mechanical instrument for the production of musical sounds. It was possible to read the notes of the perforated sheets. Certain words indicating time and expression, which were taken from the plaintiffs' sheets of music, were printed on the perforated sheets.

Held, (1) that the perforated sheets, being part of a mechanical instrument, were not copies of the plaintiffs' sheets of music within the meaning of the Copyright Act, 1842; and (2) that the plaintiffs' copyright was not infringed by the printed words on the perforated sheets, as these were only of use as directions for working the mechanical instrument.

Judgment of Stirling, J. (47 W. R. 554, [1899] 1 Ch. 836), affirmed on the first point, and reversed on the second point.—BOOSEY v. WHIGHT, C.A., 228; [1900] 1 Ch. 122; 69 L. J. C. H. 66; 81 L. T. 571.

3. Penalties—Number of offences—"Sum not exceeding £10"—Minimum sum—Artistic Copyright Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 68), s. 6.—The copyright in certain pictures was infringed by the distribution of over a million copies, which altogether cost to produce not more than £120. Upon summons to fix the amount of the penalties payable under section 6 of the Artistic Copyright Act, 1862.

Held, that each copy constituted a separate offence, for which the minimum sum which the which the court could impose as a penalty was one farthing.—HILDESHEIMER v. FAULKNER, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 682.

4. Verbatim report of speech—"Author"—Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45).—A reporter who takes down a speech in shorthand and afterwards corrects it for publication, making the most accurate report he can of the speaker's words, is not an "author" within the meaning of the Copyright Act, 1842; though a reporter who recasts a speech, giving the substance of it in his own language, would be.

In the former case, therefore, neither the reporter nor his assignee can acquire copyright in the report by first publication.—WALTER v. LANE, C.A., 218; [1899] 2 Ch. 749; 81 L. T. 395.

CORPORATION.—See Contract, 8; Criminal Law, 1; Local Government, 2; Malicious Prosecution; Tramway, 1.

COSTS.—See Administration, 4, 6, 7; Arbitration, 3, 4; Company, 29, 41; Contract, 1; Copyright, 1, 3; County Court; Criminal Law, 1; Divorce, 20; Justices, 3; Local Government, 3, 7; Mortgage, 2; Partition, 3; Practice, 2, 13-23, 36, 41, 47; Railway, 5; Scotland, Law of, 1; Settlement, 6; Solicitor, 2-10, 13; Trustee, 3; Vendor and Purchaser, 6.

COUNTY COURT:—

Costs—Remitted action—Judgment under order 14 for part of claim—Judgment for defendant in county court—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), ss. 65, 113.—In an action brought in the High Court to recover £20 2s. as the price of goods sold and delivered, an order was made under order 14 by which leave was given to the plaintiffs to sign judgment for £8 14s. if that amount was not paid within seven days, and leave was given to the defendant to defend as to the residue of the claim, and it was ordered, under section 65 of the County Courts Act, 1888, that the action should be tried in the county court. The defendant paid the sum of £8 14s. under the order, and at the trial in the county court judgment was given for him, no order being made as to costs.

Held, that, the plaintiffs having succeeded in the action in recovering the sum of £8 14s. the defendant was not entitled to costs, although he had obtained judgment in the county court.—WRIGHT & SONS v. BULL, Q.B.D.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 124; 69 L. J. Q. B. 529; 82 L. T. 568.

See also Gas; Landlord and Tenant, 2; Practice, 2, 18.

CRIMINAL LAW:—

1. Costs—Right of defendant to costs on acquittal—Municipal Elections (Corrupt and Illegal Practices) Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 70), s. 30—Corrupt Practices Prevention Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 102), s. 12—Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 51), s. 53.—Where an indictment is preferred by a private prosecutor under the Municipal Elections (Corrupt and Illegal Practices) Act, 1884, for corrupt practices at a municipal election, the defendant, if acquitted, has the right to recover from the prosecutor the costs sustained by him by reason of such indictment.—REG. v. LAW, Q.B.D., 411; [1900] 1 Q. B. 605; 69 L. J. Q. B. 348; 82 L. T. 145.

2. Evidence—Evidence of accused person—Previous convictions and cross-examination as to—Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 41), ss. 1, 12—Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), s. 1, sub-section (f); s. 6.—By section 1 (f) of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, it is provided that a person charged and called as a witness in pursuance of that Act shall not, with certain exceptions, be required to answer any question as to his previous conviction; and section 6 provides that "this Act shall apply to all criminal proceedings notwithstanding any enactment in force at the commencement of this Act. . . ."

The appellant was charged before a court of summary jurisdiction with an offence under the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894, section 12 of which Act provides that in any proceeding against any person for an offence under that Act such person shall be competent, but not compellable, to give evidence. He gave evidence on his own behalf, and in cross-examination was asked whether he had been previously convicted of an offence under the same Act. He answered in the affirmative. The justices convicted him.

Held, that the evidence as to the appellant's previous conviction was not admissible, and therefore that the conviction was bad.

Section 1 of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, applied.—CHARNOCK v. MERCHANT, Q.B.D., 334; [1900] 1 Q. B. 474; 69 L. J. Q. B. 221; 82 L. T. 89.

3. False pretences — Remoteness — Competitor in handicap race—False statements as to previous performances as a runner—Attempt to obtain prize.—The defendant was convicted of attempting to obtain prizes for foot-races by false pretences. At the trial it was proved that entries for two races at an athletic meeting were made in the name of one Sims, and that such entries contained correct statements as to the recent performances of Sims as a runner, including a statement that he had never won a race. The entries were not written either by Sims or by the defendant. At the meeting the defendant ran in the races in the name of Sims. By reason of the statements in the entries he obtained long starts. He was in fact a superior runner, and won both races. After the races he falsely stated, in reply to questions put to him by the handicapper, that he really was Sims, and that the statements in the entries were true statements as to his performances. He did not apply to have the prizes handed over to him.

Held, that there was evidence for the jury of an attempt to obtain the prizes by false pretences, and that the attempt was not too remote from the pretence; and that the defendant was properly convicted.

Reg. v. Larner, 14 Cox C. C. 497, disapproved.—REG. v. BUTTON, C.C.R., 703.

4. Husband and wife—Receiving stolen goods—Joint indictment—Separate receiving—Receiving part of stolen property—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 94.—Coverture is no defence to a criminal charge. A husband and wife were jointly indicted for receiving stolen goods. There was evidence that the wife had received part of the stolen property from one of the thieves; there was no evidence that the husband was present at the time, and there was no evidence that the wife was acting under his compulsion.

Held, that the wife was properly convicted of receiving stolen goods.—REG. v. BAINES, C.C.R.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 681; 82 L. T. 724.

5. Larceny—Beneficial owner—Co-owner—One of two or more beneficial owners—Misappropriation of fund by person interested therein—31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, s. 1.—Any person who has an interest in a sum of money is a "beneficial owner" within the meaning of the Larceny Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 116), s. 1. Where, then, a number of persons have a right to have a fund applied to the extinction of their liability under a guarantee, these persons are all "beneficial owners," and any one of them who misappropriates the fund to his own use may be properly convicted of stealing it.

A. was a member and acted as the secretary of a committee which had guaranteed the expenses of an entertainment. He in the discharge of his duty obtained possession of the entrance moneys, and paid the amount into the banking account of one

B. Subsequently, by means of false representations, he obtained a cheque for the amount from B., cashed it, and absconded with the proceeds.

Held, that he was properly convicted under 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, s. 1, of stealing moneys of which he with others was the beneficial owner.

Held, also, that a count in the indictment which charged that A. had stolen the moneys of the members of the committee was bad.—REG v. NEAT, C.C.R.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 118; 81 L. T. 680.

6. Receiving stolen goods—Property stolen by wife from husband—Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 91—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), ss. 12, 16.—A woman and her paramour were indicted under the Larceny Act, 1861, for stealing certain goods, and also for receiving the same knowing it to have been stolen. The goods were the property of the woman's husband. The woman was found guilty of stealing the goods, and the man of receiving them.

Held, that, as the stealing by a woman of her husband's goods did not amount to a felony either at common law or by virtue of the Larceny Act, 1861, but was only made criminal by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the man could not properly be convicted under section 91 of the Larceny Act, 1861, of the offence of receiving.

Reg. v. Smith, 18 W. R. 932, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 266, followed.—REG. v. STREETER, C.C.R., 702.

CROWN:—

Prerogative—Right to remove proceedings to the Revenue side—Right to apply to stay proceedings.—It is part of the prerogative of the Crown to have an action between its subjects in which the title or interests of the Crown is concerned, in whatever stage such action may be, removed from the county court into the Revenue side of the Queen's Bench Division; and, where an information is filed by the Attorney-General raising the same question as that to be decided in such an action, the Crown has the right to apply to have the action stayed until the information is determined, and such application may be made after judgment has been delivered in the action.—STANLEY OF ALDERLEY (LORD) v. WILD, C.A., 242; [1900] 1 Q. B. 256; 69 L. J. Q. B 318; 82 L. T. 14.

See also Foreshore; Practice, 6.

DAMAGES.—See Company, 8; Contract, 11, 14; Divorce, 7; Landlord and Tenant, 11, 16; Nuisance, 1; Patent, 3, 4; Ship, 23-26; Vendor and Purchaser, 17, 25; Water, 1.

DEED.—See Railway, 6.

DIVORCE:—

1. Desertion—Adultery by husband—Offer of forgiveness if discontinued—Continuance of adultery insisted on—Refusal by wife to continue cohabitation—Separation.—To constitute desertion there must be a cessation of cohabitation and an intention on the part of the accused party to desert the other; it is not always or necessarily the guilty party who leaves the matrimonial home.

A husband was committing acts of adultery which, on discovery by his wife, he admitted had continued from the time of the marriage, and he refused to discontinue these acts, although his wife said she could not live with him unless he did so; and they separated and lived apart for more than two years, when a suit was commenced by the wife for dissolution on the ground of adultery and desertion for more than two years.

Held, that the husband had been guilty of desertion.—SICKERT v. SICKERT, P.D. & Ad.D., 268; [1899] P. 278; 81 L. T. 495.

2. Desertion—Refusal by wife, without cause, of marital intercourse—Subsequent adultery of husband—Wife's desertion no bar to relief.—A wife who without cause refuses to permit marital intercourse to her husband, cannot allege desertion without reasonable cause by him if in consequence he refuses to live with her; in such case it is the wife who is guilty of desertion without reasonable cause. Desertion without reasonable cause for two years and upwards is no bar to a petition for judicial separation on the ground of subsequent adultery.—SYNGE v. SYNGE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1900] P. 180.

3. Judicial discretion—Adultery of the wife—Cruelty of the husband—Discretional bar—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 31—Decree.—The discretion conferred upon judges of the Divorce Court by section 31 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, is not an absolute or arbitrary, but a judicial discretion, and is intended to be exercised in conformity with the former practice of the House of Lords. Cruelty on the part of a petitioner, in order to bar a claim for a divorce, must either have led to the adultery of the respondent, or be entirely wanton and unprovoked in its character.

In considering what terms should be imposed upon a petitioner who has been found guilty of cruelty towards the respondent, the court takes into consideration all the facts of the particular case before it, and considers the interests not merely of the parties, but of the child or children (if any) of the marriage.

Where the means of the petitioner (husband) were very small and uncertain, and the respondent's parents, whose character and goodwill were unquestioned, had offered to look after the only child of the marriage, the court, in granting a decree, assented to an arrangement which had been arrived at between the parties subsequently to the verdict, whereby the formal custody of the child was given to the respondent and no allowance was ordered against the petitioner.—PRYOR v. PRYOR, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1900] P. 157; 69 L. J. P. 99.

4. Nullity of marriage—Impotence—No possibility of children—Power to vary settlements—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 108), s. 5—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 19), s. 3.—The powers of the court under section 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859, and section 3 of the Act of 1878, can be exercised in the case of a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground of impotence, and are not confined to cases where there are or might have been children.

The words "property settled" in section 5 of the Act of 1859 refer only to the property the benefit of which is by the marriage settlement conferred on the parties or their children in the ordinary way.

There is no power to bring into settlement a fund or estate which is not to come into settlement until a certain event happens—before it happens, in fact.

The ordinary practice of the court of ordering a settlement to be read as if a party to it were already dead is merely a convenient method of carrying out what otherwise the court has power to do, and cannot be used for the purpose of evading the rule as stated above.—DORMER (OTHERWISE WARD) v. WARD, P.D. & Ad.D., 524; [1900] P. 130; 69 L. J. P. 65; 82 L. T. 469.

5. Practice—Dismissal by consent.—An application to dismiss a petition for dissolution by consent ought now to be made by summons in chambers and not by motion in open court.—SLATER v. SLATER, P.D. & Ad.D.; 69 L. J. P. 48.

6. Practice—Evidence—Admissibility—Adultery subsequent to date of petition.—Evidence of acts of adultery subsequent to the date of the petition may be admitted for the purpose of showing what inference the court ought to draw from evidence of previous acts of familiarity.—WALES v. WALES, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1900] P. 63; 69 L. J. P. 34.

7. Practice—Evidence—Onus of proof that respondent was a married woman—Damages.—The onus of proof that the co-respondent knew that the respondent was a married woman lies on the petitioner; and in the absence of proof the jury should assume that co-respondent believed that the respondent was not a married woman. Damages, however, may be recovered from a co-respondent whether he knew the respondent was a married woman or not.—LORD v. LORD, P.D. & Ad.D.; 69 L. J. P. 54.

8. Practice—Justices—Appeal—Notes of proceedings in court below—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39).—Upon appeals under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, two copies of the notes of proceedings in the court below ought to be provided for the use of this court by the appellant, and the costs will be allowed on taxation.—WALTON v. WALTON, P.D. & Ad.D., 622; [1900] P. 147; 69 L. J. P. 54; 82 L. T. 627.

9. Practice—Justices—Appeal—Notes on proceedings in court below—Duties of magistrates' and justices' clerks—Right of either party to a copy of notes—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39).—Upon the hearing of every summons under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, it is the duty of the clerk to the magistrate or justices to make a note, not only of the evidence and of the decision arrived at, but also of the reasons for arriving at the decision, and to furnish a copy of the note upon the application of either party.—COBB v. COBB, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1900] P. 145; 69 L. J. P. 52; 82 L. T. 626.

10. Practice — Justices — Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39)—Case remitted to justices—Wife's costs.—A deed of separation is conclusive evidence on the question whether the husband has neglected to maintain his wife.

Where a wife has obtained a decision in her favour under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, and comes to the High Court to support it, she will have her costs.—MEDWAY v. MEDWAY, P.D. & Ad.D., 622; [1900] P. 141; 69 L. J. P. 56; 82 L. T. 627.

11. Practice—Justices—Desertion—Evidence—Proof of desertion—Antecedent circumstances—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895.—On a certain date a wife, living apart from her husband, went to his house, accompanied by a policeman, and asked to be taken back. The husband refused. The wife took out a summons for desertion under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895. At the hearing of the summons the justices refused to consider evidence tendered by the husband of circumstances prior to the date of the wife's demand and the husband's refusal, held that the refusal constituted desertion, and the husband ordered to pay weekly maintenance to the wife. The husband appealed.

Held, that the magistrates were wrong in rejecting the evidence tendered by the husband; that the refusal to take back the wife did not necessarily in itself amount to desertion; and that the case ought to be remitted to the justices.—WASSELL v. WASSELL, P.D. & Ad.D.; 81 L. T. 496.

12. Practice—Justices—Rescinding separation order—"Fresh evidence"—Definition—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39), ss. 4, 7.—"Fresh evidence" within the meaning of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, s. 7, to confer jurisdiction to rescind a separation order previously made under section 4 must be such as would afford ground for a new trial or rehearing in any other class of case. It must be evidence which could not reasonably have been made available at the date of the order, or it must relate to something which has happened since the date of the order, and which affords ground for revision within the terms of the Act under which the order was made.—JOHNSON v. JOHNSON, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1900] P. 19; 69 L. J. P. 13; 81 L. T. 791.

13. Practice — Marriage — Colonial marriage — Evidence.—Where, upon the hearing of a petition to dissolve a marriage which had been celebrated in the Colony of Hong Kong, it was stated on behalf of the petitioner that the only legal expert available to give evidence of the validity of the marriage, according to the laws and ordinances of Hong Kong, demanded a prohibitive fee, the court gave leave to prove the marriage by reading an affidavit of an ex-Governor of the Colony, who was not a member of the legal profession, but who deposed that he was conversant with the laws and ordinances in force in the Colony.—COOPER-KING v. COOPER-KING, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1900] P. 65; 69 L. J. P. 33.

14. Practice — Marriage — Proof of marriage—Marriage in Ireland—Copy of an entry in the register of marriages in Protestant Episcopalian Church of Ireland—Matrimonial Causes (Ireland) Act, 1870, ss. 32, 33.—A copy of an entry in the register of marriages, duly certified by the clergyman of the church where the marriage so registered has been solemnized, is sufficient to prove a lawful marriage according to the rites and ceremonies of the Protestant Episcopalian Church of Ireland.—WHITTON v. WHITTON, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1900] P. 178.

15. Practice—Petition for restitution of conjugal rights — Cross-petition for dissolution — Onus probandi—Right to begin.—Where a wife petitioned for restitution of conjugal rights, and the husband in answer alleged that she had committed adultery, and in a cross-petition claimed a divorce on that ground,

Held, that the husband's counsel ought to begin.—SMITH v. SMITH, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1900] P. 66; 69 L. J. P. 44.

16. Practice—Rehearing—Petition dismissed—New evidence.—A husband's petition was heard before a judge alone and dismissed on the ground that the evidence was insufficient. Subsequently the petitioner obtained fresh evidence, and applied for a rehearing.

Held, that a rehearing ought to be granted on the ground that the fresh evidence was sufficient to warrant a reasonable probability of a different verdict in the first and second trials if the case were tried by a jury.—TAYLOR v. TAYLOR, P.D. & Ad.D.; 81 L. T. 494.

17. Practice—Respondent of unsound mind not so found—No appearance—Notice to official solicitor.—Where the respondent, the husband, in a suit for dissolution, was a person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition, and the suit was in formâ pauperis, the court, before making the decree, required notice of the proceedings to be formally given to the official s licitor.—GILES v. GILES, P.D. & Ad.D., 288; [1900] P. 17; 69 L. J. P. 26; 81 L. T 823.

18. Previous suit for restitution of conjugal rights —Decree in restitution suit—Husband temporarily resident out of the jurisdiction—Service of decree—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 68). —Where the respondent in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights was domiciled in this country, but temporarily resident in Ireland, was served in Ireland, and the court considered he was in a position to be able to comply with it, the court held that the service was good.—DICKS v. DICKS, P.D. & Ad.D., 302; [1899] P. 275; 81 L. T. 462.

19. Separation — Agreement — Intercourse while living apart—Evidence of cohabitation.—Husband and wife entered into a deed of separation under which the husband covenanted to pay a weekly sum to the wife during their joint lives if they should so long live separate from one another. While they were living apart, acts of connubial intercourse took place. In an action by the wife to recover arrears of payments due under the deed, Held, that the fact that intercourse had taken place was not of itself conclusive evidence that the separation had come to an end so as to make the deed of no effect.—ROWELL v. ROWELL, C.A.; [1900] 1 Q. B. 9; 69 L. J. Q. B. 55; 81 L. T. 429.

20. Separation deed—Married woman—Suit to set aside deed—Practice—Formâ pauperis appeal—Costs. —A deed of separation and annuity will not be set aside at the instance of the husband on the ground of fraudulent representations by the wife as to her innocence, which were discredited by the husband at the time of the execution of the deed; nor on the ground of subsequent adultery of the wife, when the deed contained no condition as to chastity.

Where an appellant in formâ pauperis is successful in a Privy Council appeal, such appellant is entitled to such costs of the appeal as he would be entitled to according to the rule which prevails in the House of Lords.—WASTENEYS v, WASTENEYS, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 446.

See also Peer.

DOMICIL:—

1. Husband and wife—Matrimonial domicil—French law—Contract of marriage—Movable goods—Change of domicil—Community of goods.—Two French subjects, born and domiciled in France, married there without a contract of marriage, and became, therefore, subject to the system of "community of goods." They afterwards acquired an English domicil, and the husband died in this country possessed of movable property.

Held, that the change of domicil did not affect the rights acquired by their marriage in France, and consequently the French law of "community of goods" was still applicable; so that the husband's power of disposition by will was limited to a moiety.

Decision of Court of Appeal. In re De Nicols, De Nicols v. Curlier, 46 W. R. 532, [1898] 2 Ch. 60, reversed.

Lashley v. Hog, 4 Paton's Sc. App. Cas. 581, distinguished.—DE NICOLS v. CURLIER, H.L., 269; [1900] A. C. 21; 69 L. J. Ch. 109; 81 L. T. 733.

2. Marriage according to French law—Community of goods—Subsequent English domicil—After-acquired real estate.—The principle of the decision in De Nicols v. Curlier, ante, p. 269, [1900] A. C. 21, is applicable to real estate in England.

Where, therefore, two French subjects domiciled in France married there without a contract of marriage, and afterwards acquired an English domicil,

Held, that the rights acquired by the marriage under the French law of "community of goods" extended to freehold and leasehold property in England acquired by the husband, and therefore his power to dispose of them by will was limited to a moiety.—DE NICOLS, RE, DE NICOLS v. CURLIER, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 602; 82 L. T. 840.

See also Married Woman, 2; Master and Servant, 1; Settlement, 2; Will, 14-17.

DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA:—

Possession—Dominion.—In order to constitute a valid donatio mortis causa, the donor must not merely part with the possession of, but also with the dominion over, the thing given.

Held, that there had not been a valid donatio mortis causa.—DASH, RE, SOLICITOR TO THE TREASURY v. LEWIS, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 694.

EASEMENT:—

1. Light—Ancient lights—Obstruction—Alteration of dominant tenement—Abandonment—Evidence—Undertaking—Prescription Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), ss. 1, 3, 4.—Where a substantial quantity of useful light, which would have passed through portions of old windows of a building if they still existed, now penetrated through the corresponding portions of new windows, the temporary use of interior boarding and shelving, by which a material interference with the light had been caused, is a mere discontinuance of user, and not an adverse obstruction or "interruption" within the meaning of sections 3 and 4 of the Prescription Act.

It is not necessary, in order to the acquisition of a right to the access of light under the said section 3, that the building should be occupied or fit for occupation during the specified period: Courtauld v. Legh, 17 W. R. 466, L. R. 4 Ex. 126, and Collis v. Laugher, 43 W. R. 202, [1894] 3 Ch. 659. Continuous user is not necessary: Cooper v. Straker, 37 W. R. 137, 40 Ch. D. 21. Fixedness and mobility of obstacles are elements to be considered, but the decision must turn on all the circumstances of each case.

Evidence of the intention of those who rebuild to preserve ancient lights is admissible (Newson v. Pender, 33 W. R. 243, 27 Ch. D. 43), but may be unnecessary (Scott v. Pape, 34 W. R. 465, 31 Ch. D. 554).

Per Stirling, J.—(1) Non-user which would not be sufficient to establish an abandonment of a right acquired may be enough to prevent the acquisition of the right under the Prescription Act; (2) the user or non-user cannot be entirely determined by simply considering whether an obstacle interposed to the light is fixed or movable. —SMITH v. BAXTER, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 458; [1900] 2 Ch. 138; 69 L. J. Ch. 437; 82 L. T. 650.

2. Right of support—Adjacent land—Asphaltum or pitch.—The right of support from adjacent land which will keep the surface from subsidence still exists, though the land supported consists of asphaltum, for the nature of the strata is an immaterial consideration.—TRINIDAD ASPHALT CO. v. AMBARD, P.C., 116; [1899] A. C. 594; 81 L. T. 132.

3. Right of way—Payment of rent—Uninterrupted enjoyment of over forty years—Parol licence—Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 2.—Where a licence to use a way across a yard was given by parol more than forty years before action brought, and where such licence was subject to the payment of an annual rent,

Held, that, in the absence of any proof of a "consent or agreement expressly given or made for that purpose by deed or writing," the uninterrupted enjoyment of the easement for over forty years gave an absolute and indefeasible right to the use of the way.—GARDNER v. HODGSON'S KINGSTON BREWERIES Co., Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 469; [1900] 1 Ch. 592; 69 L. J. Ch. 368; 82 L. T. 455.

4. Right of way—Pier constructed under statutory powers—Right to stray on and off pier—Rights of bathing, fishing, and other purposes of recreation—Dedication—Lost grant—Evidence of user—Intention—Obstructions and interruptions.—The plaintiffs, the Improvement Commissioners of the River T., acquired certain lands and constructed a pier under statutory powers, the work being done at intervals between the years 1854 and 1891. The public were in the habit of using the pier as a promenade and for various purposes of pleasure and recreation, and the plaintiffs alleged that they never desired nor intended to prevent the public from so using it as a matter of favour. Finding, however, that a claim as of right was being set up, the plaintiffs on the 21st of December, 1897, placed barriers across the landward end of the pier, and ordered the pier to be closed for twenty-four hours. Thereupon the mayor and other officers of the adjoining borough of S. S., being refused admission, broke down the barriers and also certain permanent gates across the pier. The plaintiffs now sued them for the trespass. At the same time an action was brought against the commissioners in the name of the Attorney-General alleging that the said pier and the several parts thereof had been from time to time dedicated to the use of and accepted by the public as a common and public highway, and had been and were used by the public for the purposes of boating, bathing, fishing, embarking, disembarking, recreation, and other lawful purposes (with power to stray on and off the sands at the side of the pier), and alleging, in the alternative, a lost grant to the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of S. S. for the benefit of themselves and the inhabitants of S. S., and claiming a declaration that the public and the inhabitants of S. S. were entitled to exercise such right of way and such other rights.

Held, (1) that a right of way could exist over a structure erected under statutory powers; and (2) that an owner might dedicate his land for purposes of recreation; but (3) that a licence to stray on and off a right of way required such a case to prove it that it could practically never be proved; and (4) that the plea of a lost grant could not be maintained.

Held, on the facts, that the various obstructions erected from time to time by the plaintiffs with the object of saving their rights had been a sufficient assertion of their rights.

Held also, on the facts, that the plaintiffs must be presumed to have dedicated a simple right of way within certain assigned limits.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. TYNE IMPROVEMENT COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D.; 81 L. T. 174.

5. Right of way—Undefined—No user—Method of defining.—In 1878 the Corporation of London, with the privity of the Great Western Railway Co., leased to the Metropolitan Railway Co. the northern part of a railway station for 100 years, together with a right of way from time to time and at all times over the southern part of the station (which was demised by the corporation to the Great Western Railway Co.) through a circular road. The way was not definitely described; it was never in fact used by the Metropolitan Railway Co. In 1897 the Metropolitan Railway Co. desired to make use of their right of way, and now brought an action to enforce it. The station was substantially in the same state as it was in 1878.

Held, that the right of way was still valid and must be defined by the defendant company; failing them, by the plaintiffs. Further, that interference with the business of the Great Western Railway Co. by reason of the user of the right of way was no answer to the claim.—METROPOLITAN RAILWAY Co. v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY Co., Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 82 L. T. 451.

6. Way of necessity—Vendor and purchaser—Land sold not entirely "landlocked" by other land of vendor—Implied grant.—Where land is sold which is surrounded, partly by other land of the vendor, but partly by the land of a stranger, a grant of a right of way, as of necessity, will not be implied over the other land of the vendor.—TITCHMARSH v. ROYSTON WATER Co., Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 201; 81 L. T. 673.

See also Mortgage, 13.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW:—

1. Clergy—Discipline—Practice—Appeal—Special leave—Clergy Discipline Act, 1892, s. 4 (2).—Leave to appeal will not be given under section 4, subsection 2 of the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892, in respect of the facts unless there is a primâ facie case; in the absence of even a suggestion to that effect, an application for leave to appeal is frivolous.—EVANS v. WOODS, WOODS, EX PARTE, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 338.

2. Faculty—Disused burial ground, faculty for erection of churchyard wall with arcade on—Disused Burial Grounds Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 72), s. 3—Open Spaces Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 32), ss. 4, 14—Meaning of "building"—Refusal of faculty for pictures at east end of chancel of parish church—Discretion—Wishes of parishioners—Evidence—Memorials.—A faculty for the erection on a disused burial ground of a churchyard wall, one side of which would be so built as to form an arcade or covered way for the protection from the weather of frescoes proposed to be painted on the panels of that side of the wall which would be inside the churchyard, was granted, the Ordinary being of opinion that the wall or structure in question was not a "building" prohibited to be erected on a disused burial ground by the Disused Burial Grounds Act, 1884, and the Open Spaces Act, 1887.

Where the vestry of a parish and the petitioners are unanimous, or substantially so, in favour of accepting a presentation picture of merit for the decoration of their parish church, the introduction of the picture into the church may be properly sanctioned by a faculty, unless the picture appears to be likely to be abused by superstitious reverence, or be otherwise inappropriate in a church, or be such as might reasonably give offence to present or future parishioners; but where it was proposed that such a picture should be introduced into the church of an admirably worked parish, and conscientious objections which might be entertained by members of the congregation, without disparagement to the views of others in favour of it, were taken to it as a church decoration by a substantial minority of resident parishioners who were members of the Church of England, and it appeared that its introduction into the church would offend the religious feelings of that minority and introduce discord into the parish where it had never existed before, it was held to be the duty of the court to refuse to grant a faculty for its introduction.

Instance of a faculty suit in which memorials and counter-memorials signed by parishioners were admitted in evidence by consent.—VICAR OF ST. BOTOLPH, ALDERSGATE WITHOUT v. PARISHIONERS OF SAME, Consistory Court of London; [1900] P. 69.

3. Faculty—Interest requisite for promotion of faculty suit—Parishioners having names on rate-book—Ornaments of the church—Architectural decorations—Crucifixes—Ornaments Rubric—3 & 4 Edw. 6, c. 10—Refusal of confirmatory faculty—Churchwardens—Undertaking to replace Tables of Commandments—Canon 82 of Canons of 1603—Tabernacle for reception of Reserved Sacrament.—A crucifix is neither a lawful church ornament nor an architectural decoration the retention of which in a church can be authorized by faculty, and where a crucifix has been introduced into a parish church the Ordinary has jurisdiction to direct its removal by the churchwardens without proof that it is likely to have superstitious reverence paid to it.

A parishioner of a parish in the City of London whose name is on the rate-book as occupier of a room in the parish taken solely to enable him to bring a civil suit in the court, has a sufficient interest to promote a cause of faculty to obtain the removal of unlawful church ornaments out of the parish church of the parish of which he is a parishioner.—KENSIT v. RECTOR OF ST. ETHELBURGA, Consistory Court of London; [1900] P. 80.

EDUCATION.—See School, 1.

ELECTION LAW:—

1. Registration—Parliament—Notice of objection—Division of district or borough into wards—Omission of notice to specify ward of person objected to—Registration Order, 1895, Schedule II., Form I.—A notice of objection to the overseers objecting to the name of a person being retained on the occupiers' list of voters of a Parliamentary division and borough in which the lists are made out in divisions and also in wards need not specify the ward on the list of voters whereof the name of the person objected to appears, in addition to specifying the division in which such name appears.—SAGAR v. CLARE, Q.B.D.; 82 L. T. 599.

2. Registration—Parochial electors—Separate list—Ownership parochial electors—Claims to be on parochial electors' list—Jurisdiction of revising barrister to revise separate list and claims—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), ss. 2 (1), 44.—The Local Government Act, 1894, gives the revising barrister, in the revision of the voters' list for counties, jurisdiction to revise, and imposes upon him the duty of revising, the separate list of parochial electors, being the list of persons entitled to vote as parochial electors only in respect of the ownership of property in the parish; also the parochial electors' list of claimants who claim as ownership claimants to be entered on the separate list of parochial electors in respect of the ownership of property in the parish, and the parochial electors' lists of claimants who claim to be entered on the separate list of parochial electors in respect of the occupation of property in the parish.—REG. v. NASH, Q.B.D., 188; [1900] 1 Q. B. 103; 69 L. J. Q. B. 77; 81 L. T. 489.

See also Criminal Law, 1.

EMPLOYER and WORKMAN.—See Master and Servant, 1-28.

ESTOPPEL.—See Landlord and Tenant, 26; Metropolis, 11.

EXECUTOR.—See Inland Revenue, 21; Practice, 33; Vendor and Purchaser, 14.

FACTORY:—

Building—Upper floors factories—Lower floors not factories—Notice to owner—Staircase for escape from fire—Trespass on lower floors—Award on arbitration—Validity of—Factory and Workshop Act, 1878 (41 Vict. c. 16), s. 93—Factory and Workshop Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 75), s. 7.—A building was let by the owners before 1892 to different tenants. Upon the second, third, and fourth floors businesses were carried on which were "non-textile factories" within the Factories and Workshop Acts, but the tenants of the basement, ground, and first floors did not carry on businesses within those Acts.

In an arbitration under section 7 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1891, the owners were ordered by the award to provide a staircase and approaches thereto from the top of the building to the bottom, which would necessitate an encroachment upon the lower floors of the building.

Held, that there was no jurisdiction under the Acts to require that such alterations should be done as would necessitate such encroachment upon those floors of the building which were not factories, as only the second, third, and fourth floors were factories within the Factories and Workshops Act.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. LEWIS, Q.B.D.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 277; 82 L. T. 195.

See also Master and Servant 9, 13-17.

FALSE REPRESENTATION:—

Raid on friendly State—Illegality of common venture—Criminal offence—Claim for damages—Joint delinquents—Demurrer—Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 90), s. 11 (i.).—Where the plaintiff was induced by the fraudulent misrepresentations of the defendant to join with him and others in doing an act which in consequence of such misrepresentation he believed to be legal, but which in fact was criminal, and the plaintiff thereby suffered injury and loss,

Held, that the defendant could not set up the plea that there was no right of indemnity between joint delinquents as an answer to an action for damages by the plaintiff.—BURROWS v. RHODES, Q.B.D., 13; [1899] 1 Q. B. 816; 68 L. J. Q. B. 545; 80 L. T. 591.

See also Injunction, 2.

FINANCE ACTS.—See Administration, 1, 2; Inland Revenue, 2-9; Will, 2.

FISHERY:—

1. Salmon fishery—Illegal methods—Fixed net or engines—Hang net—Toot and haul net.—It is illegal to take salmon with any net which is at all fixed or permanent, even for a time, in the water.—ATHOLL (DUKE) v. GLOVER INCORPORATION OF PERTH. WEDDERBURN v. ATHOLL (DUKE), H.L. (Sc.); [1900] A. C. 403.

2. Salmon Fishery Acts—Unlawful taking—Trout, apparently poisoned, but still alive, taken from river by the hand—Salmon Fishery Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 71), s. 22—Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 39), s. 7.—Taking dying salmon, trout, or char from a river or stream by hand, or otherwise than by a properly-licensed instrument is an offence within section 22 of the Salmon Fishery

Act, 1873.—STEAD v. TILLOTSON, Q.B.D., 431; 69 L. J. Q. B. 240.

FOOD and DRUGS.—See Adulteration, 1-7.

FOREIGN ENLISTMENT.—See False Representation.

FORESHORE:—

Lessee from the Crown—Rights of the public—Religious meetings—Urban district council—Injunction—Trespass.—The public have no right without the consent of the Crown or its lessees to enter upon the foreshore of the sea, when dry, except for the purposes of navigation and fishing; and therefore no one is entitled to hold meetings or deliver addresses on any part of the foreshore without such consent. An injunction is a formidable legal weapon which the court will refuse to grant where the injury or inconvenience caused by the trespass is trivial.—LLANDUDNO DISTRICT COUNCIL v. WOOD, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 43; [1899] 2 Ch. 705; 81 L. T. 170.

FRAUDS, STATUTE of:—

1. Contract—Memorandum in writing—Sufficient description.—The Statute of Frauds is satisfied if the parties are sufficiently described, so that their identity cannot be fairly disputed. Thus a letter stating: "In consideration of your having this day paid me the sum of £50, I hereby agree and undertake to grant you or your assigns a further lease of twenty-four years . . . of the . . . Warden Arms . . . immediately after the expiration of the term granted by the now existing lease, . . . such new lease to be at the same rental . . . and to contain similar covenants and conditions as are contained in the existing lease," but not containing the name of the person to whom it was addressed, was held to sufficiently identify the existing tenant of the premises (who had that day paid £50 to his landlord) to satisfy the statute.—CARR v. LYNCH, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 616; [1900] 1 Ch. 613; 69 L. J. Ch. 345; 82 L. T. 381.

2. Principal and agent—Contract—Memorandum in writing—Signature by agent "thereunto lawfully authorized"—Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4.—A letter written by an agent within the scope of his authority, which refers to and recognizes an unsigned document as containing the terms of a contract made by his principal, is a sufficient memorandum of the contract within the fourth section of the Statute of Frauds, and it is not necessary, in order to satisfy the statute, that the principal should have authorized the agent to sign the letter as a record of the contract.

Smith v. Webster, 3 Ch. D. 49, discussed.—GRIFFITHS (JOHN) CYCLE CO. v. HUMBER & CO., C.A.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 414; 81 L. T. 310.

3. Vendor and purchaser—Sale of land—Agreement signed by purchaser on paper containing printed name and address of vendor—No signature by vendor—Specific performance—Action by purchaser—Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3).—An offer to purchase land written on paper containing the printed name and address of the vendor, but not signed by him, is not a sufficient memorandum of the contract to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, unless it be written at his dictation.

Schneider v. Norris, 2 M. & S. 286, and Evans v. Hoare, [1892] 1 Q. B. 593, distinguished.—HUCKLESBY v. HOOK, Ch.D. Buckley, J.; 82 L. T. 117.

See also Landlord and Tenant, 26.

GAMING:—

1. Stakeholder—Liability—Agreement by stakeholder for consideration to pay the winner the amount of the stakes—Action on the agreement—Interpleader—Construction of agreement.—In pursuance of a written agreement the two competitors in a trotting match deposited money with a stakeholder who, by a clause in the agreement, agreed with each of them that, in consideration of a commission on the total amount deposited, he would pay over to the winner a sum of money equal to the amount of the stakes actually deposited with him, after deducting commission.

Held, that under this clause, whether taken by itself or in conjunction with the other clauses of the agreement, no personal liability to pay was undertaken by the stakeholder beyond the liability ordinarily undertaken by a stakeholder.

Held, therefore, that an interpleader issue was rightly ordered in an action by one of the competitors who claimed payment from the stakeholder as winner of the match, when the other competitor also claimed to be winner.—DOWSON v. MACFARLANE, C.A.; 81 L. T. 67.

2. Wagering—Money deposited with stakeholder—Right to recover—Money paid under contract rendered void by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18—Gaming Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 9), s. 1.—Money deposited with a stakeholder to abide the event of a boxing match is not "money paid under or in respect of a contract made void by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18," and may be recovered by the depositor from the stakeholder if he has given the latter notice not to part with it.

O'Sullivan v. Thomas, 43 W. R. 269, [1895] 1 Q. B. 698, approved.—BURGE v. ASHLEY, C.A., 438; [1900] 1 Q. B. 744; 69 L. J. Q. B. 538; 82 L. T. 518.

See also Bankruptcy, 23.

GAS:—

Gas lamp—Knocking down—Proceedings in a police court—Proceedings in county court for negligence—Summary remedy not exclusive—Gas Works Clauses Act, 1847 (10 Vict. c. 15), ss. 6, 20.—By the Gas Works Clauses Act, 1847 (10 Vict. c. 15), s. 20: "Every person who shall carelessly or accidentally break, throw down, or damage any pipe, pillar, or lamp belonging to the undertakers or under their control shall pay such sum of money by way of satisfaction to the undertakers for the damage done, not exceeding £5, as any two justices or the sheriff shall think reasonable.

Held, where a lamp-post had been knocked down by the negligent driving of the defendants' servant, that the plaintiffs could maintain an action for negligence in the county court against the masters, as the section was not exclusive.—CRYSTAL PALACE GAS CO. v. IDRIS, Q.B.D.; 82 L. T. 200.

See also Canada, Law of, 4; Metropolis, 3; Nuisance, 1.

GLEBE.—See Vendor and Purchaser, 15.

GOODWILL.—See Inland Revenue, 25; Partnership, 1, 2.

HACKNEY CARRIAGE:—

Definition of—Driver—Standing or plying for hire—Street—Towns Police Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 89), ss. 3, 38, 45.—The respondent stood for hire with an unlicensed carriage upon a cab-rank situated in a road adjoining a railway station. The road was the property of the railway company, subject to a public right of footway over and along it. An information against the respondent for standing for hire with an unlicensed carriage having been dismissed by the justices, Held (affirming the decision of the justices), that the road was not a street within section 3 of the Towns Police Clauses Act, 1847.

Held, also, that, in order to constitute an offence under section 45 of the same Act against the driver of a carriage, it must be proved that such carriage was a hackney carriage within the definition of hackney carriage in section 38.

Curtis v. Embery, 21 W. R. 143, L. R. 7 Exch. 69, followed.—JONES v. SHORT, Q.B.D., 251; 69 L. J. Q. B. 473; 82 L. T. 197.

HAWKER.—See Market, 3.

HIGHWAY:—

1. Nuisance—Obstruction—Loading and unloading of vans—Injunction.—The private reasonable right to use a public highway in carrying on a business must, in a case of difficulty, give way to the public right of using the highway. What is a reasonable user of the highway depends on the facts of each particular case. It is not enough that the user consists in an aggregate of lawful acts.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. BRIGHTON SUPPLY ASSOCIATION, C.A., 314; [1900] 1 Ch. 276; 69 L. J. Ch. 204; 81 L. T. 762.

2. Rating—Exemption—Liability to repair ratione tenuræ—Sum paid in discharge of liability—Highway made parish highway — Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 33—Highway Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 61), s. 35.—In a certain hamlet all the highways were, previously to 1881, repairable by the occupiers of lands ratione tenuræ, and highway rates were not leviable by reason of the exemption in section 33 of the Highway Act, 1835. In 1881 an order was made by the justices under section 35 of the Highway Act, 1862, declaring that all highways in the hamlet should be parish highways, and the order fixed the sums to be paid by the respective occupiers of lands previously liable to repair ratione tenuræ, "in full discharge of all claims thereafter in respect of the repair and maintenance of the highways" as provided by the Act. These sums were nominal in amount, and were duly paid by the respective occupiers, including a railway company. In 1897 the railway company were rated in respect of their lands in the hamlet for expenses incurred in the repair of highways including those in the hamlet.

Held, that the order of the justices made in pursuance of section 35 of the Highway Act, 1862, did not deprive the railway company of their previously existing exemption from highway rates under section 33 of the Highway Act, 1835, and that the company were exempt from payment of so much of the rate as was levied in respect of the repair of highways within the hamlet.

Decision of the Court of Appeal in North-Eastern Railway Co. v. Dalton Overseers, 47 W. R. 582, [1899] 1 Q. B. 1026, affirmed.—DALTON OVERSEERS v. NORTH-EASTERN RAILWAY CO., H.L.; [1900] A. C. 345; 69 L. J. Q. B. 650; 82 L. T. 693.

3. Right of passage—Roadside strip—Waste of manor—Land between fences—Presumption—Rebutting evidence.—On one side of a metalled road, which was a public highway, was an irregular shaped piece of land, formerly part of the waste of the manor, beyond was an ancient hedge inclosing private property. On the other side of the road was another ancient hedge. In 1864, by the licence of the lord of the manor, one of the copyholders dug up and carried away several cartloads of soil from the surface of this piece of land. In 1872, in accordance with the customs of the manor, the lord granted a licence to inclose the land, and admitted the licensee as copyholder thereof. In 1874 the copyholder inclosed the land by erecting a fence by the side of the metalled road at a distance of 15ft. from the centre of the road, the surveyor of the highway board assisting in setting out the line. In 1884 the fence, being decayed, was restored. In 1880 the lord of the manor enfranchised the land. No objection was made by anyone to any of these acts until in 1897 the defendants threw down the fence, alleging that it was an obstruction to the highway.

Held, that, assuming that there was a primâ facie presumption that the whole space of land between the two ancient hedges was part of the highway, such presumption was rebutted by the evidence before the court, and that therefore the land inclosed in 1874 was not part of the highway.—NEELD v. HENDON COUNCIL, C.A.; 81 L. T. 405.

4. Trespass—User of highway.—The plaintiff was the owner and occupier of land crossed by a public highway, the soil of which was vested in him. The plaintiff had granted to a trainer of racehorses a licence for valuable consideration to exercise and train his horses upon the land. The defendant, who was the owner of a sporting newspaper, went upon the highway each morning for a considerable time and walked up and down it between two points about fifteen yards apart, not for the purpose of using it as a highway, but for the purpose of watching the performances and trial gallops of the racehorses on the adjoining land and taking notes thereof. The information thus obtained he published in his newspaper. The plaintiff brought an action of trespass, alleging that the acts of the defendant caused annoyance and detriment to himself and to his licensee.

Held, that, as the defendant was not using the highway for the purposes for which it was dedicated as a highway, but for the purpose of carrying on his business there, he was a trespasser.—HICKMAN v. MAISEY, C.A., 385; [1900] 1 Q. B. 752; 69 L. J. Q. B. 511; 82 L. T. 321.

See also Charity, 2; Local Government, 6; Telegraph, 1.

INFANT.—See Married Woman, 1; Partition, 2; Settlement, 2, 3.

INJUNCTION:—

1. Secret process—Co-owners—Right to use invention.—Each co-owner of a secret process or invention may, in the absence of contract, use the knowledge which he possesses without the consent of the other co-owners.—HEYL-DIA v. EDMUNDS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 167; 81 L. T. 579.

2. Trade competition — Rival manufacturers of medical apparatus—Appropriation of medical testimonials — Fraudulent representations — Damage to manufacturer—Injunction refused.—A manufacturer of patented medical apparatus had received favourable notices and comments in the medical and other press, which a rival manufacturer of later and similar apparatus had copied, in modified forms, into several pamphlets by which he advertised his goods.

Held, that there was no evidence that the defendant's goods were passed off for the plaintiff's, and that the application for an interlocutory injunction to restrain the issue of such pamphlets containing the testimonials must be refused.

Franks v. Weaver, 8 L. T. O. S. 510, 10 Beav. 297, distinguished.

Batty v. Hill, 11 W. R. 745, 1 H. & M. 264, approved. — TALLERMAN v. DOWSING RADIANT HEAT CO., Ch.D. Stirling, J., 146; [1900] 1 Ch. 1; 68 L. J. Ch. 618.

See also Patent, 3; Peer; Railway, 2; Trade Name, 2, 3; Trade Union, 1; Water, 1.

INLAND REVENUE:—

1. Auctioneer's licence—"Same town or place"—City of London and Sydenham.—The respondent, an auctioneer, as agent for T., sold certain wine at Sydenham, in the county of London. T. was duly licensed to sell intoxicating liquors in the City of London, in the same county.

Held, that Sydenham and the City of London are not "in the same town or place" within 27 & 28 Vict. c. 56, s. 1.—CASEY v. ROSE, Q.B.D.; 82 L. T. 616.

2. Estate duty—Annuity—"Full consideration in money or money's worth"—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 3, sub-section 1.—In 1862 the defendant inherited under a settlement a life interest in estates in Lincolnshire, subject to a jointure rent-charge of £400; he also inherited a life interest in estates in Dorsetshire. In 1870 he sold the Lincolnshire estates subject to the jointure rent-charge, investing part of the purchase-money in the name of trustees on trusts to indemnify the purchasers against the rent-charge. In 1883 an arrangement was made by which the rent-charge owner released the Lincolnshire estates from the payment of the rent-charge, in consideration of which and in consideration of the money invested in the name of trustees being released from the trusts for indemnity, the defendant charged his life interest in the Dorsetshire estate and certain policies on his life with the payment of an annuity of £400.

Upon the death of the annuitant the Commissioners of Inland Revenue claimed estate duty from the defendant in respect of the benefit which accrued or arose to him as the tenant for life of the Dorsetshire estates upon the cesser of the annuity.

Held, that the annuity was not granted by the defendant for "full consideration in money or money's worth" paid to him "for his own use or benefit" so as to be exempt from the payment of duty by virtue of section 3, sub-section 1, of the Finance Act, 1894.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. SMITH-MARRIOTT, Q.B.D., 12; [1899] 2 Q. B. 595; 68 L. J. Q. B. 59; 81 L. T. 359.

3. Estate duty—Life policy—Policy brought into settlement—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 2 (1) (d).—By the Finance Act it is enacted that estate duty shall be payable upon property passing on the death of any person dying after the commencement of the Act, and by section 2 (1) (d) it is provided that property passing on the death of the deceased shall be deemed to include "any annuity or other interest purchased or provided by the deceased, either by himself alone or in concert or by arrangement with any other person, to the extent of the beneficial interest accruing or arising by survivorship or otherwise on the death of the deceased."

A. effected a policy of assurance on his own life, payable on his death to his wife, and in pursuance of an agreement on his marriage assigned the policy to the trustees of his marriage settlement upon trust to hold the proceeds thereof for the benefit of his wife for life, he, A., covenanting to keep up the policy and pay the premiums during his life.

Held, that on A.'s death estate duty was payable under section 2 (1) (d) on the proceeds of the policy. —ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. DOBREE, Q.B.D., 413; [1900] 1 Q. B. 442; 69 L. J. Q. B. 223; 81 L. T. 607.

4. Estate duty—Property passing on death—Settlement—Surrender of life estate to remainderman—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 2 (1) (c).—Where a tenant for life of settled property surrenders the life estate to the remainderman and dies within twelve months of the surrender, estate duty is not payable under the Finance Act, 1894, on the death of the tenant for life.

Decision of the Divisional Court (Day and Lawrance, JJ.), [1899] 2 Q. B. 238, reversed.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. DE PREVILLE, C.A., 193; [1900] 1 Q. B. 223; 69 L. J. Q. B. 283; 81 L. T. 690.

5. Estate duty—Settlement—Reservation of interest—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 2, sub-section 1 (c).—Any gift inter vivos of property not involving the entire cessation of any interest therein by the grantor, and excluding his possession and enjoyment thereof, is insufficient to avoid the payment of estate duty under the Finance Act, 1894. The property so granted or assigned and existing at the death of the grantor will be deemed to have passed on his death, and therefore liable to estate duty.

A transfer of property reserving a rent-charge to the grantor and providing for the payment of grantor's debts by the grantee, to the full exhaustion of the grantor's estate, is, therefore, ineffectual for the purpose of avoiding the said duty under section 2, sub-section 1 (c), of the Finance Act, 1894.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (47 W. R. 37, [1898] 2 Q. B. 534) affirmed.—GREY v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, H.L., 383; [1900] A. C. 124; 69 L. J. Q. B. 308; 82 L. T. 62.

6. Estate duty—Settlement estate duty—Contingent settlement—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 5 (1) (a)—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 2 (1)—Finance Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 10), s. 14.—The construction put on section 5 (1) of the Finance Act, 1894, in Attorney-General v. Fairley, 45 W. R. 589, [1897] 1 Q. B. 698—viz., that a contingent settlement of property is a settlement within the meaning of the section—has been adopted by the Legislature in section 14 of the Finance Act, 1898, and will not now be questioned by the courts.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. CLARKSON, C.A., 216; [1900] 1 Q. B. 156; 69 L. J. Q. B. 81; 81 L. T. 617.

7. Estate duty—Settlement estate duty—Legacy by testator in satisfaction of previous covenant—Settlement of legacy by instrument outside will—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 5, 6 (2), 8 (4)—Finance Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28), s. 19—Effect of covenant to pay "without any deduction."—Settlement estate duty arising under section 5 of the Finance Act, 1894, is in all cases primarily payable, in the absence of indications of a contrary intention, out of the settled property.

In re Webber, Gribble v. Webber, 44 W. R. 489, [1896] 1 Ch. 914, overruled.

This primary incidence may, however, be shifted on to the residuary estate by the presence of clear indications of intention—e.g., by a direction to pay "without any deduction."

Decision of Kekewich, J. (47 W. R. 635, [1899] 2 Ch. 489), affirmed on the point of law, but reversed on the point of construction.—MARYON-WILSON,

RE, WILSON v. MARYON-WILSON, C.A., 338; [1900] 1 Ch. 565; 69 L. J. Ch. 310; 82 L. T. 171.

8. Estate duty—Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 33—"Property passing on death," Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 1—"Property of which the deceased was at his death competent to dispose," Finance Act, 1894, s. 2 (1)—Settled property.—A. died in 1899, having by his will left property valued at £16,000 to trustees for his widow and daughter, and after the death of the widow to the daughter absolutely. Six months after A.'s death his father died, having by his will left property to A. valued at £80,000. Estate duty was paid on this amount in respect of A.'s father's death. By section 33 of the Wills Act the devise to A. did not lapse, but took effect as if he had survived his father. On a claim by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue for further estate duty on the £80,000 as property passing on A.'s death, or of which he was competent to dispose at the time of his death under the Finance Act, 1894,

Held, that this was not property passing on A.'s death within section 1 of the Finance Act, 1894, but that it was property of which he was at the time of his death competent to dispose under section 2 (1) of the Act, and that it was disposed of by his will. By virtue of the Finance Act, ss. 5 and 22 (1) (i.), and of the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 2, it was settled property, and only liable to such duty as could be charged having regard to those provisions.

Per Channell, J.—The Wills Act, s. 33. gives the Crown the same duties as if the son had survived the father, and the devisees of the son take subject to the payment of the same duties as if the son had survived. The rate of duty payable is to be arrived at by taking the rate applicable to the property when aggregated with A.'s other property, but the Crown is not entitled to an increased rate on the £16,000 by reason of such aggregation.—SCOTT (JOHN), RE, Q.B.D., 205; [1900] 1 Q. B. 372; 69 L. J. Q. B. 121; 81 L. T. 610.

9. Estate duty—Succession duty—Company registered in England—Donor of property to company reserving life interest—Donor a foreigner domiciled abroad—Property situate abroad—Beneficiaries abroad—Succession on death of donor—Succession Duty Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 51)—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 2 (1) (b) (c).—An association was in 1891 formed into a company and was registered in England under the Companies Acts with the object of benefiting Russian Jews and of assisting the emigration of Jews from Europe or Asia to other countries. The affairs of the company were to be administered by a council, and the registered office of the company was to be in England. At a meeting of the council in 1892 Baron H. (chairman of the council) proposed to hand over to the company, and the council agreed to accept, various securities on condition that he was allowed to receive the income therefrom during his life, and a deed was executed in which Baron H. (the donor) gave to the company certain stocks, shares, and securities, mostly situate abroad, on condition that the company would permit the donor to receive the whole income from the property during his life, and would after his death apply such stocks, shares, and securities for the objects of the company. The registered office of the company was in London, where the general meetings were held and where the register of members was kept. The council met in Paris in offices there, where the company had its headquarters, its officers, clerks, and staff, and where most of its business was transacted, the business transacted in London being generally formal. Baron H. was an Austrian subject, domiciled in Austria and died so domiciled, and the property represented investments for the most part situate in foreign countries. On the death of Baron H. in 1896 the Crown claimed succession duty and estate duty upon the principal value of the property of the company.

Held, that, although the donor was a foreigner domiciled abroad and the property of the company was locally situate abroad and the beneficiaries were abroad, the company itself was an English company and was domiciled in England, and the property was owned in England by this English company, and that upon the death of Baron H. and the cesser of his life interest in the property the succession devolved upon this English company, and that therefore upon such succession the Crown became entitled to succession duty under the Succession Duty Act, 1853, and to estate duty under section 2 (1) (b) of the Finance Act, 1894, as upon property passing on the death of the donor in which the donor had an interest ceasing on his death.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. JEWISH COLONIZATION ASSOCIATION, Q.B.D.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 692; 82 L. T. 679.

10. Income tax—Assignment for benefit of creditors—Trustee carrying on debtor's business—Income Tax Acts, Schedule D.—The appellant was trustee under a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors made by a firm. The firm were lessees for a term of years of certain mills, and prior to the execution of the deed of assignment they had sub-let part of the mills, and from the portion which they still retained they supplied steam power to their sub-tenants at agreed rents. The appellant entered into occupation of that portion of the premises for the purpose of winding up the firm's business, and he continued to supply steam power to the sub-tenants for the purpose of increasing the dividends for the benefit of the firm's creditors. As trustee under the deed he had realized the firm's assets except the lease to them of the mills, and had paid dividends to creditors amounting in all to 8s. 6d. in the pound on admitted claims. The amount received by the appellant from the sub-tenants considerably exceeded the cost of supplying the power, and the general commissioners assessed him at the sum of £800 under Schedule D. in respect of "profits of power."

Held, that the appellant was liable to income tax under Schedule D. in respect of the profit derived by him from carrying on the trade or business of supplying the steam power.—ARMITAGE v. MOOR, Q.B.D.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 363; 69 L. J. Q. B. 614; 82 L. T. 618.

11. Income tax—Branches abroad—Dividends from securities out of United Kingdom—Constructive receipt in United Kingdom of dividends received outside—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 100, Schedule D., 4th case.—A life assurance company, having its head office and directors in the United Kingdom, carried on business in the East Indies by means of branches with agents and committees of management.

Accounts were made up yearly, and from the aggregate results of the entire business both at home and abroad, it was determined what amount of profits should be divided between the shareholders and policy-holders.

The moneys received at the branches in India included interest and dividends arising from securities in Her Majesty's dominions out of the United Kingdom, and were used as far as required in liquidating payments at those branches. Any balances were retained for use as required, or were dealt with as required by the directors in London.

An equivalent for the amount of such interest and dividends, if not retained abroad, would have to be sent out from the United Kingdom to India for the general conduct and due discharge of the obligations of the society's business in India.

Held that the interest and dividends were constructively received by the society in the United Kingdom, and as such, were assessable under Schedule D., 4th case, to income tax.—UNIVERSAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY v. BISHOP, Q.B.D.; 81 L. T. 422.

12. Income tax—Business carried on in foreign branches—Investments in foreign countries—Constructive receipt in United Kingdom—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 100, Schedule D., 4th case.—The plaintiff society carries on the business of life assurance, with head offices and directors in London.

The society has funds invested in securities in foreign countries, and the interest is reinvested in those countries or remitted direct to other foreign countries for investment.

In addition to this the society carries on its business in other foreign countries by means of local agents or managers, and has funds invested in securities in those countries.

The interest on such securities is either reinvested in those countries, applied in establishment and other expenses in the country where such interest is earned, or remitted to other foreign countries.

If such interest had not been retained abroad or remitted from one foreign country to another the society would have been obliged to send out money from the United Kingdom to their agencies to meet their obligations.

Held, that these amounts were constructively received in the United Kingdom, and were liable to be assessed to income tax.—GRESHAM LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY v. BISHOP, Q.B.D.; 81 L. T. 442.

13. Income tax—Deduction—Poor law officer—Contribution to superannuation fund—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 146—Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 50), s. 12.—An officer or servant in the employ of poor law guardians is entitled, by section 146 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, to deduct from the amount of his salary on which income tax is payable the amount deducted from his salary for the purpose of the superannuation fund under the powers conferred by the Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act, 1896.—BEAUMONT v. BOWERS, Q.B.D., 557; [1900] 2 Q. B. 204; 69 L. J. Q. B. 600.

14. Income tax—Deduction of tax from interest or annuities—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 8), s. 24, sub-section 3.—The London County Council, when they paid the dividends due on Metropolitan Consolidated Stock, deducted a sum therefrom at the rate of 8d. in the pound in respect of income tax, in accordance with section 24, sub-section 3, of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888. The dividends were paid out of the Consolidated Loans Fund. The Consolidated Loans Fund was made up (inter alia) of rents received by the county council from their tenants, interest received by the county council from local authorities in respect of loans made by the county council, and money raised by rates. The Consolidated Loans Fund was applicable, first, to the payment of the said dividends, and then to the redemption of Consolidated Stock and the payment of various debts and liabilities. The county council claimed to be entitled to retain, as against the Crown, the amount deducted as income tax in respect of so much of the dividends as they stated to have been paid out of rents from tenants and interest from local authorities.

Held, first, that the county council were not entitled to retain any income tax in respect of so much of the dividends as they stated to have been paid out of rents; secondly, that they were entitled to retain the tax on so much only of the dividends as was equal to that rateable proportion of the interest received from local authorities which was applicable to the payment of the dividends.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, C.A., 294; [1900] 1 Q. B. 192; 69 L. J. Q. B. 241; 81 L. T. 698.

15. Income tax — Life insurance company — "Annual profits and gains"—Participating policyholders—Return of surplus by way of bonus—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), Schedule D.—By the articles of the charter of a life insurance company which had a capital divided into shares, it was provided that the company could issue participating policies, that the insurance business should be conducted on the mutual plan, and that, after the owners of the capital stock had received dividends to the amount of 7 per cent., the other earnings of the company should be allowed to accumulate, and that every five years a balance should be struck and the surplus (after deducting a sufficient sum to cover risks and obligations) be divided among the policyholders.

Held, that such surplus was an annual profit or gain of the company liable to be assessed to income tax under Schedule D of the Income Tax Act of 1853.

Last v. London Assurance Corporation, 34 W. R. 233, 10 App. Cas. 438, and New York Life Insurance Co. v. Styles, 14 App. Cas. 381, 38 W. R. Dig. 89, considered.

Decision of the Divisional Court (Darling and Channell, JJ.), 47 W. R. 556, [1899] 2 Q. B. 439, affirmed.—EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE CO. OF UNITED STATES v. BISHOP, C.A., 341; [1900] 1 Q. B. 177; 69 L. J. Q. B. 252; 81 L. T. 693.

16. Income tax — Non-payment — Distress — Authority of collector—Taxes Management Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 19), ss. 73, 86.—The power to distrain in the event of non-payment of taxes, conferred upon a tax collector by section 86 of the Taxes Management Act, 1880, may be lawfully exercised after the expiration of the year in respect of which the tax is payable, provided that, at the time of the distress, the collector has not been required to pay over the sums collected by him, and to deliver a schedule of arrears, as provided by section 103 of the Act.—ELLIOTT v. YATES, C.A., 610; [1900] 2 Q. B. 370; 82 L. T. 812.

17. Income tax—Profits or gains of trade—Deductions—Wear and tear of plant—Ships—Income Tax Act, 1843 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 100, 1*st case, r.* 3—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878 (41 Vict. c. 15), s. 12.—The Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, by section 12, provides that "the commissioners . . . shall, in assessing the profits or gains of any trade . . . chargeable under Schedule D . . . allow such deduction as they may think just and reasonable as representing the diminished value by reason of wear and tear during the year of any machinery or plant used in the concern. . . ."

The commissioners allowed to the appellant company, in respect of the diminished value of their fleet of ships by reason of wear and tear, a deduc-tion which was less than that to which the company claimed to be entitled. Upon a case stated the Queen's Bench Division dismissed the appeal of the company.

Upon a further statement made by the commissioners, pursuant to a direction of the Court of Appeal, the appeal was dismissed upon the ground that no question of law arose.—PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL CO. v. LESLIE, C.A.; 82 L. T. 137.

18. Inhabited house duty — Exemption — Public-house—48 Geo. 3, c. 55, Schedule B., r. 3—57 Geo. 3, c. 25, s. 1—5 Geo. 4, c. 44, s. 4—Inland Revenue Act, 1878, s. 13, sub-section 2. — By section 13, sub-section 2, of the Inland Revenue Act, 1878, "every house or tenement which is occupied solely for the purposes of any trade or business or of any profession shall be exempted from the duties (on inhabited houses) by the said commissioners upon proof of the facts to their satisfaction.

Appellant was owner of a building of two storeys. The ground-floor was occupied by appellant to carry on the trade of a licensed retailer of spirits. The upper storey was occupied as his dwelling-house. Access to the dwelling-house was by a door opening from the public street and by a staircase from that door which led to the upper storey. Access to the public-house was by a different door, also opening from the public street. There was no internal communication between the dwelling-house on the upper storey and the public-house on the lower storey.

Held, that the public-house was not liable to inhabited house duty, and that the duty ought to be confined to the value of that portion of the building used as a dwelling-house.—GRANT v. LANGSTON, H.L. (Sc.); [1900] A. C. 383; 69 L. J. P. C. 66; 82 L. T. 629.

19. Inhabited house duty — Hall — Library — Liability to be assessed—48 Geo. 3, c. 55, Schedule B, r. 5—House Tax Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 36), s. 1.—The dining-hall and offices of the Middle Temple, which are used and occupied during the daytime only, in which no one sleeps or resides, and which have no communication with any premises in which anyone sleeps or resides, are liable to inhabited house duty, as coming within the words "hall or office" in rule 5 of Schedule B of 48 Geo. 3, c. 55; but the library is not a "hall" within the meaning of that rule, and is not liable to inhabited house duty.

Judgment of Wills and Bruce, JJ. (47 W. R. 383), affirmed. — STYLES v. MIDDLE TEMPLE SOCIETY, C.A., 164; 81 L. T. 426.

20. Licence for male servant — "Gardener"— "Under gardener"—Employed "in any capacity involving the duties" of gardener or under-gardener— Spade work in garden—32 & 33 Vict. c. 14, ss. 18, 19 (3).—Whether a workman employed all his time in working in a garden is or is not a gardener or under-gardener or a person employed in any capacity involving the duties of a gardener or under-gardener within 32 & 33 Vict. c. 14, ss. 18, 19 (3), is a question of fact to be decided by the justices on the evidence submitted to them.

The mere employment in a garden of a man doing work which a single-handed gardener would have to do does not necessarily make the man a gardener, and justices, in deciding the point, are entitled to consider whether or not the work done by him is work for the proper execution of which skill in gardening is required.—DILLON v. BATH (MARQUIS), Q.B.D.; 81 L. T. 186.

21. Probate duty—Testator resident and domiciled abroad—Taking possession and administering the estate—Executor de son tort—55 Geo. 3. c. 184, s. 37 —Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 12), s. 40.—The foreign executors of a testator who died domiciled abroad, and was the registered owner of shares and debentures in an English company, requested the company to transfer these shares and debentures into their names. The company were aware that the executors did not intend to take out probate in this country, but the transfer was made.

Held, that the company had taken possession and administered the estate of the deceased in this country, and constituted itself an executor de son tort, and become liable to probate duty and the statutory penalties.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (46 W. R. 193, [1898] 1 Q B. 205) affirmed.—NEW YORK BREWERIES CO. v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, H.L., 32; [1899] A. C. 62; 68 L. J. Q. B. 135; 79 L. T. 568.

22. Stamp duty—Agreement — Promissory note— Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 33 (1).—The defendant gave the plaintiff the following document: "April 4, 1899.—Re The Mitre Hotel, Tooting Graveney, S.W.—On the day of the transfer of the licence I agree to pay you the sum of twenty-five pounds.—W. J. Dean.—To Mr. G. W. Smith.—Witness, T. M. Wales, 174, Victoria-street, S.W."

Held, that this document ought to be stamped as a promissory note within section 33 (1) of the Stamp Act, 1891.—SMITH v. DEAN, Q.B.D.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 331; 81 L. T. 755.

23. Stamp duty—Agreement in consideration of fixed annual payments—"Bond, covenant, or instrument of any kind whatsoever"—"Only or principal or primary security for an annuity" for indefinite period—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), Schedule I.—By an agreement in writing not under seal, R. agreed to pay a telephone company the sum of £12 per annum for the use of a telephone wire and apparatus which the company was to affix to his house. The rent was to be payable every year in advance, and either party might put an end to the agreement by giving the other three months' notice.

Held, that this instrument was within the words "Bond, covenant, or instrument of any kind whatsoever, being the only or principal or primary security for any annuity" for an "indefinite period" in Schedule I. of the Stamp Act, 1891, and chargeable with the ad valorem duty therein stated.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (47 W. R. 247, [1899] 1 Q. B. 250) affirmed.—NATIONAL TELEPHONE CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, H.L., 210; [1900] A. C. 1; 69 L. J. Q. B. 43; 81 L. T. 546.

24. Stamp duty—Agreement to sell book debts— Guaranty of payment before completion—Consideration—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 59 (1). —A. Co. (Limited) agreed to sell their entire undertaking together with the book debts owing to them to B. Co. (Limited). By the agreement the book debts were to be taken as they were at the making up of the books of the A. Co. at the end of the preceding year, and the A. Co. gave a guaranty that they would be paid in full before the date fixed for completion of the conveyance; and the A. Co. were to be taken as conducting the business as agents for the B. Co. since the end of the preceding year till completion.

At the date of the agreement only a small part of the debts due at the end of the preceding year was still owing, and they were all in fact paid before completion of the conveyance.

Held, that the sale of book debts was a sale of property within section 59 (1) of the Stamp Act, 1891, and that consequently the B. Co. were liable to pay stamp duty on that part of the consideration appropriated as representing the consideration given for those debts.—MEASURE v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D.; 82 L. T. 689.

25. Stamp duty—Conveyance on sale—Goodwill—Contract "made" in the United Kingdom—"Equitable interest in property"—"Property locally situate out of the United Kingdom"—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 59, sub-section 1.—By section 59, sub-section 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891, "Any contract or agreement made in England or Ireland under seal or under hand only . . . for the sale of any equitable estate or interest in any property whatsoever, or for the sale of any estate or interest in any property except . . . (inter alia) property locally situate out of the United Kingdom" is chargeable with the same ad valorem duty as if it were a conveyance on sale.

A contract is "made," within the meaning of that section, in that country in which the signature of the last necessary party to it is affixed.

A contract for the sale of an option to purchase property at a particular price is not a contract for the sale of an "equitable estate or interest in any property" within the section.

Where the goodwill of a business is sold together with the premises where the business is carried on for a lump sum the goodwill is primâ facie annexed to the premises, and, therefore, if the business premises so sold are situate abroad, and there are no circumstances to rebut the presumption of annexation, the goodwill also will be treated as "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom" within the meaning of that section.

West London Syndicate v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, [1898] 2 Q. B. 507, distinguished.—MULLER & CO.'S MARGARINE v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, C.A.; [1900] 1 Q. B. 310; 69 L. J. Q. B. 291; 81 L. T. 667.

26. Stamp duty—Conveyance on sale—Leaseholds—Assignment—Consideration—Rent—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 57.—The lessee of land with three houses thereon, conveyed in consideration of a sum of money two of the houses for the residue of the term, subject to a duly apportioned part of the rent reserved by the original lease. The assignee covenanted to pay the rent and to observe and perform the covenants contained in the original lease.

Held, that the rent payable by the assignee was not part of the consideration in respect whereof the conveyance was chargeable with ad valorem duty under section 57 of the Stamp Act, 1891.

Judgment of the Divisional Court (47 W. R. 300, [1899] 1 Q. B. 335) affirmed.—SWAYNE v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, C.A., 197; [1900] 1 Q. B. 172; 69 L. J. Q. B. 63; 81 L. T. 623.

27. Stamp duty—Debenture—Option to redeem on paying premium—Sum secured—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 86; Schedule I., "Marketable security."—A limited company issued a series of debentures of £100 each, each debenture stating that the company would, as and when the principal moneys thereby secured become payable, pay to the registered holder the sum of £100. By one of the conditions indorsed thereon, a certain number of debentures were to be redeemed by annual drawings on the 1st of July, 1902, and on the 1st of July in each succeeding year up to the 1st of July, 1917, when the balance outstanding was to be redeemed. By another condition the company might at any time after the 1st of July, 1900, redeem the debentures at £103 on giving six months' previous notice in writing, and upon the expiration of such notice the sum of £103 was to become payable as if the same was the amount of the principal moneys secured. The debentures were "marketable securities," not transferable by delivery within the meaning of Schedule I. to the Stamp Act, 1891.

Held, that each debenture was a security for £100 only, and was, therefore, liable to ad valorem duty upon that amount, and not upon £103.

Judgment of the Divisional Court (47 W. R. 415, [1899] 1 Q. B. 345) reversed.—KNIGHTS DEEP v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, C.A., 198; [1900] 1 Q. B. 217; 69 L. J. Q. B. 66; 81 L. T. 625.

28. Stamp duty—Mortgage to secure debentures—Substituted security—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 86 (11), Schedule I.—By a trust deed made between a joint-stock company and trustees for the debenture-holders, the former stipulating that they might redeem the debenture stock after giving certain notice, covenanted that after giving such notice they would redeem at nominal value, plus 10 per cent. By further clauses of the deed certain freeholds and leaseholds were assured to the trustees to secure payment of all principal moneys, bonuses, and interest which might become payable in respect of the debenture stock, and a floating charge on all the company's property was created for the same purpose. There was a clause giving the company power to withdraw any of the freeholds or leaseholds assured to the trustees and substitute other property of equal value.

By a subsequent indenture a small part of the leaseholds so assured was withdrawn and other leaseholds belonging to the company assured to the trustees to be held on the trusts of the earlier indenture. This second indenture contained no covenant for payment of the debenture principal money or interest, and no express declaration of the trusts on which the property assured was to be held.

Held, that the second indenture was a "mortgage" within section 86 (1) of the Stamp Act, 1891, and a "substituted security" within Schedule I. and heading "Mortgage, Bond, Debenture, Covenant" of that Act, and that therefore the Commissioners of Inland Revenue were right in holding that the stamp duty was to be calculated at the rate of 6d. per £100 on the whole principal money of the debenture stock.—GARTSIDES v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D.; 82 L. T. 686.

29. Stamp duty—Partnership dissolution—Record of transfer of property—"Conveyance on sale"—"Release or renunciation"—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), Schedule I.—J. F. and his brother J. W. carried on business in partnership. J. F. in pursuance of the power for that purpose contained in the articles of partnership, gave J. W. notice to determine it, and J. W. gave J. F. notice of taking over his share in the partnership upon the terms prescribed by the articles. Two instruments were executed to give effect to the dissolution of the partnership—the first a conveyance, whereby the share and interest of J. F. in the real estate of the partnership was released and transferred to J. W. This deed was duly stamped with an ad valorem duty. The other instrument, of even date—after reciting that accounts of the partnership had been made up, and that the amount standing to the credit of J. F. was £41,752 4s. 7d., and that, by the above-mentioned deed of even date, the real estate had been conveyed to J. W., and that the chattel property of the partnership was then in the exclusive possession of J. W., and that the said J. W. had given his promissory note bearing even date therewith for the above said sum—witnessed that J. F. and J. W. declared that the partnership between them should be considered as determined, and J. F. declared that he accepted the said promissory note in full satisfaction of all claims against J. W. in respect of his share and interest in the said partnership and the assets and properties thereof.

The commissioners claimed that this last-mentioned instrument was chargeable with an ad valorem conveyance duty.

Held, that the instrument was chargeable in accordance with the assessment of the commissioners.—GARNETT v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D., 303; 81 L. T. 633.

30. Stamp duty—Railway company—Increase of nominal amount of capital—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 113.—A railway company being authorized by a special Act to re-arrange and consolidate the several classes of the shares and stocks in the capital of the company, made changes whereby the nominal amount of the share capital of the company was increased, but no real increase was thereby made in the actual capital of the company by the creation of new share capital.

Section 113 of the Stamp Act, 1891, enacts that in the case of any increase of the "amount of nominal share capital" of any company being authorized by any Act, the company shall deliver "a statement of the amount of such increase," and shall pay ad valorem duty on the amount of such increase.

Held, that the expression "amount of nominal share capital" in section 113 meant "nominal amount of share capital," and was not equivalent to "actual capital" or "assets," and that the company was liable to the payment of stamp duty in respect of the increase in the nominal amount of the share capital.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. MIDLAND RAILWAY CO., Q.B.D.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 353; 69 L. J. Q. B. 669; 82 L. T. 716.

31. Stamp duty—Receipt—Scrip certificate of stock—"Consideration money therein expressed"—Instalments—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 3, sub-section 2; Schedule I., "Receipt," exemption 11.—A duly stamped scrip certificate for £100 stock was issued upon payment of the allotment money, the balance being payable by two instalments of £40 each at fixed future dates. Payment in full might be made at any time subject to discount, and upon default in payment of the amounts at their due dates the previous payments were liable to forfeiture. At the foot of the certificate two blank forms of receipt for payment of the two instalments respectively were printed. The instalments were duly paid and the receipts filled in.

Held, that the receipts were exempt from stamp duty with exemption 11 under the heading "Receipt" in Schedule I. to the Stamp Act, 1891, as they were written upon the duly stamped certificate, and acknowledged the receipt of the consideration money therein expressed.—LONDON AND WESTMINSTER BANK v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, C.A., 195; [1900] 1 Q. B. 166; 69 L. J. Q. B. 102; 81 L. T. 630.

32. Stamp duty—Release or renunciation on sale—Compensation by railway company to mine owner—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), Schedule I.—Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 78.—Mine owners, having received from a railway company compensation under section 78 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, in respect of coal which they were required to leave unworked, executed an instrument whereby, in addition to acknowledging the receipt of the compensation money, they agreed to leave the coal unworked, covenanted to do all things necessary to vest the coal in the railway company, and declared that the sum paid to them included satisfaction and compensation for all claims which, but for those presents, they might have had against the railway company in respect of the coal.

Held, that the instrument was a release of an interest in property within the meaning of Schedule I. of the Stamp Act, 1891, and chargeable with a 10s. stamp, but that it was not a release or renunciation upon a sale, and therefore not chargeable with ad valorem duty.—GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D., 170; [1899] 2 Q. B. 652; 81 L. T. 385.

See also Banker, 2.

INSURANCE:—

1. Bullion—Seizure by Government of assured's country—Subsequent declaration of war—Insurance of property of enemy.—Gold bullion, the property of a company registered and carrying on business in the Transvaal, was insured at Lloyd's during transit from the mine to the United Kingdom by a policy which covered the usual risks of capture and detention. The gold, while in transit, was seized on the 2nd of October by the orders of the Transvaal Government. At that date it appeared probable that hostilities might shortly break out between this country and the Transvaal, but hope of a peaceful settlement had not been entirely abandoned. On the 11th of October hostilities commenced. In an action on the policy, it having been agreed that the case was to be dealt with as if the war was over,

Held, that, as at the date of the seizure a state of war did not exist, the plaintiffs were not, as alien enemies, disentitled to recover.—DRIEFONTEIN CONSOLIDATED GOLD MINES v. JANSON; WEST RAND GOLD MINES v. DE ROUGEMONT, Q.B.D., 619; [1900] 2 Q. B. 339; 69 L. J. Q. B. 771.

2. Guarantee policy—Concealment of material facts—Uberrima fides.—On the application of the appellant the respondent, an underwriter at Lloyd's, underwrote an instrument in the form of a policy whereby he guaranteed the solvency of a person who was surety for the repayment by the borrower of money lent by the appellant. The respondent made no inquiry as to the rate of interest payable by the borrower or as to the circumstances of the loan, and no information was given to him on those points. In fact the interest was over 30 per cent. and the borrower was unable to repay the loan. In an action on the policy the jury found that the transaction was not one of exceptional risk.

Held, that the non-disclosure of the rate of interest and the circumstances of the loan did not constitute a defence, there being no evidence that those facts were material to the only risk undertaken by the respondent—namely, the solvency of the surety.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (47 W. R. 487, [1899] 1 Q. B. 782), granting a new trial, reversed.—SEATON v. BURNAND, BURNAND v. SEATON, H.L.; [1900] A. C. 135; 69 L. J. Q. B. 409; 82 L. T. 205.

3. Life policy—Practice—Declaration as to future interests—Refusal to accept premiums—Repudiation of policy—Action by holder.—The court will refuse to make a declaration as to the validity of a policy of life assurance during the life of the assured, even when the society issuing the policy has refused to accept from the holder premiums due upon it upon the ground that the policy is void.—HONOUR v. EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE CO. OF UNITED STATES, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 347; [1900] 1 Ch. 852; 69 L. J. Ch. 420; 82 L. T. 144.

4. Marine—Collision clause—"Injury to the other ship or vessel itself"—Wreck—Cost of removal.—A policy of marine insurance on hull and machinery contained a collision clause which covered sums paid by the assured in the event of a collision with another vessel "in respect of injury to the other ship or vessel itself." The insured ship came into collision with a tug in a river and sank it. The wreck of the tug was removed by a conservancy board under their statutory powers, and the cost of doing so was paid to the board by the owners of the tug and recovered by them from the assured in a collision action.

Held, that the cost of removing the wreck was not recoverable by the assured under the policy.—BURGER v. INDEMNITY MUTUAL MARINE ASSURANCE CO., C.A., 643; [1900] 2 Q. B. 348; 82 L. T. 831.

5. Marine — Deviation — Delay —Clause allowing deviation at premium to be arranged.—The plaintiffs insured with the defendants by a Lloyd's policy a box containing bullion "at and from Boodinni to London," in a P. & O. steamer, "including all risks of every description from the mines by escort to railway station at Raichur (forty miles) thence by rail (400 miles) to Bombay, thence to London." The policy contained a clause covering the assured "in the event of deviation or change of voyage at a premium to be hereafter arranged." At Raichur the station-master improperly refused to receive the box at other than owner's risk rate, and the official in charge of it took it for safety to the plaintiffs' head office at Secunderabad, 170 miles from Raichur, and off the route from that place to Bombay; the box was kept there for a month in the plaintiffs' safe while arrangements were being made with the railway company. The box was then taken to Raichur and forwarded by the prescribed route to London, where upon arrival a bar of gold was found to be missing; it had in fact been stolen while the box was in the plaintiffs' office at Secunderabad.

Held, that the taking of the box to Secunderabad was a necessary act done in the prosecution of the insured journey, and was within the scope of the adventure; that the risk was always a transit risk; that the delay at Secunderabad was unreasonably long, and that there was at that place an unjustifiable deviation not covered by the premium paid, but that, being a deviation in the course of the voyage, it was covered by the deviation clause in the policy, and the defendants were therefore liable.—HYDERABAD (DECCAN) CO. v. WILLOUGHBY, Q.B.D.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 530.

6. Marine—Loss of freight—Exception—"Claim consequent on loss of time."—A policy of insurance was effected on the outward voyage of a steamer from London to the Australian ports for freight expected to be earned on the homeward voyage, the subject-matter being described as "upon freight of frozen meat chartered or as if chartered"; the policy was warranted "free from any claim consequent on loss of time whether arising from a peril of the sea or otherwise." The ship was a general ship, but had three of her five holds fitted with refrigerating machinery for frozen meat. While discharging her outward cargo on her arrival at Sydney, a fire broke out on board, which destroyed the refrigerating apparatus, and in consequence it became impossible to carry frozen meat upon the homeward voyage.

In an action on the policy for total loss of freight on frozen meat,

Held, that the warranty applied not only to chartered freight but to all freights; that if the damage to the refrigerating apparatus could have been repaired promptly there would have been no loss of freight; that the claim therefore was "consequent on loss of time" within the meaning of the exception; and that the underwriters were not liable.

Bensaude v. Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance Co., [1897] A. C. 609, followed.—TURNBULL v. HULL UNDERWRITERS ASSOCIATION, Q.B.D.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 402; 69 L. J. Q. B. 588; 82 L. T. 518.

7. Marine—Mutual insurance society—Action for contributions—Insurance by agent, member of association—Shipowner not member—Liability.—The plaintiffs, a mutual insurance association, sued the defendants for contributions or premiums payable in respect of an insurance of the defendants' ship in the plaintiffs' club.

By the policy, which was in the form of a Lloyd's policy, and subject to the plaintiffs' memorandum and articles of association and rules, the defendants' manager insured the ship in his own name, and for, and in the names of, all persons to whom the same might appertain. By the memorandum one of the objects of the association was the mutual insurance "of ships which the members may be authorized to insure in their own names." The articles defined a member as any person who, on behalf of himself, or of any other person, insures any ship in the association, and empowered a committee of the association to assess the members rateably in order to provide a fund to meet losses, and stipulated that the association should not be liable for losses, except to the extent of the fund which it could recover from members or persons liable. The rules provided for payment of premiums, for which the ships were to be assessed.

The defendants authorized the manager of their ship to enter her in the club, which he did, and he so became a member of the club, within the meaning of the plaintiffs' memorandum and articles of association, and personally liable to pay the contributions or premiums, which, under the articles of association and the rules, might be levied by the committee of the club. He became insolvent, and unable to pay, and the plaintiffs sued the defendants, as being the persons on whose behalf, and for whose benefit, the insurance was effected.

Held, that the defendants, being owners of an insurable interest, were the persons for whom the insurance was effected, that there was nothing in the memorandum and articles of association, or the rules, to exclude their liability to pay the premiums, and the plaintiffs were entitled to recover.

United Kingdom Mutual Steamship Assurance Association v. Nevill, 19 Q. B. D. 110, distinguished.—BRITISH MARINE MUTUAL INSURANCE CO. v. JENKINS, Q.B.D.; [1900] 1 Q. B. 299; 69 L. J. Q. B. 177; 82 L. T. 297.

8. Marine—Policy on ship—Furniture—Grain cargo—Dunnage mats and separating cloths.—Dunnage mats and separating cloths, which are used on board a ship in connection with the carriage of a grain cargo, are covered by a time policy on ship in the ordinary Lloyd's form, although they are not being used on the voyage in the course of which the loss occurred.

Judgment of Bigham, J. (ante, p. 47, [1899] 2 Q. B. 401), affirmed.—HOGARTH v. WALKER, C.A., 545; [1900] 2 Q. B. 283; 69 L. J. Q. B. 634; 82 L. T. 744.

9. Marine—Ship—Seaworthiness—Warranty implied.—A policy of marine insurance on cattle provided that the fittings of the ship were to be approved by Lloyd's surveyor. The fittings were so approved. During the voyage a number of cattle died owing partly to insufficiency of ventilation appliances and partly to insufficiency in the number of cattlemen appointed to attend to them.

Held, that the ship was unseaworthy in both respects; that the implied warranty of seaworthiness was not excluded by the provision as to the approval of the fittings, and consequently that the underwriters were not liable.—SLEIGH v. TYSER, Q.B.D.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 333; 69 L. J. Q. B. 626; 82 L. T. 804.

10. Marine—Time policy—Ship pledged for cost of repairs—Subsequent loss of ship—Particular average.—Where under a time policy a ship has sustained damage by perils insured against, and has been repaired abroad under an arrangement whereby the ship was pledged for the cost of the repairs, but the shipowners were not personally liable for them, and the ship was subsequently totally lost on the voyage home,

Held, that the underwriters were not liable to pay the cost of repairs in particular average, in addition to the total loss.—"DORA FORSTER," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 69 L. J. P. 85.

11. Marine—Underwriters' liability—Repair to ship—Owners taking advantage of ship being dry-docked—Apportionment of expenses.—A ship was dry-docked solely to enable the underwriters to effect the repairs for which they were liable. The owners took advantage of the ship being in dry dock to have her surveyed for the purpose of reclassification at Lloyd's, but no extra expense was occasioned to the underwriters thereby.

Held, that the underwriters were alone liable for the whole dock dues and the cost of getting in and out of dock, the owners being under no liability for them whatsoever.

Marine Insurance Co. v. China Transpacific Co. (Limited) (Vancouver case), 35 W. R. 169, 11 App. Cas. 573, commented on and explained.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (46 W. R. 417, [1898] 1 Q. B. 722) reversed.—RUABON STEAMSHIP CO. v. LONDON ASSURANCE, H.L., 225; [1900] A. C. 8; 69 L. J. Q. B. 86.

12. Marine—Wagering policy—Insurable interest—"P.p.i. clause"—"Ship"—Marine Insurance Act, 1745 (19 Geo. 2, c. 37), s. 1.—A policy of marine insurance whereby the assured is entitled to be indemnified against loss in respect of the non-arrival of a ship at a certain port by a certain date is a policy of insurance on the ship within the meaning of 19 Geo. 2, c. 37, s. 1.

Where, on the trial of an action, the plaintiff's case discloses that the transaction which is the basis of his claim is illegal, the court cannot properly ignore the illegality or give effect to the claim, even if the illegality be not pleaded or relied on by the defendants. The court will, therefore, not enforce a policy of marine insurance which is illegal under 19 Geo. 2, c. 37, s. 1, by reason of its containing a clause that the policy itself is to be deemed a full and sufficient proof of interest, although that defence is not set up by the underwriters.—GEDGE v. ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE CORPORATION, Q.B.D.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 214; 69 L. J. Q. B. 606; 82 L. T. 463.

See also Inland Revenue, 3, 15.

INTEREST.—See Bill of Sale, 3; Bond; Trustee, 4.

JAMAICA, LAW of:—

Fact not submitted to jury—New trial—Jamaica Code of Civil Procedure, s. 438.—The appellants had a prescriptive right to load and store coals on their wharf in such a manner as to spread their coal-dust over the respondents' wharf. The respondents, however, alleged that the appellants had within twenty years so extended the site of their operations and altered the structure of their works as to produce injurious effects, not caused by any prescriptive right, to the respondents' wharf. In an action by the respondents against the appellants for damages in respect of the alleged nuisance, the question submitted to the jury was whether the appellants' works, taken as a whole, had by their extension been rendered more injurious than before to the respondents' works taken as a whole. The jury found that there had been no increase in inconvenience and discomfort to the respondents, and a verdict was entered for the appellants; but on appeal to the full court judgment was entered for the respondents on the ground that the change in the incidence of the dust produced by the extension and alteration of the site and works so altered the nature of the easement as to constitute a new wrong.

Held, that the question whether by their extension and alteration there had been a variation in the servitude imposed on the respondents of a kind substantial enough to cause an appreciable new wrong was a question of fact which had not been left to the jury, and that there must be a new trial.

Under section 438 of the Jamaica Code of Civil Procedure, the court cannot decide a question of fact never left to the jury, though it may draw inferences of fact not inconsistent with the findings.—ROYAL MAIL STEAM PACKET CO. v. GEORGE, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 480; 82 L. T. 539.

JUSTICES:—

1. Appeal—Order for maintenance of pauper— 43 Eliz. c. 2, ss. 6, 7—Poor Relief Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 12), s. 26—Poor Law Amendment Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 122), s. 36—Police (Metropolis) Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 71), s. 50.—There is no appeal to quarter sessions from an order of justices against relatives for the maintenance of a pauper.

An order by a metropolitan police magistrate against the relative of a pauper that he should pay 2s. 6d. a week towards the maintenance of such pauper is not an order "in which the sum or penalty adjudged to be paid" is "more than three pounds" within section 50 of the Police (Metropolis) Act, 1839.—REG. v. LONDON JUSTICES, Q.B.D., 319; [1900] 1 Q. B. 438; 69 L. J. Q. B. 364; 82 L. T. 296.

2. Certiorari—Proceedings against officers of a trade union—Magisterial orders for payment of sums due — Civil debt — Criminal proceedings — Orders regular on the face—Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 12—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 6.—Summonses were issued against two officers of local branches of a certain trade union under the Trade Union Act, 1871,

s. 12, charging them with wilfully withholding certain sums of money belonging to the union. Both defendants admitted the charges against them, and orders, headed "Civil debt," were made upon them for payment of the amounts due, or in default distress and sale. Both defendants defaulted, and application was then made for their committal to prison under the section. The magistrate refused the application on the ground that the section was modified by the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, s. 6, and that, the proceedings being civil and not criminal, in order to obtain committal a judgment summons must be issued, and the prosecution must prove possession of means by the defendants. An order nisi was then obtained, addressed to the magistrate and the two defendants, calling on them to show cause why the orders should not be removed and quashed on the ground that the moneys ordered to be paid were not civil debts.

Held, that, as the orders were regular on the face, the rule must be discharged.—REG. v. TRUSCOTT, Q.B.D.; 81 L. T. 188.

3. Costs of appeal to quarter sessions—Payment by treasurer of county or borough—"Place"—Vagrant Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 83), s. 9.—By section 9 of the Vagrant Act, 1824, upon an appeal to quarter sessions against a conviction under the Act, the justices in quarter sessions are empowered to order the treasurer of "the county, riding, division, or place in which the offence shall have been committed," to pay the prosecutor's costs.

A county borough had a separate commission of the peace, but not a separate court of quarter sessions. An appeal from a conviction under the Act by the borough justices having been successfully brought to the quarter sessions for the county, an order was made by quarter sessions upon the borough treasurer for payment of the prosecutor's costs.

Held, that the word "place" in the section must be construed as ejusdem generis with "county, riding, division," and meant a place having a separate court of quarter sessions; and that the order of quarter sessions was therefore wrongly made upon the borough treasurer, and should have been made upon the treasurer of the county.—REG. v. WEST RIDING JUSTICES, Q.B.D.; [1900] 1 Q. B. 291; 69 L. J. Q. B. 13.

4. Public health—Nuisance—Order to abate—Prohibition against continuance and recurrence—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 96, 105.—Where justices make an order for the abatement of a nuisance upon a complaint made by a private individual under section 105 of the Public Health Act, 1875, such order must specify the works required as may be necessary for that purpose.

Further, where such order prohibits the doing of any acts as may lead to the recurrence of such nuisance, no works need be specified.—REG. v. HORROCKS, BOWSTEAD, EX PARTE, Q.B.D.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 688; 82 L. T. 767.

5. Quarter sessions—Appeal—Notice of appeal—Service—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 31 (2) (7).—Personal service on the other party of notice of appeal to the quarter sessions is not required by section 31 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879.—REG. v. SOMERSET JUSTICES, Q.B.D.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 311.

See also Adulteration, 4, 5; Divorce, 8-12; Licensing Law, 1-3, 6, 8, 9; Local Government, 21; Lunacy, 4, 6; Master and Servant, 29; Metropolis, 7; Poor Law, 3; Practice, 37; Vaccination, 1, 2.

LANDLORD and TENANT:—

1. Dwelling-house—Covenant for quiet enjoyment—Adjoining house of greater height—Injury to demised house—Smoking chimneys.—The erection by a lessor, of a building of such a height and so near the demised dwelling-house as to alter the ordinary currents of air and cause the wind to blow down the chimneys and make them smoke, and thus cause grievous annoyance to the lessee, is a physical interference with the house, and a breach of a covenant by the lessor that the lessee should enjoy the premises without any interference or disturbance by the lessor.—TEBB v. CAVE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 318; [1900] 1 Ch. 642; 69 L. J. Ch. 282; 82 L. T. 115.

2. Distress—Exemptions from—Bedding—Bedstead—Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 21), s. 4—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 147.—By section 147 of the County Courts Act, 1888, which is incorporated in section 4 of the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888, wearing apparel and bedding to the value of £5 are exempt from distress.

Held, that the word "bedding" includes "bedstead."—DAVIS v. HARRIS, Q.B.D., 445; [1900] 1 Q. B. 729; 69 L. J. Q. B. 232; 81 L. T. 780.

3. Distress—Goods impounded on premises—Possession—Pound breach—Abandonment—Distress for Rent Act, 1737 (11 Geo. 2, c. 19), s. 10—Practice—Leave to appeal to Court of Appeal on one point—Argument limited.—Where a landlord, in distraining for rent, has, under section 10 of the Distress for Rent Act, 1737, impounded goods on the premises, it is not necessary that anyone on his behalf should remain in possession of the goods.

Where leave to appeal on one point has been given by the Divisional Court, the Court of Appeal will not allow appellant to argue other points which had been raised in the county court and in the Divisional Court.

Decision of the Divisional Court (Lawrance and Channell, JJ.), 47 W. R. 239, affirmed.—JONES v. BIERNSTEIN, C.A., 232; [1900] 1 Q. B. 100; 69 L. J. Q. B. 1; 81 L. T. 553.

4. Distress—Mortgage by sub-demise—Liability for rent—Elegit—Sheriff—1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 11.—The lessee for years mortgaged property by sub-demise and covenanted to pay the rent and perform the covenants in the lease. The defendant, the owner in fee simple, recovered judgment for rent due by the lessee, and issued a writ of elegit, under which the lands were delivered to the defendant. The mortgagee, the plaintiff, appointed a receiver, who entered into receipt of the rents and profits. The defendant levied a distress for rent subsequently accrued. The plaintiff brought an action to restrain the defendant from distraining on the premises.

Held, that the whole interest of the lessee was not taken by the judgment creditor, and that he was not a surety for the lessee (Moule v. Garrett, 18 W. R. 697, L. R. 5 Ex. 132, distinguished); that the land must be taken to have been delivered to the defendant under the elegit to the extent of the mortgagor's interest as mortgagor in possession, and not in respect of the mere dry reversion expectant on the determination of the sub-demise (In re South, 22 W. R. 460, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 369, applied); and that the defendant was entitled to distrain.—JOHNS v. PINK, Ch.D.

Stirling, J., 247; [1900] 1 Ch. 296; 69 L. J. Ch. 98; 81 L. T. 712.

5. Ground game—Agreement divesting the right of the occupier to kill—Validity—Ground Game Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 47), s. 3.—An agreement by the owner of a farm, whereby he undertakes, in the event of his tenant forbearing to kill the ground game, to compensate him for loss or damage done to his crops by the ground game, is void by section 3 of the Ground Game Act, 1880.—SHERRARD v. GASCOIGNE, Q.B.D., 557; [1900] 2 Q. B. 279; 69 L. J. Q. B. 720; 82 L. T. 850.

6. Ground game—Occupying landlord—Alienation of right of shooting—Ground Game Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 47).—The benefit of the Ground Act, 1880, is not confined to tenants, but extends to occupying landlords in cases where there has been an alienation of the right of shooting.

The owner of a farm granted a lease of the exclusive right of shooting to the plaintiff, and afterwards, during the currency of the lease, conveyed the freehold of the farm to the defendant, who entered into occupation. Finding that the rabbits on the farm were doing damage to his crops, the defendant caused them to be trapped. In an action for trespass to the plaintiff's exclusive right of shooting,

Held, by Vaughan Williams and Romer, L.JJ. (A. L. Smith, L.J., dissenting), that the defendant, being the occupier of the land, was entitled under the Ground Game Act to kill and take the ground game, notwithstanding that he was also the landlord.

Decision of the Queen's Bench Division ([1899] 2 Q. B. 436) affirmed.—ANDERSON v. VICARY, C.A., 593; [1900] 2 Q. B. 287; 69 L. J. Q. B. 713.

7. Lease—Company—Debenture—Receiver—Leaseholds covered by trust debenture deed and sub-demised to trustees—Liability of receiver appointed on behalf of debenture-holders to pay rent and perform covenants of head lease.—A company's debentures were secured by a trust deed which dealt with the property of the company and included leaseholds. The deed purported to sub-demise the same to the trustees, but such trustees were not assigns of the lease. The receiver appointed on behalf of the debenture-holders entered into possession of the leaseholds, and subsequently removed the company's goods from the premises, but did not give up possession to the landlord, and certain rent remained in arrear. Subsequently an order was made permitting the landlord to re-enter and determine the lease. On a summons asking for an order that the receiver pay the rent due up to such period of re-entry,

Held, that the liability of the receiver was no greater than that of the trustees, who were not liable either at law or in equity for the head-rent, That if the court had been tenant it would have done what a just tenant would; but that the honour of the court could not be satisfied at the expense of somebody else not liable at law or in equity to satisfy it, and that therefore the summons must be dismissed.—HAND v. BLOW, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; 82 L. T. 750.

8. Lease—Covenant—Breach by lessee of covenant with lessor—Right of adjoining lessee to enforce the covenant.—A. let one of a row of houses to B., covenanting not to let any other house in the row for the trade of a greengrocer. A. subsequently let another house in the row to C., taking a covenant from him to use it for an Italian warehouse only. Action by B.'s assignee to restrain A. from letting, and C. from using, his premises for the trade of a greengrocer.

Held, that C. had broken his covenant with A.; that A. had observed his covenant with B.; that the plaintiff could neither sue C. directly for breach of his covenant with A. nor compel A. to sue him; and that the action must be dismissed.

Kemp v. Bird, 25 W. R. 838, 5 Ch. D. 974, followed.

Fitz v. Iles, [1893] 1 Ch. 77, discussed.—ASHBY v. WILSON, Ch.D. Kekewich, J. 105; [1900] 1 Ch. 66; 69 L. J. Ch. 47; 81 L. T. 480.

9. Lease—Covenant—Building covenant—Repairing covenant—Continuing breaches of covenants—Waiver by acceptance of rent—Recovery of possession—Sufficiency of notice under Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 14.—A piece of land, with four houses, was demised on lease to the defendants by the predecessor in title of the plaintiffs on the 4th of June, 1894. The lease contained a licence to the defendants to pull down the houses within twelve months, and covenants by the defendants (a) within the same period to erect new premises in their place, and (b) to "at all times during the said term keep the said messuages and premises so to be erected as aforesaid in good and substantial repair." There was also a proviso for re-entry on "any breach or non-observance of any of the lessees' covenants." The new houses were never built. On the 27th of August, 1895, rent was paid by the defendants and accepted on behalf of the original lessor. In August, 1898, the plaintiffs served on the defendants a notice under section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, which set out the building covenant and the breach thereof, but did not refer to the repairing covenant.

Held, (1) that, by the acceptance of rent, the breach of the building covenant, which had been made once for all, had been waived; (2) that there was no continuing breach of the building covenant; (3) that there was a continuing breach of the repairing covenant; and (4) that the notice served under section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, was insufficient.—JACOB v. DOWN, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 441; [1900] 2 Ch. 156; 69 L. J. Ch. 493.

10. Lease—Covenant—Public-house licence—"Discontinuance" of—"Assigns"—Underlessee.—The lessee of a public-house covenanted to conduct the business so as to afford no ground for "discontinuing the licence."

Held, that, read with the context, "discontinuing" meant not refusing to renew but forfeiting the licence.

The decision of the Court of Appeal (46 W. R. 386, [1898] 1 Q. B. 716) affirmed.—BRYANT v. HANCOCK & Co., H.L.; [1899] A. C. 442; 81 L. T. 96.

11. Lease—Covenant—Repairs—Res judicata—Measure of damages.—Certain premises were demised to the predecessors in title of the plaintiffs for sixty-one years from Michaelmas, 1837, subject to covenants to repair and deliver up in repair. The premises were sub-demised to the predecessors in title of the defendant subject to the same covenants.

On the 4th of April, 1894, an action was commenced by the plaintiffs against the defendant for damages for the breaches of the covenants, and £1,305 was recovered, no part of which was expended in repairing the premises.

On the 19th of September, 1898, the term of the underlease expired, and the plaintiffs claimed the sum that it would cost to put the premises into such state of repair as the defendant would be bound to leave them at the end of the term, making due allowance for the sum of £1,305 they had received.

Held, that the previous action was no estoppel, and that the true measure of damages of the breaches of covenants was the cost of putting the premises into the state of repair in which the tenant was bound to leave them at the expiration of the said term, less the sum of £1,305 and interest. —REBETTS v. CONQUEST, Q.B.D.; 82 L. T. 560.

12. Lease—Covenant—Repairs—Trustee—Lease to—Covenant by lessee to repair—Occupation by cestui que trust—Liability of cestui que trust for breach of trustee's covenant.—A lease of a house contained a covenant by the lessee for himself and his assigns to repair, and also a declaration that the lessee held the premises in trust for the defendant. The defendant occupied the premises during the whole of the term, as it was intended by the parties that she should do, and she paid the rent. Upon the expiry of the term the premises were out of repair.

Held, that the fact of the defendant having the beneficial interest in the lease did not, either by itself or coupled with the fact of occupation by her, create any equitable liability in her for the breach of the lessee's covenant.—RAMAGE v. WOMACK, Q.B.D.; [1900] 1 Q. B. 116; 69 L. J. Q. B. 40; 81 L. T. 526.

13. Lease—Covenant not to assign—Forfeiture—Equitable assignment—Declaration of trust—Condition against assignment for benefit of creditors—"Disposing of the land leased"—Notice before action—Service on "lessee"—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 24, sub-section 4—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 14, sub-sections 1, 6 (i.); s. 67, sub-section 2.—By a lease the lessee covenanted not to assign or underlet the demised premises without the consent of the lessor, and there was a proviso for re-entry on breach of any of the covenants, or if the lessee should (inter alia) execute an assignment for the benefit of his creditors. The lessee executed an assignment of all his real and personal property, except that of a leasehold tenure, to a trustee for the benefit of his creditors, and he declared that he would stand possessed of all his leasehold property upon trust for the trustee and to assign and dispose of the same in such manner as the trustee should direct for the purposes of the deed. The trustee entered into possession of the demised premises, but no legal assignment of them was executed. The lessor served upon the trustee a notice alleging as ground of forfeiture the execution by the lessee of the assignment. In an action against the lessee to recover possession of the premises,

Held, that, as there had been no legal assignment of the premises, there had been no breach of the covenant against assignment.

Held, also, that the condition against assignment for the benefit of creditors was not a condition against disposing of the land leased within the meaning of section 14, sub-section 6 (i.), of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and therefore service of notice on the lessee under section 14, sub-section 1, was necessary before the lessor could enforce his right of re-entry; and that service of the notice on the trustee under the deed was not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of section 14, sub-section 1, and section 67, sub-section 2, of the Act.

A condition against the disposing of the land leased within the meaning of section 14, sub-section 6 (i.), of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, means a condition which on its face is against the disposing of the land leased.—GENTLE v. FAULKNER, C.A.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 267; 69 L. J. Q. B. 777; 82 L. T. 708.

14. Lease—Covenant by tenant to pay and discharge "all taxes, rates, duties, and assessments whatsoever"—Liability to pay for drainage works required by the vestry—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 85, 217; Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), ss. 64, 96.—The defendant, who was lessee of the plaintiffs, covenanted to pay and discharge all taxes, rates, duties, and assessments whatsoever which then were or thereafter should become payable for or in respect of the said premises thereby demised or any part thereof, whether parliamentary, parochial, or otherwise, except the landlord's property tax. The vestry of the parish served notices under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, requiring the drains to be reconstructed according to the regulations of the vestry. It was agreed between the parties that the work should be done by the plaintiffs without prejudice to their right (if any) under the covenant to throw the liability for its cost upon the defendant.

Held, that the tenant was liable to pay the cost of the drainage works.

Brett v. Rogers, 45 W. R. 334, [1897] 1 Q. B. 525, approved.—FARLOW v. STEVENSON, C.A., 213; [1900] 1 Ch. 128; 69 L. J. Ch. 106; 81 L. T. 589.

15. Lease—Forfeiture—Breach of covenant—Notice to remedy several breaches—Validity—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 14 (1). —A notice to a lessee under the 14th section of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, to remedy a number of alleged breaches of covenant is not bad merely because in respect of one or more of them the breach cannot be established.

Lock v. Pearce, 41 W. R. 369, [1893] 2 Ch. 271, followed.

Horsey Estate v. Steiger, 47 W. R. 644, [1899] 2 Q. B. 79, and In re Serle, 46 W. R. 440, [1898] 1 Ch. 652, distinguished.—PANNELL v. CITY OF LONDON BREWERY CO., Ch.D. Buckley, J., 264; [1900] 1 Ch. 496; 69 L. J. Ch. 244; 82 L. T. 53.

16. Lease—Insanitary condition—Innocent misrepresentation—Rescission—Indemnity—Damages.—The plaintiffs, who were the lessees of certain premises which they used for the purpose of breeding prize poultry, alleged that they had been induced to take the lease on the representations of the defendant's agents that the premises were in a sanitary condition and that the state of repair of the premises was good.

The defendant denied that any such representations were made.

The premises proved to be in an insanitary condition and in a bad state of repair.

Held, that, assuming innocent misrepresentations were made which entitled the plaintiffs to rescission of their contract, they could not claim to be indemnified by way of compensation for injuries sustained by the insanitary condition of the premises and occasioned by their entering into the contract. Such compensation is in reality damages pure and simple, and is not the proper consequence of rescinding the contract.—WHITTINGTON v. SEALE-HAYNE, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; 82 L. T. 49.

17. Lease—Minerals—Specific performance—Undivided moiety—Inconvenience.—An agreement by one of two tenants in common of land to make a lease of the minerals contained in his share can be enforced by specific performance.

Inconvenience caused by the other tenant in common having granted a lease of the minerals contained in his share to another person is not sufficient ground for the court to refuse specific performance in such a case: Price v. Griffith, 1 De G. M. & G. 80, distinguished.—HEXTER v. PEARCE, Ch.D. Far- well, J., 330; [1900] 1 Ch. 341; 69 L. J. Ch. 146; 82 L. T. 109.

18. Lease — Mortgage — Assignee of equity of redemption—Action to recover possession for breach of covenants in lease—Right of assignee to bring action—"Assign" of lessor—Notice to execute repairs—Sufficiency of notice—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 14, sub-section 1, 3—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25, sub-section 5.—The assignee of the equity of redemption, being in receipt of the rents and profits of property which had been demised by the owner and afterwards mortgaged, is entitled under section 25, sub-section 5, of the Judicature Act, 1873, to maintain in his own name an action for the recovery of the property for breach of the covenant in the lease to repair, under a proviso in the lease entitling the lessor to re-enter for such breach.

Such assignee is an "assign" of the lessor within the meaning of section 14, sub-section 3, of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and is therefore entitled to serve upon the tenants the notice specifying the breach required by section 1 of that Act; and such notice is sufficient, and "sufficiently specifies the breach and requires its remedy," although it does not specify the repairs required in each particular house—the property being house property—if it gives in detail in a schedule every repair that may be required according to the condition of each house, and leaves it to the tenant to apply it and ascertain what particular repairs are to be done in his house.—MATTHEWS v. USHER, Q.B.D.; 81 L. T. 542.

19. Lease—Public-house—Condition for re-entry on liquidation—Forfeiture—Underlessee, relief to—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 14—Conveyancing Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 13), s. 4—Waiver.—A voluntary winding up by a solvent company for the purpose of amalgamating with other companies works a forfeiture of a condition for re-entry on liquidation.

On forfeiture of the head lease the court has power, under section 4 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, in granting relief to an underlessee, to vary (even by way of increase) the amount of rent reserved by the underlease.—EWART v. FRYER, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 443; 82 L. T. 415.

20. Lease—Reservation of exclusive sporting rights—Severability—Ground Game Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 47), s. 3.—A lease of a farm contained a reservation to the lessor of "the exclusive right . . . to enter upon the said farm for the purpose of sporting or otherwise."

Held, that the reservation was severable and was not wholly void as being in contravention of the Ground Game Act, 1880, and that a person who, with the permission of the tenant, was shooting partridges on the farm was liable to be convicted of trespassing in pursuit of game.—STANTON v. BROWN, Q.B.D., 333; [1900] 1 Q. B. 671; 69 L. J. Q. B. 301.

21. Lease—Theatre—Covenant not to assign—Grant of right to supply refreshments—Breach—Forfeiture.—A lessee of a theatre covenanted not to assign or part with the premises, or any estate or interest therein, for all or any part of the term thereby granted. The lessee subsequently granted to a third person the free and exclusive licence and right to use the refreshment rooms and bars in the said theatre.

Held, that the lessee had not assigned or parted with the premises or any estate or interest therein, and that consequently there was no forfeiture.—DALY v. EDWARDES, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 360; 82 L. T. 372.

22. Lease—Tied house—Lease executed by lessee only—Covenant running with the land—Assignment of reversion—Evidence—"Successors in business"—32 Hen. 8, c. 34—Specific performance—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 10.—In 1892 the defendant executed under seal an agreement with B. (Limited) to take a yearly tenancy of an hotel, and covenanted with B. (Limited) that he would at all times during the tenancy purchase of B. (Limited) or their successors in business all ale, beer, &c., sold or consumed either on or off the premises. The document was executed by the defendant alone.

In 1899 B. (Limited) sold all their property, including the hotel, and the goodwill of their business, to the plaintiffs.

The defendants refused to purchase beer, ale, &c., from the plaintiffs and bought from others.

On an injunction by the plaintiffs to restrain the defendants from committing a breach of the covenant, it was Held, that the plaintiffs were "successors in business" of B. (Limited); that, although the plaintiffs could not before the Judicature Acts have sued in covenant or in assumpsit, yet, as the defendant would have no defence to an action by the plaintiffs for specific performance to compel the defendant to take the legal estate, the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction: Walsh v. Lonsdale, 21 Ch. D. 9, considered.

It is doubtful whether the word "lease" in section 10 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, includes an "agreement for a lease."

In examining the defendant with respect to the covenant alleged to have been broken the general question "Have you received complaints from customers?" was allowed.—MANCHESTER BREWERY CO. v. COOMBS, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; 82 L. T. 347.

23. Lease—Underlease—Covenant for quiet enjoyment—"Without any interruption by the landlord or any person claiming through him"—Original lease with covenant not to assign or underlet—Grant of underlease in breach of covenant—Subsequent assignment of reversion—Action of ejectment by assignees of reversion—Consent of underlessor to judgment.—The defendant, being the lessee of a shop which he covenanted not to assign or underlet without the approval of the landlord, let the premises to the plaintiff for the residue of the term without having obtained such approval. The sub-lease contained a covenant by the defendant that the plaintiff should hold and enjoy the premises without any interruption by the defendant or any person lawfully claiming through him. Subsequently the superior landlord assigned the reversion, and the assignees brought an action of ejectment against the defendant, on the ground that he had forfeited his lease by breach of covenant. The defendant consented to judgment being signed against him, and the plaintiff was obliged to go out of possession. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant for breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment, Ridley, J., gave judgment for the plaintiff.

Held, on appeal, that there was evidence that the interruption of the plaintiff's tenancy was caused by the act of the defendant in consenting to a judgment being signed against him which he might have resisted; and that, therefore, the appeal must be dismissed.—COHEN v. TANNAR, C.A., 642.

24. Market garden holding—Improvements—Compensation—Special bargain—Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 61), s. 57.—A tenant who, by agreement with his landlord, is to receive compensation for improvements, and who might, but does not, make a claim for compensation under the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, is not debarred by section 57 of the Act from recovering compensation under his agreement.—PEARSON AND I'ANSON'S ARBITRATION, RE, Q.B.D., 154; [1899] 2 Q. B. 618; 81 L. T. 289.

25. Rent—Instalments payable in advance—Apportionment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 35), s. 2.—The Apportionment Act, 1870, only applies to sums accruing due, and not to sums accrued due at the time of the event which necessitates the apportionment.—ELLIS v. ROWBOTHAM, C.A., 423; [1900] 1 Q. B. 740; 69 L. J. Q. B. 379; 82 L. T. 191.

26. Tenancy from year to year not in writing—Parol agreement to give up possession of premises at a particular date—Surrender by operation of law—Estoppel by conduct—Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 3.—Under a three years' agreement in writing the defendant B. became tenant of certain premises belonging to the plaintiff F., and after the expiration of his tenancy in March, 1898, B. remained on in possession as tenant from year to year.

In December, 1898, B. asked F. to release him from his tenancy, and it was verbally agreed that B. should go out on the 24th of June following. F. placed a notice board on the premises that the same were "to be let," and subsequently sold the premises to a third party, who bought with possession at Midsummer, 1899.

On the 24th of June, 1899, the defendant refused to give up possession.

In an action of ejectment brought by F. against B.,

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment on two grounds: (1) Because the agreement of December, although bad as an agreement to surrender by reason of it not being in writing, was nevertheless an acceptance of a new tenancy by B., which was to end at Midsummer, 1899, and that acceptance worked a surrender of the old tenancy by operation of law; and (2) because the defendant, by his conduct in standing by and permitting the plaintiff to contract an obligation with the purchaser, was estopped from denying that his tenancy was other than that upon the footing of which he allowed his landlord to sell the property to the purchaser.—FENNER v. BLAKE, Q.B.D., 392; [1900] 1 Q. B. 426; 69 L. J. Q. B. 257; 82 L. T. 149.

27. Waste—Long lease—Deposit of rubbish—Injury to reversion—Countervailing advantage—Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 25.—To constitute waste on the part of a tenant there must be a substantial alteration of the thing demised, resulting in an injury to the inheritance; and such an alteration is not the less waste because it may result also in some countervailing advantage greater than the injury.

Therefore, where the land demised was low-lying land, and the lessee shot rubbish containing vegetable matter upon it, and thereby raised it above high-water level, but made it more expensive to build upon, it is no answer to an action for waste to say that it is an advantage for building, for the land to be thus raised. The land demised being building land, the fact that the existence of vegetable matter upon it might, under the Public Health Acts, prevent the lessors at the end of the term from building dwelling-houses upon it, or might put them to the proof that such vegetable matter was not then existing, is an injury to the inheritance making the shooting of the rubbish waste.

The fact that the shooting of the rubbish during the term would prevent the lessors at the end of the term from deriving the special profit to be made by the use of the land in this way, is an injury to the inheritance making the shoooting of the rubbish waste.—WEST HAM CHARITY BOARD v. EAST LONDON WATERWORKS CO., Ch.D. Buckley, J., 284; [1900] 1 Ch. 624; 69 L. J. Ch. 257; 82 L. T. 85.

28. Yearly tenant—Notice to quit—Alternative notice—"End of current year's tenancy"—Sufficiency of notice.—A notice given the 24th of March, 1898, to a tenant from year to year holding from the 25th of March to the 25th of March in each year, to quit "on the 24th of June, 1898, or at the end of your current year's tenancy," is a good notice to quit on the 25th of March, 1899, and determines the tenancy on that day.—WRIDE v. DYER, Q.B.D., 73; [1900] 1 Q. B. 23; 69 L. J. Q. B. 17; 81 L. T. 453.

See also Bankruptcy, 4.

LANDS CLAUSES ACTS.—See Arbitration, 3, 4, 7; Railway, 1, 4.

LAND TRANSFER ACT.—See Administration, 4; Practice, 38; Vendor and Purchaser, 14.

LEASE. — See Foreshore; Inland Revenue, 26; Landlord and Tenant, 1, 7-23; Merger, 1, 2; Mine, 1-4; Mortgage, 3, 7, 10, 11; Practice, 35; Probate, 1; Railway, 4; Settled Land, 4-7; Vendor and Purchaser, 4, 16-18.

LIBEL:—

1. Imputation upon a tradesman in the way of his trade—Criticism on manufacture or goods.—If the only meaning which can be reasonably attached to a writing is that it is a criticism upon the goods or manufacture of a trader it cannot be the subject of an action for libel, but an imputation upon a man in the way of his trade is properly the subject of an action without proof of special damage.

Harman v. Delany, 2 Stra. 898, and Evans v. Harlow, 5 Q. B. 624, distinguished and approved.

Whether in any particular case the words complained of are susceptible of a defamatory meaning, or are simply a disparagement of goods, is for the jury.—LINOTYPE CO. v. BRITISH EMPIRE TYPE-SETTING MACHINE CO., H.L.; 81 L. T. 331.

2. Publication—Circulating library—Book circulated in ignorance of libel contained in it—Negligence.—The proprietors of a circulating library circulated copies of a book which, unknown to them, contained a libel on the plaintiff. In an action for libel brought against them by the plaintiff, they failed to show that it was not through negligence on their part that they did not know that the book contained the libel when they circulated it.

Held, that they were liable as publishers of the libel.

Emmens v. Pottle, 16 Q. B. D. 354, discussed.—VIZETELLY v. MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIM.), C.A.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 170; 69 L. J. Q. B. 645.

See also Contempt, 2.

LICENSING LAW:—

1. Beerhouse—Forfeiture of licence by conviction of licensee—Application by owner for temporary authority—Discretion of justices—Grounds of refusal—Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 27), ss. 8, 19—Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), s. 15.—Where the holder of a beerhouse licence which has existed before and continuously since 1869 has forfeited his licence by conviction for offences under section 15 of the Licensing Act, 1874, and the owner of the premises makes an application under that section to a court of summary jurisdiction for a temporary authority to carry on the business until the next special licensing sessions, the justices in such court have not a general discretion to refuse such application, and cannot go beyond the four grounds of refusal specified in section 8 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869.—FLINN, EX PARTE, Q.B.D., 29; [1899] 2 Q. B. 607; 81 L. T. 221.

2. Beerhouse—Licence—Privileged house—No beer sold in beerhouse—Application to renew licence—Jurisdiction of justices to refuse renewal—Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 27), ss. 8, 19.—A beerhouse was licensed prior to May, 1869, and remained continuously licensed down to 1898, but no beer had been sold in the house for many years. A new tenant, who had become the occupier of the premises and who intended to carry on the business of the beerhouse, but to whom a transfer of the licence had been refused, applied at the annual licensing meeting for a renewal of the licence.

Held, that the justices had no jurisdiction to refuse the renewal on the ground that no beer had been sold in the house or that the house was not required by the neighbourhood, but that they were limited by section 19 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, to the four grounds specified in section 8 of that Act.—MACKRELL v. BRENTFORD JUSTICES, Q.B.D., 648; [1900] 2 Q. B. 387; 69 L. J. Q. B. 748.

3. Justices—Appeal to quarter sessions—Costs—Taxation out of sessions—Consent—Order on borough treasurer to pay costs of licensing justices—Right of treasurer to be present at the taxation—Jurisdiction—Licensing Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), s. 29.—Section 29 of the Licensing Act, 1828, provides that, in the case of an appeal from the judgment of a justice in or concerning the execution of the Act to the court of quarter sessions having been reversed, "it shall be lawful for the court, if it shall think fit, to adjudge and order that the treasurer of the county or place in and for which such justice whose judgment shall have been so reversed shall have acted on the occasion when he shall have given such judgment shall pay to such justice, or to whomsoever he shall appoint, such sum as shall, in the opinion of such court, be sufficient to indemnify such justice from all costs and charges whatsoever to which such justice may have been so put."

When a court of quarter sessions under this enactment orders the expenses of licensing justices to be paid by the treasurer of the county or place for which the justices acted, the amount of such expenses ought not to be taxed out of sessions without the consent of the treasurer; and if, in the absence of such consent, the court refer the taxation to their clerk of the peace, they must adopt his decision during the sessions. The treasurer is entitled to have notice of, and to attend, the taxation of the expenses.

A court of quarter sessions ordered the treasurer of a borough to pay a sum of money to the clerk of licensing justices whose judgment, while acting for the borough, had been appealed against, for the expenses to which he (the clerk) had been put in supporting the judgment of the justices.

Held, that the order was bad.—REG. v. WINDER, Q.B.D., 605; 69 L. J. Q. B. 729.

4. Keeping premises open for sale of intoxicating liquor—Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), s. 9.—Eleven being the closing hour in B., after that hour five men were in the bar of an inn with glasses, some of which were not empty. No drink had been drawn, and no person had entered the house after eleven, but both doors of the inn were open.

Held, that the premises were not kept open for the sale of intoxicating liquors within section 9 of the Licensing Act, 1874.—LLOYD v. BARNETT, Q.B.D.; 82 L. T. 804.

5. Licence—Premises pulled down for public improvement—Application for licence for other premises—Notices, sufficiency of—Alehouse Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), s. 14—Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 27), s. 7—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 40.—The holder of a licence for the sale of intoxicating liquors on and off the premises in respect of a house which was about to be pulled down for the purpose of a public improvement, applied to the justices in special sessions, under section 14 of the Alehouse Act, 1828, for a similar licence in respect of other premises not theretofore licensed. The applicant had satisfied all the requirements of section 14 as to the giving of notices, but not the provisions of section 40 of the Licensing Act, 1872.

Held, that the notices were sufficient; that the express provisions of section 14 of the Alehouse Act, 1828, as to notices are not repealed, either expressly or impliedly, by section 40 of the Licensing Act, 1872.—REG. v. NICHOLSON, C.A., 52; [1899] 2 Q. B. 455; 81 L. T. 257.

6. Licence—Refusal to renew—Appeal to quarter sessions—Power of quarter sessions to refuse renewal in absence of evidence—Alehouse Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), s. 27—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 42.—Where the holder of a licence appeals to quarter sessions from the refusal of a general annual licensing meeting to renew his licence, the quarter sessions have no power to refuse to grant a renewal in the absence of evidence in opposition to the renewal.—EVANS v. CONWAY JUSTICES, C.A., 577; [1900] 2 Q. B. 224; 69 L. J. Q. B. 636; 82 L. T. 704.

7. Proprietary club—Company carrying on a club—Sale of liquors—Some shareholders of company not members of club—Necessity of licence for sale of liquors to members.—The proprietor of an ordinary proprietary club, where the refreshments and liquors sold to the members are the property of the proprietor, and where the proprietor gets the profit from such sales, cannot sell intoxicating liquors to the members of the club without having the necessary licences.

A limited company incorporated under the Companies Acts carried on the business of a club. Most of the shareholders of the company were members of the club, but there were a few outside shareholders who were not members. The refreshments and liquors were the property of the company, and the profits (if any) from the sale of such refreshments went to the company, and not to the club.

Held, that the company, being a legal entity distinct from the club, and being composed of different members, could not sell intoxicating liquors or tobacco to members of the club without the requisite licences.—NATIONAL SPORTING CLUB v. COPE, Q.B.D., 446; 82 L. T. 352.

8. Renewal—General annual licensing meeting—Proceedings where no notice of opposition—Objection—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 42.—At the general annual licensing meeting of a division in which a certain beerhouse was situated, a report made by the head constable of the division was read, in which he asked that the renewal of the licence of the beerhouse should be withheld until the adjourned meeting. No notice of opposition to the licence had been served on the licence-holder prior to the mheting, nor had he had notice to attend at the meeting. The justices thereupon adjourned the granting of the licence, and gave notice to the licence-holder to attend at the adjourned meeting.

Held, that an objection was made within the meaning of section 42 (2) of the Licensing Act, 1872, and that the justices had jurisdiction to consider the objection of the head constable at the adjourned meeting. — HAWKINS v. BRIDGWATER JUSTICES, Q.B.D., 587; [1900] 2 Q. B. 382; 69 L. J. Q. B. 663; 82 L. T. 847.

9. Sale of beer—Sale at unlicensed place—Traveller—Order—Appropriation—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 3.—The respondent, a brewer, carrying on business at L., held a wholesale licence besides a retail licence in respect of those premises enabling him to sell beer for consumption off the premises.

On the 10th of July his traveller called at a house in K.-terrace, H., and obtained an order for six bottles of beer. He entered the order in a memorandum book he had with him. Nothing more was done at this house by the traveller, and the goods were delivered by the respondent's carter on the 14th of July. On delivering the bottles, which were not marked in any way indicating any appropriation, the carter took the bottles from a box which was constructed to contain twelve, but which only contained the six ordered. There was no address or label on the boxes, and the beer was paid for on delivery, and the appellant contended the sale took place at K.-terrace. It was proved that the practice was for each traveller to enter his orders in an order book at the licensed premises. The respondent himself entered all these orders in a private general order book, and contended that he accepted or rejected each order as he considered fit. He then entered them in the general delivery book. The justices considered that there was no sale of beer at K.-terrace, and that the sale and appropriation took place at the licensed premises, and dismissed the summons.

Held, allowing the appeal, that the justices were wrong.—COCKER v. MCMULLEN, Q.B.D.; 81 L. T. 784.

See also Landlord and Tenant, 10.

LIGHT.—See Easement, 1.

LIMITATION STATUTES:

1. Adverse possession—Rent—Set-off—Will—Construction—Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), ss. 34, 42—Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), s. 1.—The effect of the Limitation Acts of 1833 and 1874 is that, where a tenant has obtained an absolute title to property by reason of the expiration of the statutory period, all rights which the reversioner would have had in respect of the land come to an end, and rent, the non-payment of which has given the occupier his title, cannot be deemed to be owing.

Consequently, rent in respect of the period previous to the extinguishment of the landlord's estate cannot be brought into account under a hotchpot clause in his will.

Decision of North, J. ([1900] 1 Ch. 292), reversed. —JOLLY, RE, GATHERCOLE v. NORFOLK, C.A., 657.

2. Company — Prospectus — Untrue statements — Action by shareholder for compensation—Directors' Liability Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 64), s. 3—Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42), s. 3.—An action for compensation for loss or damage sustained by a shareholder in a company by reason of untrue statements in a prospectus under section 3 of the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, is not an action "for penalties, damages, or sums of money given to the party grieved" within the meaning of section 3 of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, and consequently need not be brought within two years after the cause of action accrued.

The Directors' Liability Act, 1890, does not impose a penalty, but merely a liability to make compensation for a loss sustained.

In such an action the cause of action accrues and the time begins to run from the time when the plaintiff subscribes for shares.

Semble, the period of limitation would be six years under the Act 21 Jac. 1, c. 16.

Held, also, on the merits of the case, that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed.

Judgment of Kekewich, J. (ante, p. 39, [1899] 2 Ch. 523), affirmed.—THOMSON v. CLANMORRIS (LORD), C.A., 488; [1900] 1 Ch. 718; 69 L. J. Ch. 337; 82 L. T. 277.

3. Copyhold manor—Admittance—Arbitrary fine—Fine assessed and demanded more than six years after defendant's admittance—Accrual of lord's cause of action—Statutes of Limitation (21 Jac. 1, c. 16; 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 3).—P. was admitted tenant of a copyhold manor by M. on the 5th of April, 1892. M., as lord of the manor, could by right of custom claim an arbitrary fine from any tenant so admitted by him, such fine to be assessed by the lord, and to be reasonable and to be duly demanded.

On the 2nd of September, 1898, the fine, which had not been assessed until February of that year by M., was duly demanded; and, not being paid, the writ in the present action to recover the fine was issued on the 13th of April, 1899, whereupon P. pleaded in defence the Statutes of Limitation.

Held, that, as it was the admittance by the lord that gave him the right to demand the fine, the action could not be maintained, since the lord's cause of action accrued on the 5th of April, 1892, or more than six years before the action was brought. —MONCKTON v. PAYNE, Q.B.D., 44; [1899] 2 Q. B. 603.

4. Dispossession of land—Interference from equivocal acts—Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), s. 3.—In order to acquire a title to land, which has a known owner, by the Statute of Limitations, that owner must have lost his right to the land by being dispossessed of it or by having discontinued his possession of it (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 3).

Such owner cannot be dispossessed unless the plaintiff, who claims under the statute, obtained possession, which involves an animus possidendi—i.e., occupation with the intention of excluding the owner as well as other people.

When possession or dispossession has to be inferred from equivocal acts, the intention with which they are done is all-important.

Many years ago the plaintiffs placed gates at the end of a strip of land belonging to the defendants, over which the plaintiffs had a right of way only, and they did various equivocal acts on the strip of land in question, which was bounded on either side by defendants' land.

Held, in the circumstances of the case and upon the evidence (Jeune, P., dubitante), that the plaintiffs had failed to prove the acquisition of a title to the strip of land in dispute, and that the defendants had not been dispossessed for the statutory period.—LITTLEDALE v. LIVERPOOL COLLEGE, C.A., 177; [1900] 1 Ch. 19; 69 L. J. Ch. 87; 81 L. T. 564.

5. Powers of appointment under settlement—Money charged on lands—Express trust—Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), ss. 8, 10—Wills Act (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 27—Residuary bequest in will—Assets—Administration.—Powers of appointment over two separate sums of £2,000 were given to A. H. and G. W. respectively, the money to be raised on the death of each by trustees on an estate which they held in trust for a term of 500 years. G. W. died in 1860 and A. H. in 1886. The money was not raised on the death of either. An action was brought within twelve years of the death of A. H. to have both sums of £2,000 raised.

Held, that though the trustees could enter to raise the £2,000 due on the death of A. H., they could not raise the £2,000 due on the death of G. W., as the right to raise that was barred by section 10 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874.

Held, further, that the gift of residue in the will of A. H. operated as an appointment of her £2,000, and that this sum was applicable for payment of her debts and legacies.—HARTLEY, RE, WILLIAMS v. WILLIAMS, Ch.D. North, J., 245; [1900] 1 Ch. 152; 69 L. J. Ch. 79; 81 L. T. 804.

6. Public authority—"Within six months of ceasing of injury or damage"—Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (Lord Campbell's Act)—Negligence—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, s. 1 (a).—The injury or damage in respect of which an action lies under Lord Campbell's Act is the injury or damage to the deceased by the act, neglect, or default which caused his death, and not the injury or damage resulting from his death to the plaintiff.

Held, therefore, that where the action is brought against a statutory body the period of six months within which section 1 (a) of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, requires it to be commenced must be calculated from such act, neglect, or default, or in case of continuance of injury or damage to the deceased, from the ceasing thereof.—MARKEY v. TOLWORTH JOINT HOSPITAL DISTRICT BOARD, Q.B.D.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 738.

See also Bond; Company, 6; Mortgage, 8.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT:—

1. Bye-law—Betting—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 16—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 23—Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 134), s. 23.—A bye-law that "No person shall frequent or use any street or other public place, on behalf either of himself or any other person, for the purpose of bookmaking, or betting, or wagering, or agreeing to bet or wager with any person, or paying, or receiving, or settling bets," is a bye-law for the good government of the district, and is valid under a statutory power for the local authority to make bye-laws for the good government of the district. Nor is such a bye-law repugnant to section 23 of the Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867, which prohibits three or more persons assembling together in a street for the purpose of betting.

White v. Morley, 47 W. R. 583, [1899] 2 Q. B. 34, approved.—THOMAS v. SUTTERS, C.A., 133; [1900] 1 Ch. 10; 69 L. J. Ch. 27; 81 L. T. 469.

2. Corporation—Municipal corporation—Accounts—Elective auditor—Municipal accounts—Accounts of urban sanitary authority—Remuneration of auditor—Duty of auditor—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), ss. 25, 27 (1)—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 246.—A elective auditor of a borough is not entitled, under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, to any remuneration for his services.

The duty of an auditor of the accounts of a corporation as urban sanitary authority, under section 246 of the Public Health Act, 1875, is not confined to a mere examination of vouchers, but extends to the consideration whether any of the payments which have been made are illegal or improper.—THOMAS v. DEVONPORT CORPORATION, C.A., 89; [1900] 1 Q. B. 16; 69 L. J. Q. B. 51; 81 L. T. 427.

3. Costs as between solicitor and client—Public right of way—Action of trespass—Person acting under direction of local authority—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, s. 1 (b)—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 26.—A public right of way having been obstructed by the owner of the land through which it ran, the county council passed a resolution, under section 26 of the Local Government Act, 1894, that the powers and duties of the district council, who had failed to take proceedings to protect the right of way, should be transferred to them. The county council then, under an arrangement with the owner of the land, directed the defendants, two of their officials, to drive along the way so as to enable the question of the public right to be raised. The landowner brought an action of trespass against the defendants, in which the latter obtained judgment.

Held, that the defendants, in committing the alleged trespass by the direction of the county council, were acting in pursuance of the public duty of protecting public rights of way imposed upon the local authority by section 26 of the Local Government Act, 1894, and were therefore entitled to their costs as between solicitor and client under section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893.—GREENWELL v. HOWELL, C.A., 307; [1900] 1 Q. B. 535; 69 L. J. Q. B. 461; 82 L. T. 183.

4. County fund—County rate—Military aid for suppression of riots—Maintenance of troops—Mandamus.—The justices of a county, having applied to the military authorities to send soldiers into the county for the purpose of suppressing riots, made arrangements with tradesmen for the housing and lodging of the soldiers at certain agreed rates of payment, and pledged the credit of the county for such payment.

Held, that the tradesmen were not entitled to a writ of mandamus to the county council to make such payment out of the county fund.—REG. v. GLAMORGAN COUNTY COUNCIL, C.A., 112; [1899] 2 Q. B. 536; 81 L. T. 372.

5. Expenses—Rates—Asylums board—Contributions from county and county boroughs—Apportionment—Rateable values—Assessable values—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 33, sub-section 2—Agricultural Rates Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 16), ss. 1, 2, 3, 5, 9.—By a local Act passed in 1891 it was enacted that the Lancashire Asylums Board, which was thereby constituted, should, for the purpose of raising the annual sum required for payment of the expenses incurred by them, obtain contributions from the county and the county boroughs in proportion to the respective rateable values, as ascertained under section 33 of the Local Government Act, 1888, of the county and county boroughs.

Held, that, on the passing of the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, the provisions of that Act did not make it the duty of the asylums board to divide the sum required by them in proportion to the assessable values of the county and the county boroughs as ascertained under that Act, but that it was still their duty to divide it in proportion to the rateable values as ascertained under section 33 of the Local Government Act.

Judgment of Bruce and Ridley, JJ. (47 W. R. 361, [1899] 1 Q. B. 759), reversed. — LANCASHIRE ASYLUMS BOARD v. MANCHESTER (MAYOR), C.A., 356; [1900] 1 Q. B. 458; 69 L. J. Q. B. 234; 82 L. T. 1.

6. Highway—Liability to repair ratione tenuræ—Recovery of expenses incurred by district council in effecting repairs—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 25, sub-section 2.—Proceedings under section 25, sub-section 2, of the Local Government Act, 1894, to enforce liability to repair a highway ratione tenuræ must be taken against the occupier of the land charged with the repair, and not against the owner.

Cuckfield Rural District Council v. Goring, 46 W. R. 541, [1898] 1 Q. B. 865, affirmed.—DAVENTRY DISTRICT COUNCIL v. PARKER, C.A., 68; [1900] 1 Q. B. 1; 69 L. J. Q. B. 105; 81 L. T. 403.

7. Parish council—Mandamus—Costs of action—Sanction of action by parish meeting—Consent to incur expenses over 3d. in the pound.—By section 11 of the Local Government Act, 1894, a parish council cannot, without the consent of the parish meeting, incur expenses or liabilities which will involve a rate above 3d. in the pound for any year, and the sum raised by the council in any year is not to exceed 6d.

An action was brought by the parish council in which they were unsuccessful, and they incurred costs to the successful defendant amounting to £92 14s. 10d. A rate of 3d. would realise £54 12s., and since March, 1899, when the financial year began, precepts had been issued for £52, £25 of which went to defray the council's costs, and the balance in parish expenses.

After a rule nisi for a mandamus to the council to issue their precept to the overseers to pay the sum due to the defendant for costs, two parish meetings were called, but the necessary resolutions were not passed to raise the extra 3d., owing to the small attendance.

Held, that as no information was forthcoming as to the proceedings before the action was commenced, it must be assumed consent was given, and the rule must be made absolute.—REG. v. STOKE PARISH COUNCIL, Q.B.D.; 82 L. T. 198.

8. Public health—Arbitration—"Full compensation"—Practice—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 308.—The "full compensation," to which, by section 308 of the Public Health Act, 1875, any person who sustains damage by reason of the exercise of the powers of the Act, in relation to any matter as to which he is not himself in default, is entitled, is confined to costs as taxed between party and party, and does not include other expenses reasonably and properly incurred.

The appellant was owner of premises in a borough of which the respondents were the local authority. The respondents served a notice requiring him to abate a nuisance on his premises, and made a complaint to justices, who ordered him to comply with the notice. He appealed to quarter sessions, and the appeal was dismissed, subject to a case for the opinion of the High Court. The High Court ordered that the order of quarter sessions dismissing the appeal be quashed with costs, and that the respondents pay to the appellant his costs of the appeal to the High Court, to be taxed. The costs of the two appeals were taxed, and paid to the appellant. In prosecuting his appeals the appellant reasonably incurred greater expenses than those he received from the respondents. The appellant claimed the difference between the taxed costs of the two appeals and the amount so expended, and he also claimed the costs of defending himself before the justices.

On a special case stated by an arbitrator acting under section 308,

Held, that the words "full compensation" were confined to costs which had been taxed and were recoverable as between the parties, and the appellant was not entitled so recover.

Decision of the Divisional Court ([1900] 2 Q. B. 104) affirmed.—BARNETT v. ECCLES CORPORATION, C.A.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 423; 69 L. J. Q. B. 556.

9. Public health—Compulsory purchase of land—User for different purpose—Order of Local Government Board — Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 175.—A direction by the Local Government Board under section 175 of the Public Health Act, 1875, that land which has been acquired by a local authority for specific purposes, but is not required for those purposes, shall not be sold, cannot authorize a permanent user of the land for purposes other than those for which it was originally acquired.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (reported ante, p. 69, [1900] 1 Ch. 51), affirmed.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. HANWELL URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, C.A., 690; 82 L. T. 778.

10. Public health—Continuing offence — Work executed in contravention of bye-law—Continuance in same state—Builder without power to remedy breach—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 158.—By the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 158, where the execution of any work is an offence, in respect whereof the offender is liable in respect of any bye-law to a penalty, the existence of the work during its continuance in such a form and state as to be in contravention of the bye-law shall be deemed to be a continuing offence.

A builder was convicted for building a house without sufficient air space, contrary to a bye-law. The builder was not the owner, and had not been in possession, nor had any right to go on the premises after the conviction. Afterwards the builder was prosecuted for a continuing offence in respect of the continuance of the work in the same state, in contravention of the bye-law, and convicted.

On a case stated,

Held, that the builder, having no power to remedy the breach complained of, was not guilty of a continuing offence, and the conviction was wrong.—WELSH & SON v. WEST HAM CORPORATION, Q.B.D.; [1900] 1 Q. B. 324; 69 L. J. Q. B. 114; 82 L. T. 262.

11. Public health—Sanitary expenses—Capital or income—Leasehold houses—Equitable tenant for life—Repairs—Ground-rent—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76)—Dangerous structures notice—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.).—There is no distinction in the position of an equitable tenant for life of leaseholds where the property is sub-let at a rack-rent, and where it is sublet at an improved ground-rent; as between tenant for life and remainderman the cost of complying with a sanitary notice under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, and a dangerous structures notice under the London Building Act, 1894, is chargeable against income.—COPLAND'S SETTLEMENT, RE, JONES v. CARDEN, Ch.D. Byrne, J.; [1900] 1 Ch. 326; 69 L. J. Ch. 240; 82 L. T. 194.

12. Public health—Sewer—Alteration of premises by owner—Owner required by local authority to do work which they are liable to do—Work done as a volunteer—Right of owner to recover cost.—The owner of a house who was enlarging his premises was required by the local authority's surveyor (amongst other things) to take up and relay the back drain of the house (which was in fact a sewer) and to construct an interception chamber or manhole, and these works the owner, upon being told that they must be done, though no actual steps were taken to enforce their execution, agreed to do under protest and did do under the direction and by order of the surveyor of the local authority, but without any legal proceedings being taken against him and without serious threat of such proceedings. The liability in law for carrying out these works rested on the local authority. In an action by the owner to recover the cost of the works from the local authority on the ground that he was compelled by them to do works which the local authority were compellable by law to do,

Held, that the owner, in the execution of these works, was acting as a volunteer and not under compulsion, and was therefore not entitled to recover, although without legal proceedings or the threat of such there may be sufficient compulsion to prevent a person being regarded as a volunteer.—ELLIS v. BROMLEY DISTRICT COUNCIL, Q.B.D.; 81 L. T. 224.

13. Public health—Sewer—Drainage—Right to pollute watercourse—40 & 41 Vict. c. xxxvi., s. 134.—A private Act of Parliament enacted that "no person shall without the consent of the commissioners . . . open any new drain or other work into any of the drainage works of the commissioners . . . and no person shall cause any filthy or unwholesome water, or washings of manufactories or mines, or other foul or poisonous liquid to flow into any watercourse within the jurisdiction of the commissioners," and imposed penalties for the violation of the prohibitions. The section contained a proviso that "this section shall not apply to any person having a legal right to cause such water, washing, or liquid as aforesaid to flow into any existing river, stream, or watercourse."

Before and at the time of the passing of the Act the sewage of a town flowed into a tidal river within the jurisdiction of the commissioners. The urban sanitary authority proposed to remodel their system of drainage, and to make a new outfall into the river, in place of those previously existing.

Held, that, assuming the tidal river to be a watercourse within the meaning of the Act, the case fell within the above-mentioned proviso, and that the commissioners had no power to prevent the carrying out of the new drainage works. The exemption in the proviso is not to be restricted to the precise amount or manner of pollution going on at the time of the passing of the Act.—SOMERSET DRAINAGE COMMISSIONERS v. BRIDGWATER CORPORATION, H.L.; 81 L. T. 729.

14. Public health—Sewer—Neglect to cleanse sewers—Nuisance—Action against local authority—Public Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 19, 299.—Where a local authority has neglected to perform the duty imposed upon them by section 19 of the Public Health Act, 1875, of properly cleansing the sewers vested in them, and damage is thereby caused to an individual, an action will lie against the local authority at the suit of the person injured.

Decision of Mathew, J. (ante, p. 191), affirmed.—BARON v. PORTSLADE DISTRICT COUNCIL, C.A., 641.

15. Public health—Sewer—Sewage matter—Pollution—Trade effluent—Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75)—West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxvi.), ss. 9, 10—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 17, 21—Public Health Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 17.—Where a prescriptive right exists to discharge drainage into a sewer, trade effluent may also be discharged, and a local authority has no right to cut off the connection of the drain and the sewer, although as a matter of fact the discharge may prejudicially affect the discharge of the sewage matter.—EASTWOOD v. HONLEY COUNCIL, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 614; [1900] 1 Ch. 781; 69 L. J. Ch. 470.

16. Public health—Sewer—Vesting in local authority—"Sewers made by any person for his own profit"—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 13, sub-section 1.—A drain was made by the owner of a quarry for the purpose of collecting and carrying off surface water coming on to his land and preventing it from running over the quarry. By means of the drain the quarry could be more economically and conveniently worked than if the water were allowed to spread over it.

Held, that the drain was a sewer made by a person for his own profit within the meaning of section 13, sub-section 1, of the Public Health Act, 1875, and did not vest in the local authority of the district.

Decision of the Divisional Court ([1899] 1 Q. B. 979) reversed.

Croysdale v. Sunbury-on-Thames Urban Council, [1898] 2 Ch. 515, approved.—SYKES v. SOWERBY URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, C.A.; [1900] 1 Q. B. 584; 69 L. J. Q. B. 464; 82 L. T. 177.

17. Public health—Street—Paving expenses—Alteration of width of carriage-way and footway—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 150.—An urban authority has no power under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, when paving and making good a street, to alter the width of the carriage-way and footway.—ROBERTSON v. BRISTOL (MAYOR), C.A., 498; [1900] 2 Q. B. 198; 69 L. J. Q. B. 590; 82 L. T. 516.

18. Public health—Street—Private street work—Charge of expenses on frontager's premises—Date from which charge takes effect—"Completion of works" or "final apportionment"—Vendor and purchaser—"Outgoings"—Implied covenant against incumbrances—Private Street Works Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 57), ss. 1, 12, 13.—The apportioned expenses of private street works executed under the Private Street Works Act, 1892, become a charge on the premises affected thereby as from the date of the completion of the works, and not merely as from the date of the final apportionment.

If, therefore, the premises are sold free from incumbrances after the completion of the works, but before the date of the final apportionment, the sum finally apportioned thereon is payable by the vendor.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (ante, p. 6), affirmed.—STOCK v. MEAKIN, C.A., 420; [1900] 1 Ch. 683; 69 L. J. Ch. 401; 82 L. T. 248.

19. Public health—Water supply—District council—Riparian owner—River—Water rights—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 51, 332.—A local authority has no power either as a riparian owner or under the Public Health Act, 1875, to affect the flow of a stream for the purpose of supplying its district with water if the rights of a lower riparian owner are thereby infringed, even though such riparian owner sustained no actual damage.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (47 W. R. 376, [1879] 1 Ch. 583), affirmed. — ROBERTS v. GWYRFAI DISTRICT COUNCIL, C.A., 51; [1899] 2 Ch. 608; 81 L. T. 465.

20. Public health—Water-tower erected by company under special Act—Non-compliance of undertakers with bye-laws under Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 157—Jurisdiction of council to enforce bye-law.—The Uckfield District Council laid two informations against the respondent water company for having begun to build a water-tower without giving any of the notices prescribed by, or in any otherwise complying with, the provisions of certain bye-laws made by the council under powers conferred on them by the Public Health Act, 1875.

The justices dismissed the informations on the ground that, as the erection of the water-tower was expressly authorized by the company's private Act of 1897 the bye-laws did not apply.

Held, that the justices were wrong. The special Act was merely to enable the respondent company to build the water-tower on land belonging to someone else, but being so empowered they were then in the same position as a private person intending to erect a building on his own land, and under a similar obligation to comply with bye-laws duly made under the Public Health Act, 1875, which Act, although not expressly incorporated in the respondent company's private Act of 1897, must, in the absence of any expression to the contrary, be held to apply.

Held, also, that there was no such inconsistency between the powers conferred by the special Act of 1897 upon the respondents to erect their tower and the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875, empowering the appellants to make bye-laws, as would support an inference that the latter had been repealed. — UCKFIELD DISTRICT COUNCIL v. CROWBOROUGH WATER CO., Q.B.D., 63; [1899] 2 Q. B. 664; 81 L. T. 539.

21. Rating—Drill hall—Not used exclusively as such—Justices—Summons to enforce rate—Volunteer Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 65), s. 26.—A volunteer drill hall, besides being used for the purposes of the battalion, was let for concerts and other entertainments. It was assessed in the valuation list, and district rates were levied in respect of it. There had been no appeal against such assessment.

On a complaint to recover the amount of the district rates,

Held, that the justices were bound to issue process for the recovery of such rates, as the premises were not exempt as being solely used by the Crown for the purposes of the Crown, nor were they exempt under section 26 of the Volunteer Act, 1863, for they were not solely used as a storehouse.

Held, further, that the justices could not go into the question of the amount of the assessment.—RAYNER v. DREWITT, Q.B.D.; 82 L. T. 718.

22. Rating—General district rate—Reservoir—"Land covered with water"—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 211, sub-section 1 (b).—A reservoir of a water company held to be "land covered with water" within the meaning of these words in section 211, sub-section 1 (b), of the Public Health Act, 1875, and therefore assessable to general district rates at one-fourth of its annual value.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, 47 W. R. 177, [1899] 1 Q. B. 273, affirmed.—HAMPTON URBAN COUNCIL v. SOUTHWARK AND VAUXHALL WATER CO., H.L., 209; [1900] A. C. 3; 69 L. J. Q. B. 72; 81 L. T. 547.

23. Rating—Railway—Exemptions—Land used as railway for public conveyance—Liverpool Corporation Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. clxxxi.), s. 36 (ii.).—The Liverpool Corporation Act, 1893, s. 36, provides that no person occupying "land used as a railway made under the powers of any Act of Parliament for public conveyance" shall be rated in respect of the same to the general rate leviable by the corporation in any greater proportion than one-fourth part of the net annual value. A railway company occupied land in Liverpool for a goods station. The premises consisted of a large covered shed, open on one side; and, on the other, with openings in the walls to admit trucks. Inside the shed were a number of railway lines, comprising sidings, and running alongside platforms, for the purpose of loading and unloading railway trucks with goods. All these lines were used for the conveyance of any goods sent by the public to or from the premises. The premises were some distance from the company's main line, and were connected therewith by a dock line belonging to the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, who under statutory powers permitted the company to use such line, and by a tramway laid across a street by the company under a licence granted by the corporation under statutory powers. The company's premises were acquired and laid out under powers conferred upon them by a private Act.

Held, that the land used for the lines, sidings, and platforms inside the company's premises was not land "used as a railway made under the powers of an Act of Parliament for public conveyance" within the meaning of section 36 of the Liverpool Corporation Act, 1893, and that the company were not entitled, with regard to those premises, to the partial exemption in respect of rating contained in that section.

Judgment of Divisional Court ([1899] 2 Q. B. 197) reversed.—WILLIAMS v. LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO., C.A.; [1900] 1 Q. B. 760; 69 L J. Q. B. 531; 82 L. T. 287.

24. Street—Telephone company—Illegal stretching of wires across public street — Removal by local authority—Guernsey, law of.—In a suit by a telephone company against the local authority to recover damages for cutting down and removing telephone wires stretched across a public street, it appeared that the company was not authorized by statute so to place their wires.

Held, that the action failed; the removal was within the legal powers of the defendants, and there was no allegation of any unnecessary damage having been caused by the cutting.—NATIONAL TELEPHONE CO. v. CONSTABLES OF ST. PETER PORT, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 317; 82 L. T. 398.

See also Arbitration, 3; Charity, 3; Election Law, 2; Poor Law, 12; Scotland, Law of, 1; Tramway, 2, 3.

LONDON BUILDING ACTS.—See Local Government, 11; Metropolis, 1-3, 13.

LORD CAMPBELL'S ACT.—See Admiralty, 6, 7; Limitation Statutes, 6.

LUNACY:—

1. Lunatic—Charging order—Fund in court.—Where a charging order has been obtained against the interest of a lunatic in a fund in the Court of Chancery, the charge will be satisfied before the fund is ordered to be transferred to Lunacy.—BROWN, RE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 461; [1900] 1 Ch. 489; 69 L. J. Ch. 234; 82 L. T. 83.

2. Lunatic—Contract to purchase real estate—Contract carried out by committee under direction of court—Voidable contract—Conversion of lunatic's estate.—A direction by the Master in Lunacy to the committee of a lunatic to carry out a contract by such lunatic for the purchase of real estate, and to provide the purchase-money out of such lunatic's personal estate, amounts to an election on the part of the lunacy authorities to confirm the voidable contract of such lunatic, and the result will be to effect a conversion of the estate so contracted to be purchased as between the lunatic's heir-at-law and next-of-kin, and such estate will accordingly descend to the heir.—BALDWYN v. SMITH, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 346; [1900] 1 Ch. 588; 69 L. J. Ch. 336; 82 L. T. 616.

3. Lunatic not so found—Foreign lunatic—Status of lunacy declared by competent foreign court—Guardian appointed by competent foreign court—"Tuteur"—Vesting of property in guardian—Power of guardian to give receipts and discharges—Payment and transfer to guardian.—Where application is made to the court to direct an English firm holding moneys and securities of a foreign lunatic for payment and transfer thereof to the applicant, if there has been a judicial declaration of the status of lunacy by a competent court of the country to which the lunatic belongs, and if the applicant on the lunatic's behalf has, according to the laws of the lunatic's country, the latter's property vested in him in the sense that he has the right to retain and deal with it without becoming the actual owner, the application may properly be, and generally should be, granted.

Semble, a French "tuteur" is such an applicant.—THIERY v. CHALMERS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 148; [1900] 1 Ch. 80; 69 L. J. Ch. 122; 81 L. T. 511.

4. Pauper lunatic—Reception order—Justices—Workhouse outside union—Poor Law Amendment Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 101), s. 56—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), ss. 14, 24.—Section 14 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, provides that paupers who are lunatics and ought to be sent to an asylum shall be brought before "a justice having jurisdiction in the place where the pauper resides."

A pauper who was chargeable to a union became lunatic while residing in the workhouse infirmary, which was situate outside the union.

Held, that a justice having jurisdiction in the union to which the workhouse belonged had power to deal with the case, since section 56 of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1844, applied, and the workhouse must therefore be considered as situated in the parish to which the lunatic was chargeable.—REG. v. BELL, Q.B.D.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 391; 69 L. J. Q. B. 622; 82 L. T. 711.

5. Person of unsound mind—Foreign domicil—English property of foreign lunatic—Foreign receiver—Next friend, action by—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 134.—An action can be brought in the name of a lunatic not so found by inquisition without the sanction of the Crown.

The administrateur provisoire, with power to collect the personal estate of a lunatic domiciled abroad, can bring an action in England in his own name and in the name of the lunatic, and as her next friend, for the delivery to him of her property in England.—DIDISHEIM v. LONDON AND WESTMINSTER BANK, C.A., 501; [1900] 2 Ch. 15; 69 L. J. Ch. 443; 82 L. T. 738.

6. Person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition—Pauper lunatic—Application of property—Jurisdiction—Discretion—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 Vict. c. 5), ss. 116 (4), 117, 299, 300.—A wandering lunatic not so found by inquisition was detained in a county asylum, and maintained there at the expense of a union. By an order of the Master in Lunacy, a sum exceeding £300, which had been found upon the lunatic's person, and represented his entire savings, had been lodged in court, with directions to raise by periodical sales thereout the sum of £35 a year for the maintenance of his destitute wife and daughter. The guardians of the union applied for a small sum in respect of the lunatic's past maintenance and for an allowance of £26 a year for his future maintenance, over and above some provision for the wife.

Held, that, as section 299 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, only gave a power to justices to act summarily in certain cases, and did not interfere with the discretionary power of the Lords Justices to direct the property of the lunatic to be applied for his maintenance, the reasonable application of the guardians should be complied with.—TYE, RE, Lunacy, 276; [1900] 1 Ch. 249; 69 L. J. Ch. 153; 81 L. T. 743.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION:—

Corporation—Liability in action for.—An action for malicious prosecution will lie against a corporation.

Decision of Darling, J. ([1899] 1 Q. B. 392, 47 W R. Dig. 44), affirmed.—CORNFORD v. CARLTON BANK (LIMITED), C.A.; [1900] 1 Q. B. 22; 81 L. T. 415.

MANDAMUS.—See Local Government, 4, 7; Metropolis, 12; Practice, 13, 14.

MARGARINE.—See Adulteration, 3.

MARKET:—

1. Bye-laws—Ultra vires—Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 14), s. 42—Diseases of Animals Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 57), s. 32, sub-section 2.—The Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, s. 32, sub-section 2, incorporated with the said Act the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847, and section 42 of the latter Act provides that the undertakers (authorized by the special Act to regulate a market or fair) may, from time to time, make such bye-laws as they think fit (inter alia) "For regulating the use of the market-place and fair, and the buildings, stalls, pens, and standings therein; and for preventing nuisances or obstructions therein, or in the immediate approaches thereto."

A local authority purporting to act in the exercise of the powers of the above Acts made a bye-law to the effect that sale-rings at a public market belonging to it should not "be used for private sales, or for sales to any limited number of persons, or for sales in which any class of the public are excluded from bidding or buying."

Held, affirming the decision of the First Division of the Court of Session ([1899] 1 F. 665, 458) (Lord Shand dissenting), that the bye-law was not ultra vires.—SCOTT v. GLASGOW CORPORATION, H.L. (Sc.); [1899] A. C. 470; 81 L. T. 302.

2. Toll—Exposure for sale—Newton District Im- provement Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. c.), s. 59, Schedule B.—The plaintiffs were authorized by section 59 and Schedule B of the Newton District Improvement Act, 1855, to collect a toll "for every cart used by any person for exposing or in which shall be exposed for sale any article," &c.

An aerated water dealer was in the habit of sending round a cart loaded with aerated waters to the houses of his customers. The man in charge of the cart entered the house of the customer, took his order, and there and then delivered from the cart the goods ordered.

Held, that the goods were not exposed for sale within the meaning of the schedule, and that no toll was therefore chargeable in respect of the cart.—NEWTON-IN-MAKERFIELD COUNCIL v. LYNN, Q.B.D., 222; 69 L. J. Q. B. 230; 81 L. T. 756.

3. Tolls—Selling potatoes in the street—Penalty—Licensed Hawker—Exemption—Hawkers Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 33) s. 3 (3)—Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847 (10 Vict. c. 14), s. 13.—By section 3, sub-section 3, of the Hawkers Act, 1888, a person is not required to take a hawker's licence to sell in the street fish, fruit, victuals, or coals.

By section 13 of the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847, a penalty is imposed on "every person other than a licensed hawker" who exposes for sale in the street any produce in respect of which a toll is leviable by the market authority of that district.

Held, that if such a vendor has taken out a hawker's licence, he is to be deemed a licensed hawker and comes within the benefit given to that class by section 13 of the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847.—LLANDUDNO DISTRICT COUNCIL v. HUGHES, Q.B.D., 366; [1900] 1 Q. B. 472; 69 L. J. Q. B. 303; 82 L. T. 147.

MARRIED WOMAN:—

1. Infant — Marriage settlement — Covenant by husband implied—Married Woman's Property Act, 1882, s 19.—An ante-nuptial settlement entered into in 1891 by the intending wife (an infant), the intending husband, and trustees, recited that it was agreed that a legacy to which the lady was entitled, but not for her separate use, should be settled, and it was thereby witnessed that the lady with the privity and approbation of the intending husband declared that the legacy should be held upon certain trusts. There was no express covenant by the husband. The lady repudiated the settlement when she came of age.

Held, that having regard to the recital, a covenant must be implied on the part of the husband to give effect to the settlement, inasmuch as the settlement would otherwise be wholly inoperative as the declaration in the operative part by the lady being an infant had no effect at all; that by virtue of section 19 of the Married Women's Property Act, Act, 1882, the settlement was excluded from the operation of that Act, and that the marital right of the husband to the legacy was barred by his implied covenant.—BUCKLAND v. BUCKLAND, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 637; 82 L. T. 759.

2. Marriage—Capacity—Uncle and niece—Celebration abroad—Domicil—Jews—Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85). s. 2—Marriage Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 72), s. 5—Marriage Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54).—A marriage between a niece and an uncle, who are members of the Jewish faith and domiciled British subjects, is invalid, although celebrated abroad where such a marriage would be legal.—DE WILTON, RE, DE WILTON v. MONTEFIORE, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 645.

3. Separate use—Restraint on anticipation—Bankruptcy — Subsequent discoverture — Life interest, residue of—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 1, sub-section 5; s. 19.—Where a married woman entitled to property for life for her separate use without power of anticipation becomes bankrupt, her entire life interest vests in her trustee in bankruptcy under section 1, sub-section 5 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, subject, however, to the restraint upon anticipation under section 19; but the restraint upon anticipation saved by section 19 only attaches to her life interest during the joint lives of herself and her husband, and not to the residue of her life interest after her husband's death.

Consequently, the trustee in bankruptcy of a married woman, who at the date of the bankruptcy is entitled to real property for her life for her separate use without power of anticipation, becomes entitled upon the death of the husband of the bankrupt to the future rents and profits during the remainder of her lifetime.—WHEELER'S SETTLEMENT, RE, BRIGGS v. RYAN, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 10; [1899] 2 Ch. 717; 81 L. T. 172.

4. Wife's tort—Contract—Liability of husband.—In July, 1898, the defendant G. K., the wife of the defendant H. K., requested the plaintiff to join her in the purchase of some shares, and asked her to raise a sum of £2,000 to be invested in the purchase of the shares, holding out as an inducement to the plaintiff that she would by means of the investment be able in three months to repay the plaintiff the sum of £5,300 which she then owed her. The plaintiff agreed to raise the £2,000 when the shares had been purchased. Shortly afterwards the plaintiff, relying on the representation of the defendant G. K. that she had bought the shares, signed two promissory notes for £1,000 each, and, her solicitor having discounted them, paid the proceeds to the said defendant, and the plaintiff paid the notes on maturity.

The defendant G. K. never in fact purchased the shares.

In an action for damages by the plaintiff against the defendant G. K. and her husband,

Held, that the contract was effected prior to and independently of the fraud complained of, and that the fraud was not the means of effecting the contract in the sense in which that expression is used in Liverpool Adelphi Loan Association v. Fairhurst, 9 Ex. 422, and that on the authority of that case and of the case of Wright v. Leonard, 11 C. B. N. S. 258, the husband was liable in damages for his wife's deceit.—EARLE v. KINGSCOTE, Ch.D. Byrne, J.; [1900] 1 Ch. 203; 69 L. J. Ch. 202; 81 L. T. 775.

See also Administration, 3; Bond; Conflict of Laws, 2; Criminal Law, 6; Divorce, 7-14; Domicil, 1, 2; Peer; Practice, 10, 14; Solicitor, 11.

MASTER and SERVANT:—

1. Apprentice—Infant—Stipulation in apprenticeship deed not for benefit of infant—Validity—Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 90), s. 6.—An apprenticeship deed contained a stipulation that the master should not be liable to instruct the apprentice or to pay her wages at times when the business of the master should be at a standstill through accident beyond the control of the master.

Held, that this stipulation did not render the contract as a whole unfair as against the infant, and that the apprenticeship deed was not invalid.—GREEN v. THOMPSON, Q.B.D., 31.

2. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—

Building "being constructed"—Building complete and in use—Removal of scaffolding—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7, sub-section 1.—A building constructed by means of a scaffolding is "being constructed" within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, until the scaffolding has been taken down.

A builder erected a scaffolding for the purpose of raising building materials from a lower level to the higher level on which stood the building which he was constructing.

After the building was complete and while it was in actual use a workman was injured as he was removing gear from this scaffolding.

Held, that the workman was employed on a building which was "being constructed" by means of a scaffolding, and was entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—FRID v. FENTON, C.A.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 436; 82 L. T. 193.

3. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Building being constructed by means of a scaffolding—Painting ceiling of theatre—Undertakers—Persons undertaking construction of part of building—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7, sub-sections 1, 2.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act it appeared that a firm of builders had undertaken to build a theatre, and that the building owners, under powers reserved to them in the contract, had placed a substantial portion of the work, including the fixing of a ceiling and the erection of a proscenium, in the hands of a firm of decorators. A workman in the employment of the decorators, while working on a scaffolding erected by the builders, and while engaged in painting the ceiling of the theatre (the building being over thirty feet in height), accidentally fell to the floor and was killed. In proceedings against the decorators, Held, that the employment of the deceased was an employment to which the Act applied, and that the respondents were undertakers within the Act.

Wood v. Walsh & Sons, 47 W. R. 504, [1899] 1 Q. B. 1009, considered.—MASON v. DEAN, C.A., 353; [1900] 1 Q. B. 770; 69 L. J. Q. B. 358; 82 L. T. 139.

4. Employers' Liability—Accident — Compensation —Building being "constructed" by means of a "scaffolding"—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—The building of a house exceeding thirty feet in height was so far completed that the roof was on and the outside scaffolding was taken down, but the inside plastering work was not completed. To enable the plasterers, who were in the employment of the builder, to reach the ceilings and upper parts of the walls of the rooms, movable trestles, with boards placed across the top, were used for the plasterers to stand upon. While some of the plasterers were working on the trestles and boards another plasterer was plastering the walls of the top landing, not standing upon trestles and boards, and, while so working, he fell over the stairs and was killed.

The county court judge found that the arrangement of trestles and boards was a "scaffolding" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and that, therefore, the building was, at the time of the accident, being constructed by means of a scaffolding.

Held, by A. L. Smith and Rigby, L.JJ. (Collins, L.J., dissenting), that there was evidence upon which the county court judge was entitled to find that the arrangement of trestles and boards was a "scaffolding" within the meaning of the section. —MAUDE v. BROOK, C.A., 290; [1900] 1 Q. B. 575; 69 L. J. Q. B. 322; 82 L. T. 39.

5. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Building exceeding thirty feet in height—Employment —Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7, sub-section 1.—Internal communication between a building over thirty feet high and an adjoining building less than that height, coupled with the fact that the same business is carried on in both buildings, is not evidence to justify a finding that the lower building is a part of the higher and that a workman injured while engaged in demolishing the lower building is employed on the demolition of a building exceeding thirty feet in height within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—RIXSOM v. PRITCHARD & RENWICK, C.A.; [1900] 1 Q. B. 800; 69 L. J. Q. B. 494; 82 L. T. 186.

6. Employers' liability — Accident—Compensation —"Claim for compensation"—Initiation of proceedings—Time within which they must be made—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), ss. 1, 2 (1).—By section 2, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it is provided that "proceedings for recovery . . . of compensation shall not be maintainable unless . . . the claim for compensation has been made within six months from the occurrence of the accident."

The expression "the claim for compensation" means, not the initiation of proceedings before the tribunal by which the compensation is to be assessed, but a notice of a claim for compensation sent to the workman's employer. A workman who had been injured in the course of his employment sent to his employers, within six months, a notice of the accident and also a notice stating that he claimed a certain amount as compensation for the injury. More than six months after the accident he filed a request for arbitration in the county court.

Held, that the proceedings were in time.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (ante, p. 534, [1900] 2 Q. B. 145) reversed.—POWELL v. MAIN COLLIERY CO., H.L.; [1900] A. C. 366; 69 L. J. Q. B. 758.

7. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Claim not made within six months—Waiver—Agreement to pay compensation—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 2, sub-section 1.—A workman was injured by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, which totally incapacitated him from work. His employer paid him half the amount of his average weekly wages from the second week after the accident, and negotiations took place between them as to paying the workman a lump sum in lieu of the weekly payment. The parties were unable to agree upon the amount, and after the expiration of six months from the accident the negotiations ceased and the weekly payment was stopped. The workman thereupon took proceedings to have the compensation assessed under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, when the employer took the objection that the claim for compensation was not made within the six months.

Held, that, in the circumstances, there was evidence of an agreement by the employer to pay compensation under the Act, the only question left open being the amount of compensation, and that, in such a case, the employer was precluded from taking the objection that the claim for compensation was not made in time.—WRIGHT v. BAGNALL

(JOHN), C.A., 533; [1900] 2 Q. B. 240; 69 L. J. Q. B. 551; 82 L. T. 346.

8. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Claim to be made within six months—Waiver of claim by employers — Estoppel—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 2, sub-section 1.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act it appeared that, shortly after the accident, the insurance company with whom the employers had insured their liability under the Act began to make weekly payments to the injured workman of half the sum which he had been earning as weekly wages, and continued to do so for ten months, taking receipts from him for the payments on account of compensation which might be or become due to him under the Workmen's Compensation Act. The payments having ceased, the workman filed a request for arbitration.

Held, that the employers were not precluded from taking the objection that the claim for compensation was not made within six months from the occurrence of the accident, as required by section 2, sub-section 1, of the Act.

Wright v. John Bagnall & Sons (Limited), ante, p. 533, distinguished.—RENDALL v. HILL'S DRY DOCK Co. C.A., 530; [1900] 2 Q. B. 245; 69 L. J. Q. B. 554; 82 L. T. 521.

9. Employers' Liability—Accident—Compensation Course of employment—"On or in or about" a factory Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7, sub-section 1.—A workman was employed to fetch water in a water-cart from a brook to a steam-engine in a shed connected with a mortar mill for mixing mortar for use in the construction of a building. While he was conducting the horse and cart along a public road from the brook to the engine, the horse ran away and the cart went over him. The place where the accident happened was was at least 110 yards distant from the engine.

Held, that, though the engine was a "factory" within section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, there was no evidence that the workman was, at the time of the accident, employed "about" a factory within the meaning of sub-section 1 of that section, and that, therefore, compensation was not payable.—FENN v. MILLER, C.A., 369; [1900] 1 Q. B. 788; 69 L. J. Q. B. 439; 82 L. T. 284.

10. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Course of employment—Workman injured on his way to his work—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 1.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it appeared that the deceased workman, who was in the employment of a railway company and lived near K. Station, being under orders to work in an engine-shed at H. Station, went by train from K. to H. free of charge, arriving at H. a quarter of an hour before the time for beginning work. Instead of making use, as he might have done, of either a bridge or a subway for the purpose of reaching the engine-shed, he proceeded to cross the line on the level, and while doing so was knocked down by a train and killed.

Held, that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment of the deceased.—HOLMES v. GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY Co., C.A., 681; [1900] 2 Q. B. 409.

11. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Dependants—Dependency on child's earnings—Standard of living—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, s. 7, sub-section 2.—A father earning wages may be in part dependent upon the earnings of his child within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Whether there is dependency is entirely a question of fact in each case, irrespective of the standard of living in the neighbourhood or the class to which the family belong.

Where it was proved that the child contributed to the family wages fund and that the father received the contribution and spent it in maintaining himself and his family,

Held, to be sufficient evidence for a finding in fact that the father was dependent upon the earnings of the child within the meaning of the Act, and was consequently entitled to compensation for the death of the child who was killed by an accident in the course of his employment.—MAIN COLLIERY Co. v. DAVIES, H.L.; [1900] A. C. 358; 69 L. J. Q. B. 755.

12. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Employment on, in, or about a mine—"Mine"—Sidings belonging to a mine—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, s. 7 (2), provides that "in this Act 'mine' means a mine to which the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, applies"; and the latter Act, section 75, provides that "in this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, 'mine' includes . . . all the shafts, levels, planes, works, tramways, and sidings, both below ground and above ground, in and adjacent to and belonging to the mine."

The defendants owned a number of collieries, and also a private railway about twelve miles long, not being a "railway" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. This railway connected all the collieries, and was used for conveying coal from all the collieries, and was the sole means by which coal was conveyed away from them; and there was on this railway a depôt, with sidings, where coal was stored and distributed to purchasers.

An engine driver employed by the defendants was killed by accident when he was driving the engine of a train carrying coal from one of the collieries to the depôt; the accident occurred about three quarters of a mile from the pit mouth of this colliery and close to the sidings of the depôt.

Held, that the workman was not employed "on or in or about a mine," within the meaning of the Act, when the accident happened.—TURNBULL v. LAMBTON COLLIERIES Co., C.A.; 82 L. T. 589.

13. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Factory—Factory of third person—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—Section 7, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, which provides that the Act shall apply only to employment by the undertakers "on or in or about a . . . . factory," applies only to a factory occupied by the employer where he carries on his business, and does not include a factory belonging to a third person to which the workman is sent on his employer's business.—FRANCIS v. TURNER, C.A., 228; [1900] 1 Q. B. 478; 69 L. J. Q. B. 182; 81 L. T. 770.

14. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Factory—Machinery—Loading from a dock—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), ss. 1, 7—Factory and Workshop Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 37), s. 23, sub-section 1.—A stevedore's labourer was injured by an accident in the course of his employment. At the time of the accident he was on board a ship lying in a dock, and was engaged in loading the ship from a lighter by means of a steam winch which was attached to the ship. No shore machinery was being used.

Held, that the steam winch was not constituted a factory within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, by virtue of section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895; for it was not being used in the process of loading from a dock.—HENNESSEY v. MCCABE, C.A., 231; [1900] 1 Q. B. 491; 69 L. J. Q. B. 173; 81 L. T. 575.

15. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—"Factory"—Machinery used for unloading from ship to quay—Workman on ship—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7 (2).—A workman was employed in unloading bags from a ship in dock to the quay; his work was, with another man, to make up sets of bags in the hold which were laid across a rope strop. When a set was made up the strop was fastened to the hook of the runner of a crane which stood upon the quay and was hoisted from the hold to the quay. While he was making up a set a bag fell upon him from behind and he was killed. The runner of the crane was not at that time on the ship at all, but was ashore.

Held, that the workman was employed on, in, or about machinery which was being used in the process of unloading to a quay, and therefore on, in, or about a "factory" within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.——LAWSON v. ATLANTIC TRANSPORT CO., C.A.; 82 L. T. 77.

16. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—"Factory"—"Shipbuilding yard"—Ship in dock being repaired—Factory and Workshop Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 16), s. 93; Sched. IV., Part II., cl. 24—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—By section 7, sub-section 2, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, a "factory" has the same meaning as in the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 to 1891.

By section 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, non-textile factory means any premises named in Part II. of Schedule IV., which, by clause 24, includes "shipbuilding yards"—that is to say, premises in which any ships are made, finished, or repaired.

Held, that an ordinary dock in which a ship is repaired is not a "shipbuilding yard," and therefore not a "factory" within the Act of 1897.—SPENCER v. LIVETT, C.A., 323; [1900] 1 Q. B. 498; 69 L. J. Q. B. 338; 82 L. T. 75.

17. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Factory—Wharf—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7—Factory and Workshop Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 37), s. 23.—A workman was killed by an accident while he was engaged in removing some timber from a place where it was stored on the premises of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board. By the side of the Canada Dock there was a large open space stretching back from the water for a distance of 150 yards, and on the further side of this space there was a road running parallel with the water. Beyond the road there was a row of offices, to which were attached timber yards. The offices and yards were leased to timber merchants. The timber in question was stored in one of these yards.

Held (Rigby, L.J., dissenting), that the place where the timber was stored was not a wharf so as to come, by virtue of section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, within the definition of "factory" contained in section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—HADDOCK v. HUMPHREYS, C.A., 292; [1900] 1 Q. B. 609; 69 L. J. Q. B. 327; 82 L. T. 72.

18. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Medical examination—Notice of accident not given—Right of employer to—Examination of workman by medical practitioner—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 2; First Schedule, s. 3.—Where a workman who took proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, had not given notice of the accident as required by section 2 of the Act, but the employers raised no objection to his claim on that ground,

Held, that, although the workman had not given notice of the accident, the employers were entitled to require him to submit himself for medical examination in pursuance of section 3 of the First Schedule of the Act; and that the county court judge had no jurisdiction to impose any term upon them as a condition of the workman's being bound to do so.—OSBORN v. VICKERS, SONS, & MAXIM, C.A.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 91; 69 L. J. Q. B. 606; 82 L. T. 491.

19. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Payment in case of death—Right of legal personal representative to receive whole of compensation money—Investment for benefit of dependant—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I., 4, 5, 6, 7.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, the applicant was the widow of the deceased workman, and she had taken out letters of administration. The county court judge by his award ordered the respondents to pay a lump sum to and for the benefit of the dependants of the deceased, whom he declared to be the widow and the two infant sons of the deceased, and he apportioned the said sum between the widow and the sons, and he ordered the sum apportioned to the widow to be paid to her, and the sum apportioned to the sons to be paid to the registrar and to be invested by him for their benefit.

Held, that, on the construction of paragraphs 4, 5, 6, and 7 of the First Schedule to the Act, the county court judge had power to make such order, and that the applicant, although she was the legal personal representative of the deceased, had no absolute right to receive the whole of the compensation money.—DANIEL v. OCEAN COAL CO., C.A., 467; [1900] 2 Q. B. 250; 69 L. J. Q. B. 567; 82 L. T. 523.

20. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Railway—Barmaid in refreshment room—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7—Regulation of Railways Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 48), s. 3.—A barmaid in the employment of a railway company, while attending to her duties in a refreshment room at one of their stations, sustained accidental injury in consequence of a framed advertisement falling from the wall.

Held, that she was not employed on or in or about a railway within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and that, therefore, her employment was not an employment to which the Act applied.—MILNER v. GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY CO., C.A., 387; [1900] 1 Q. B. 795; 69 L. J. Q. B. 427; 82 L. T. 187.

21. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation Sub-contractor—Work ancillary to business of undertakers—Erection of railway station—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), ss. 4, 7.—A workman employed by a contractor, who in turn was employed by a railway company to erect a railway station for them, cannot recover compensation from the railway company for injuries sustained in such employment, since the work undertaken by the contractor is merely ancillary or incidental to, and is no part of, the trade or business of the railway company within the meaning of section 4 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—PEARCE v. LONDON AND SOUTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO., C.A., 599; [1900] 2 Q. B. 100; 69 L. J. Q. B. 683; 82 L. T. 487.

22. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Undertaker—Building—Contractor for supply of labour—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7 (2).—An employer who supplied and paid workmen for the brickwork of a building which was being erected by the building owners upon their own premises, the workmen so supplied being under the supervision and control of the foreman of the building owners, is not an "undertaker" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—PERCIVAL v. GARNER, C.A.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 406.

23. Employer's liability—Accident—Compensation—"Undertakers"—Sub-contractor—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), ss. 4, 7.—A sub-contractor is not an "undertaker" within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—CASS v. BUTLER, C.A., 309; [1900] 1 Q. B. 777; 69 L. J. Q. B. 362; 82 L. T. 182.

24. Employer's liability—Accident—Compensation—Weekly earnings—Accident causing injury—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I., clauses 1 (b), 2.—Schedule I., clause 2, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, which provides that in fixing the amount of a weekly payment regard is to be had to the difference between the average weekly earnings of the workman before the accident and the average amount which he is able to earn after the accident, does not operate so as necessarily to cut down the maximum rate of compensation allowed by clause 1 (b) of the schedule.—ILLINGWORTH v. WALMSLEY, C.A.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 142; 69 L. J. Q. B. 519; 82 L. T. 647.

25. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Weekly earnings—Application for review of weekly payment—Change in circumstances—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I. (12).—An application under paragraph 12 of Schedule I. of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, for a review of a weekly payment can only be made where some change in the circumstances of the case has taken place since the making of the award.

So held, Vaughan Williams, L.J., doubting.—CROSSFIELD v. TANIAN, C.A., 609; 82 L. T. 813.

26. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Weekly earnings—Duration of employment—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37).—For the dependants of a workman who has met his death by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment to be entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it is necessary that the workman, at the time of the accident, should have been in the employment of the employer for at least two weeks.—STUART v. NIXON, C.A., 598; [1900] 2 Q. B. 95; 69 L. J. Q. B. 598; 82 L. T. 489.

27. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Weekly earnings—Workmen in employment for less than two weeks—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I. (1).—No workman is entitled to the benefit of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, who has not, at the time of the accident, been for at least two weeks in the service of his employer.—LYSONS v. KNOWLES, C.A., 408; [1900] 1 Q. B. 780; 69 L. J. Q. B. 449; 82 L. T. 189.

28. Employers' liability—"Accident"—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 1.—"Accident" in section 1, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, implies something fortuitous and unexpected.

The definition of "accident" by Lord Halsbury in Hamilton v. Pandorf, 36 W. R. 369, at p. 370, 12 App. Cas. 518, at p. 524, adopted.—HENSEY v. WHITE, LLOYD v. SUGG, WALKER v. LILLESHALL, C.A., 257; [1900] 1 Q. B. 481; 69 L. J. Q. B. 188; 81 L. T. 767.

29. Employers' liability—Dispute—Summons to recover fine—Employers and Workmen Act, 1875—Truck Act, 1896, s. 1, sub-section 2 (b).—By a contract of service in writing the appellants were to be entitled to deduct 2s. 6d. from the wages of the workman for each day he was absent without leave.

The respondent having so absented himself for two days,

Held, that, whether the contract was good or bad under the Truck Act, 1896, the justices should have proceeded to hear and determine on its merits a summons taken out by the appellants under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, to recover from the respondent 5s. as "a fine or penalty, or alternatively, by way of damages for such abstention," and that the justices were in error in holding that the appellants had lost their right to sue under the Act of 1875 by reason of the fact that the Truck Act of 1896 ousted the jurisdiction of the justices to determine disputes under the Act of 1875 in all cases where the contract in question fell within its provisions.—BUXTON LIME FIRMS CO. v. HOWE, Q.B.D., 472; [1900] 2 Q. B. 232; 69 L. J. Q. B. 498; 82 L. T. 422.

30. Negligence of servant—Liability of master—Scope of authority—Omnibus driven by conductor.—On the trial of an action for negligence against an omnibus company, it was proved by the plaintiff's witnesses that the omnibus by which the plaintiff was run down and injured had just finished one of its journeys and was coming down an incline at the rate of eight miles an hour while making a slight détour for the purpose of coming to the starting-place facing the right way for commencing a fresh journey, and that it was being driven by the conductor, who was not the regular driver.

Held, that the judge was right in withdrawing the case from the jury at the close of the plaintiff's case, on the ground that there was no evidence that the person who was driving the omnibus was acting within the scope of his authority.—BEARD v. LONDON GENERAL OMNIBUS CO., C.A., 658.

MERCHANDIZE MARKS ACT.—See Trade-Mark, 2, 3.

MERGER:—

1. Lease—Lessee tenant for life—Intention—Benefit of tenant for life.—Where a person entitled to the benefit of a contract enforceable in equity, and who is one of the original parties to it, ultimately becomes both the proper person to grant and to receive such benefit, merger does not necessarily take place; but the court will look to see what is to the benefit of the person in whom the various interests coalesce. The doctrine of equitable merger is applicable as much to leases as to charges.—INGLE v. VAUGHAN JENKINS, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 684; [1900] 2 Ch. 368; 69 L. J. Ch. 618.

2. Lease—Mortgage by sub-demise—Sale by mortgagee to mortgagor in fee—Sale by him to A. in fee—Mortgage by mortgagee to B. in fee—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25 (4)—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 63.—In 1891 the sites of certain houses in P.-road and W.-road were conveyed to H. in fee. He subsequently leased them, with the houses erected thereon, to W. for ninety-nine years in the usual form.

W. then mortgaged the leases of P.-road back to H. for the whole term less one day by sub-demise.

In 1893 the houses were sold by H. to W. with the benefit of the covenants in and subject to the leases, and in the same year W. sold the same to the plaintiffs on the same terms. At the same time W. mortgaged the leases of W.-road back to H. for the whole term less one day by sub-demise. Later on W. assigned to H. his equity of redemption in these houses, and H. covenanted with him to pay the rent and perform the covenants of the leases, and to keep W. indemnified from any claims thereunder.

Subsequently H. conveyed the premises to W. in fee subject to the leases, and W. then conveyed the same to the plaintiffs.

The title of the defendant rested on an indenture of the 20th of December, 1894, whereby H. purported to convey the premises to her in fee by way of mortgage.

On a summons to ascertain the rights of the parties,

Held, that the defendant could not claim a title in fee, but that she took, by virtue of section 63 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, whatever interest H. had in the premises at the date of her conveyance; that that interest consisted of the leases which, having regard to the evidence and to Snow v. Boycott (66 L. T. Rep. 762), had not merged in the fee; and accordingly that she, offering to accept a lease of the houses, was, as mortgagee under the indenture of the 20th of December, 1894, entitled in equity to the same for the respective residues of the terms, subject to the payment of rent and performance of the covenants therein contained.—THELLUSSON v. LIDDARD, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; 82 L. T. 753.

METROPOLIS:—

1. Buildings — Erection beyond general line of buildings—"Land lawfully occupied by building—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. cxxiii.), s. 22.—The London Building Act, 1894, s. 22, provides that no building shall, without the written consent of the county council, be erected beyond the general line of buildings in any street, but that "this section shall not apply to any building or structure erected after the commencement of this Act, which, either at the commencement of this Act upon land, or at any time within seven years previously, has or shall have been lawfully occupied by a building or structure."

Two adjoining houses abutting on, and standing more than fifty feet back from a street in the metropolis, had each a one-storey building upon the forecourt which extended to the side of the road. One of these buildings was erected in 1858, contrary to the provisions of section 140 of 7 Geo. 4, c. cxlii., which provided that no building should be erected in this street within fifty feet of the side of the road. That section was repealed by section 75 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862, which provided, by section 108, that nothing therein contained should "in any way prejudice or affect any act, matter, or thing, done or commenced prior to the passing of this Act." The other building was erected in 1876, under a licence from the Metropolitan Board of Works, which, under section 76 of the Act of 1862, was given subject to the condition that the erection should not be at any time in any way altered or raised without the consent of the board.

The owner proposed to pull down and rebuild the whole premises and to erect, without the consent of the county council, three-storey buildings upon the forecourts which would be beyond the general line of buildings in the street.

Held, that the owner was not entitled to erect the proposed buildings upon the forecourts beyond the general line of buildings in the street without the consent of the county council.—SCOTT v. CARRITT, C.A.; 82 L. T. 67.

2. Building—Portico or shelter—Supported entirely from porch—Projection over pavement beyond building line—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. cxxiii.), ss. 22, 200 (3).—A glass and iron portico or shelter which projects beyond the general building line of the street, and which is dovetailed into the main structure of a building, if not erected by the consent of the London County Council, is within section 22 of the London Building Act, 1894.—COBURG HOTEL v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, Q.B.D.; 81 L. T. 450.

3. Building in street—London Building Act, 1894 —Application to private gas company.—Where a gas company erect a building upon lands specified in the schedule to their private Act, they are subject to the sections of the London Building Acts, 1894 and 1898, relating to the position of new buildings with reference to streets. — LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. WANDSWORTH GAS CO., Q.B.D.; 82 L. T. 562.

4. Public health—General regulations by vestry as to drainage—Size of inspection chambers—Validity of regulations. — The appellant having given notice under section 76 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, of his intention to make new drains, on a form supplied by the vestry upon which was indorsed "notes from the regulations as to the drainage of new houses," the proposed drains and plans were approved by the respondents, who sent to the appellant a printed copy of their general regulations.

Held, that the respondents had exercised their discretion in this particular case, and that it was not necessary on each occasion to make fresh regulations, but that, having considered the drain proposed, there was nothing to prevent their general regulations being applied. — FROST v. FULHAM VESTRY, Q.B.D.; 82 L. T. 720.

5. Public health—Offensive business—Where gut is cleansed, scraped, or dealt with—Scraped gut sorted—Business within prohibition—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), ss. 19 (1) (b), 142 (2) (b)—Order Metropolitan Board of Works, the 19th of November, 1880.—By an order made in pursuance of section 3 of the Slaughterhouses, &c., Act, 1874, "the business of a gut scraper—that is to say, any business in which gut is cleansed, scraped, or dealt with otherwise than for the manufacture of catgut," was declared an offensive business, and was not to be carried on anew without the sanction of the local authority.

Section 3 of the above Act was repealed by the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, but was re-enacted by the same statute, making the county council the authority to give the sanction for carrying on offensive businesses, and the force of all orders previously issued was preserved.

The respondents purchased from gut scrapers the intestines of sheep which have been previously cleansed and scraped by such gut scrapers, as sausage casings, and their business consisted of sorting these cases into different sizes and lengths. They then repack them, and supply them to sausage makers.

Held, that this was not a business within the order.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. HIRSCH, Q.B.D.; 81 L. T. 447.

6. Public health—Sanitary conveniences—Stable-yard—"Workplace"—Persons "in attendance"—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 38.—Section 38 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, provides that every factory, workshop, and workplace shall be provided with sufficient and suitable accommodation in the way of sanitary conveniences, regard being had to the number of persons employed or in attendance at such building.

Held, that the stable-yard and stables of a cab proprietor, where a number of men were employed as horse-keepers and cab-cleaners, and where cab-drivers were daily in attendance for the hiring of cabs and horses, constituted a "workplace" within the meaning of the section, and that the cabdrivers were "in attendance" at the premises, and that sanitary conveniences must be provided for the persons employed in the premises and for the cab-drivers who came there to hire cabs.—BENNETT v. HARDING, Q.B.D., 647; [1900] 2 Q. B. 397; 69 L. J. Q. B. 701.

7.—Public health—Unsound food—Seizure of by officer of health—Condemnation—Functions of magistrate—Jurisdiction of magistrate to consider whether article was intended for food of man—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 47 (1), (2).—When under section 47 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, a medical officer of health has examined any article intended for the food of man and sold or exposed or deposited in any place for sale, and is satisfied that the article is unsound, unwholesome, or unfit for the food of man, and brings the same before a justice to be dealt with, the justice has no jurisdiction under sub-section 2 of that section to consider the question whether the article was intended for the food of man, or was sold, or exposed or deposited for sale, but upon being satisfied on the evidence that the article is unsound, unwholesome, or unfit for the food of man, he is bound to condemn the same and make an order for its destruction, his duty in that respect being then merely ministerial.—THOMAS v. VAN OSS, Q.B.D.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 665; 82 L. T. 845.

8. Rating—Exemption—River Thames—Foreshore reclaimed.—The exemption from taxes conferred by section 51 of 7 Geo. 3, c. 37 upon the foreshore of the River Thames reclaimed under that Act, has been taken away by section 169 of the City of London Sewers Act, 1848.—SION COLLEGE v. LONDON CORPORATION, Q.B.D.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 766.

9. Rating—Quinquennial valuation—Alteration in value—Provisional and supplemental valuation—Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 67), ss. 43, 46, 47.—Section 43 of the Metropolis (Valuation) Act, 1869, enacts that the valuation list as approved by the assessment committee shall last for five years subject to any supplemental or provisional list as provided by sections 46 and 47.

Held, that to justify the insertion of hereditaments in the supplemental and provisional lists on the ground of an alteration in value, the alteration must be such that if the fact relied on as constituting the valuation had been present at the time of the original valuation, it could properly have been taken into consideration in arriving at the assessment; that the fact constituting the alteration in value should affect the hereditament in question in particular; that a general rise in values would not be a fact constituting such an alteration; and that the onus of proving that the cause of the alteration in value is one which does not affect all classes is on those who make the supplemental or provisional list.—ELLIS v. CAMBERWELL UNION, C.A., 162; [1900] 1 Q. B. 68; 69 L. J. Q. B. 202; 81 L. T. 661.

10. Rating—Small tenements—Gross value—Sum paid for cleaning, &c., of common staircase—Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 67), s. 4.—The owner of a building in the metropolis containing a large number of tenements, separately occupied as artizan's dwellings, and having staircases common to several tenements, employed P. as his agent to collect the rents. Each tenant, in addition to the rent, paid to P. a weekly sum for the cleaning, lighting, and watching of the common staircase, and for removing the dust.

Held, that the weekly sum so paid was properly taken into account in arriving at the gross value of the tenements under section 4 of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, for the purpose of rating the owner in respect thereof.—PULLEN v. ST. SAVIOUR'S UNION, Q.B.D., 186; [1900] 1 Q. B. 138; 69 L. J. Q. B. 139; 81 L. T. 583.

11. Sewer—Agreement to receive sewage of outside district—Ultra vires—Estoppel—Jurisdiction of court to grant injunction which will result in public nuisance—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 135, 138, 140, 250—Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), s. 61—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55).—There is no provision in the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862, or the Public Health Act, 1875, which authorizes a parish outside the metropolitan area to send its sewage into any sewer of any parish within that area, without the consent of such latter parish.

The vestry of a parish inside the metropolitan area has no higher power to grant its consent to a district outside the metropolitan area to send its sewage into the drains of such vestry than the Metropolitan Board of Works had to grant a similar consent under the provision of section 61 of the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862, as read in connection with sections 135, 138, 140, and 250 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855. The Metropolitan Board of Works had power under the above sections to grant such consent as above mentioned only in the form of a revocable leave and licence, but no power to grant an irrevocable licence of the kind in perpetuity, or even for a definite period.

A public body with limited powers, which has purported to permit the doing of a certain act, the permission of which is ultra vires its powers, is not subsequently estopped by such permission from asserting its right to prevent what it has hitherto purported to permit, and even encouraged and agreed to allow.

The fact that, if an injunction be granted, a public nuisance will be a necessary consequence unless the persons against whom the injunction is granted take steps to prevent it, affords the latter no defence to an action for such an injunction, even if it be true that they cannot take steps to prevent the nuisance without obtaining statutory powers.

At the same time, the difficulty in which such an injunction would place the defendants will in many cases induce the court to use its discretion, and not to exert its jurisdiction to the utmost when it is not absolutely essential to do so.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (80 L. T. Rep. 746, 47 W. R. Dig. 128), reversed.—ST. MARY, ISLINGTON, VESTRY v. HORNSEY DISTRICT COUNCIL, C.A., 401; [1900] 1 Ch. 695; 69 L. J. Ch. 324; 82 L. T. 580.

12. Sewer — Main drainage — London County Council—Duty to provide sewers and works—Duty to keep sewers so as not to be a nuisance —Neglect of duty—Mandamus—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 135. —The Metropolis Management Act, 1855, by section 135, provides that the London County Council shall "make all such sewers and works and such diversions and alterations of any existing sewers or works as they may from time to time think necessary for the effectual sewerage and drainage of the metropolis," and shall "cause the sewers vested in them to be constructed, covered, and kept so as not to be a nuisance or injurious to health"

Under this section, if works are in fact necessary for the effectual sewerage and drainage of any part of the metropolis, the council is bound to execute works for that purpose, having a discretion only as to the kind of works which are to be executed, and that duty will be enforced by mandamus.

If the sewage from any sewer vested in the council escapes into any district so as to be a nuisance, a mandamus will be granted to compel the council to keep that sewer so as not to be a nuisance.—LEE DISTRICT BOARD v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, C.A.; 82 L. T. 306.

13. Street—Laying out new street—Carriage-drive for blocks of flats forming a quadrangle with garden in centre—Cul de sac for carriage traffic—Requisite sanction of county council—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. cxviii.), s. 7.—The appellant was summoned upon an information charging him with having commenced to form and lay out a street for carriage traffic or foot traffic without having first obtained the sanction of the local authority pursuant to the 7th section of the London Building Act, 1894.

The appellant began to form the road in part straight, intending to build blocks of residential flats on each side of that straight part and facing into it, and the other part of the road ran into and formed the boundary of a square, round which again it was intended to build a continuous line of houses facing into the square. The length of the entire road would be 600ft., and about 40ft. in width. The road was to be formed and sewered as an ordinary street, although gullies used for draining a courtyard would also be required. The road was to be entered by gates, and no part of it was to be dedicated to the public, but was intended to be used only as a private road.

Held, that the road in question was a "street" within the meaning of section 7 of the London Building Act, 1894, and that the justices were right in convicting the appellant.

Held, also, that the question whether a place was a "street" within the meaning of the section was one largely of fact, and the decision in each case must depend on its particular circumstances.

Wood (Appellant) v. The London County Council (Respondents), 44 W. R. 144, 64 L. J. M. C. 276, overruled.—ARMSTRONG v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, Q.B.D., 367; [1900] 1 Q. B. 416; 69 L. J. Q. B. 267; 81 L. T. 638.

14. Street—New street—Buildings on one side only —Vacant land opposite—Repairs to road—Right of authority to claim apportionment—Lapse of reasonable time—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 105—Metropolis Management Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), s. 77.—The appellants were the owners of certain houses in the Fulham Palace-road, which, on the expiration of a Turnpike Act, became a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, and was repaired from time to time by the respondent's predecessors. In 1864 it was not a street, but by 1883 it was built with houses along one side, the other side remaining vacant building land. Between 1879 and 1898 it was altered and repaired at various times by the respondents and others. In 1897 the respondents resolved that the road was not paved to their satisfaction, and that it should be accordingly paved, and the expenses apportioned upon the owners.

Held, that the magistrate was justified in holding that the Fulham Palace-road became a new street in 1883.

Held, further, that where, in the metropolis, a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large becomes a new street by reason of the erection of houses along it, a vestry is not precluded from causing it to be paved at the cost of the frontagers by lapse of time, however long, after it became a new street, even though it was in fact already paved at the time it became a new street.—SIMMONDS v. FULHAM VESTRY, Q.B.D., 574; [1900] 2 Q. B. 188; 69 L. J. Q. B. 560; 82 L. T 497.

15. Street—Paving new streets—Apportionment and demand — Rescission — Subsequent apportionment — Validity of — Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 57, 105.—A vestry or local board have power, under section 57 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, to rescind a resolution and apportionment on the paving of a new street in pursuance of section 105, even where a summons has been issued and withdrawn, for the payment of the sum apportioned.

Secus, where the resolution had been put into force and carried out completely.—BISHOP v. WANDSWORTH BOARD OF WORKS, Q.B.D.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 632; 82 L. T. 766.

16. Street—Widening street—Compulsory purchase —Severance—Michael Angelo Taylor's Act, 1817 (57 Geo. 3, c. xxix.), ss. 80, 96—Metropolis Management Acts, 1855 to 1890.—A local authority, requiring part of two houses for the purpose of widening a street, adjudged under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act that it was necessary to acquire the whole, and accordingly gave notice to treat for the whole. They subsequently informed the owner that his right of pre-emption of the part not required would be reserved to him. It being proved that possession of the whole was necessary in order to effect the widening,

Held, that the local authority could take the whole.—FERNLEY v. LIMEHOUSE BOARD OF WORKS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 82 L. T. 524.

17. Volunteer corps—Storehouse and drill-hall—Metropolis Management Acts — Exemptions. — A building consisting of an armoury, storehouse, and drill-hall of a volunteer corps, which is vested in the commanding officer of the corps and is intended for the use of the corps only, is not exempt from the operation of the sanitary provisions of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, on the ground that it is occupied and used solely for the purposes of the Crown.—WESTMINSTER VESTRY v. HOSKIN, Q.B.D.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 474.

See also Contract, 8; Hackney Carriage; Landlord and Tenant, 14; Local Government, 1; Water, 3, 4.

MIDDLESEX REGISTRY.—See Practice, 30.

MINE:—

1. Gold mine—Joint lessees—Notice of abandonment by one lessee to the others.—Written notice by a joint holder of a gold mining lease to his co-lessees that he is unable to contribute to the joint expenses and that they may do as they like with it, is an abandonment of his beneficial interest therein. The subsequent working of the lease by the other co-lessees out of their own resources is an acceptance of the abandonment.

Held, that neither the retiring lessee nor, on his bankruptcy, his official assignee was entitled to any share of the price realized by a sale of the lease by the other co-lessees.—PALMER v. MOORE, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 293; 69 L. J. P. C. 64; 82 L. T. 166.

2. Minerals—Coal below low water-mark—Barony title—Adoption—Lease of coal.—The doctrine of possession by prescriptive working of minerals applicable to the foreshore ex adverso of a barony granted with parts and pertinents, cannot be extended to a barony granted with power to work minerals infra fluxum maris, because these words show that the grant is limited to the minerals under the foreshore only. Nor can such prescriptive use be extended to a third barony where a barony with a bounding charter lies between.

The right of a proprietor of estates adjoining the sea to work the coal below low water-mark was challenged by the Crown during the proprietor's minority. The estates to which the minor had succeeded consisted in part of entailed and in part of unentailed lands. The administration of the unentailed lands was vested in the testamentary trustees of the minor's father, who were also curators of the minor. These trustees, without the concurrence of the minor, entered into a transaction with the Crown whereby they on their part accepted a lease of the whole coal below low water-mark ex adverso of both the entailed and unentailed lands, and the Crown agreed not to claim damages in respect of coal which had been worked in the past. After the proprietor came of age, he accepted an assignment of the lease, and subsequently applied for and obtained from the Crown a reduction of the royalty payable under the lease, and a modification of the whole mode of working the coal. When the proprietor so acted in regard to the lease, he was unaware that he had a claim to some of the coal below low water-mark. In an action brought by the proprietor fourteen years after he had reached majority, concluding, inter alia, for a declarator that he was not bound by the lease, Held, reversing the decision of the First Division of the Court of Session, [1897] 24 R. 216, that the actings of the proprietor after he came of age barred him from challenging the lease.—LORD ADVOCATE v. WEMYSS, H.L. (Sc.); [1900] A.C. 48.

3. Minerals—Lease—Open or unopened mine—Settled Estates Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 18) s. 4.—A settled estate was divided into two portions by a strip of land belonging to a different owner. A seam of coal underlay the whole. When the tenant for life of the settled estate came into possession the part of the seam underlying the northern portion of the estate was an opened mine. The tenant for life subsequently acquired the coal underlying the dividing strip. The tenant for life now proposed to grant a lease of the part of the seam underlying the southern part of the estate which had not yet been worked. This part of the seam it was practicable to work from the opened mine, but it was not commercially convenient, and is was therefore intended to sink a new shaft in the southern portion of the estate.

Held, that the part of the seam underlying the southern portion of the estate was an unopened mine.—MAYNARD'S SETTLED ESTATE, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 60; [1899] 2 Ch. 347.

4. Minerals—Opened mines—Rents and profits—Royalties—Capital or income.—By a marriage settlement made in 1882 G., then the absolute owner of a real estate, conveyed it to trustees on trust for sale, and until sale to lease the unsold parts thereof and to hold the proceeds of sale, and the rents and profits until sold, upon trust for G. for life and after her death for G.'s husband for life, with remainder for the children of the marriage as the parents should appoint. The trustees were given power of leasing the hereditaments. Upon the estate were stone quarries which had been worked at intervals for about a century; but in 1882 and for four years previously they had not been worked. In 1895, the estate not having been sold, the trustees leased the stone in 45 acres, including the portion already worked, at a fixed rent with a royalty on the amount of stone sold. There was one child of the marriage.

Held (reversing the decision of the First Division of the Court of Session, [1898] 25 R. 475), that the quarries at the date of the marriage settlement were "opened mines," and the rent and royalty fell to be paid to G. as annual income from the estate, and did not fall to be accumulated for the benefit of the child of the marriage.—GREVILLE-NUGENT v. MACKENZIE H.L. (Sc.); [1900] A. C. 83; 69 L. J. P. C. 1; 81 L. T. 793.

5. Subsidence—Damage—Liability for acts of predecessor in title.—An action for damages done by subsidence caused by working a mine is a personal action, which determines on the death of the owner, and cannot be brought against a trustee or lessee who has not actively caused the subsidence.—HALL v. NORFOLK (DUKE), Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 565; 69 L. J. Ch. 571; 82 L. T. 836.

6. Working—Letting down surface—Right of support—Compensation.—The owner of the surface of land does not by parting with the minerals under such land lose his common law right of support, and in the absence of express power, or necessary implication in the conveyance, the grantee of the minerals has no right to work them so as to let down the surface. This obligation is not affected by a provision that compensation shall be payable for damage to the surface.—NEW SHARLSTON COLLIERIES CO. v. WESTMORELAND (EARL), H.L.; 82 L. T. 725.

See also Master and Servant, 12; Settled Land, 4-6.

MISTAKE:—

Money paid under compulsion of law—Money credited in claim—Receipt in full given—Want of bonâ fides—Action for recovery of money.—The plaintiffs sued the defendant for work and labour done. In the writ they by mistake credited the defendant with the payment of a sum on account and claimed the balance. The defendant knowing that they had made a mistake paid the balance and obtained from them a receipt for the whole sum due from him to them. Subsequently, having discovered their mistake, the plaintiffs brought an action to recover from the defendant the sum wrongfully accredited to him, as money had and received to their use.

Held, that, although the receipt had been given under compulsion of legal process, the defendant could not rely upon it as a defence to the action since he had not acted bonâ fide, and that the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to recover the sum claimed.—WARD & Co. v. WALLIS, Q.B.D.; [1900] 1 Q. B. 675; 69 L. J. Q. B. 423; 82 L. T. 261.

MORTGAGE:—

1. Charge upon "all my real and personal estate whatsoever and wheresoever"—Enforcement—Definite property—Valid charge—Public policy—Vagueness.—A charge by a man upon "all his real and personal estate whatsoever and wheresoever, and of what nature or kind soever, the same may be or consist," will not be void on the ground of vagueness or as offending against public policy, if it is possible, at the time when the charge is sought to be enforced, to construe fairly the document creating the charge, and to point to the property comprised in it.—KELCEY, RE, TYSON v. KELCEY, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 59; [1899] 2 Ch. 530; 81 L. T. 354.

2. Costs—Equitable mortgage—Completion of legal mortgage—Procuration fee—Solicitor mortgagee—Mortgagees' Legal Costs Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 25), s. 3.—K. in February, 1891, deposited certain deeds with a bank with intent to create an equitable mortgage, and signed a memorandum agreeing at any time or times upon the request of the bank to execute a legal mortgage in such form as the bank should require.

In March, 1891, K. gave S. a charge on the same property for £1,000.

In July, 1891, this charge was transferred by S. to C., and in February, 1892, notice was given to the bank.

In March, 1892, the plaintiff, a solicitor, took a new legal mortgage from K. and paid off the bank. Proceedings were taken for the realization of the security, and a foreclosure decree was made in April, 1893.

In February, 1898, an order was made for the taxation of the costs of the plaintiff in this action, including all costs properly incurred.

Upon a summons taken out by C. to vary the taxing-master's certificate,

Held, (1) that the plaintiff could not be allowed profit costs as he was not entitled to the benefit of the Mortgagees' Legal Costs Act, 1895, the taxation being really carried out under the order of April, 1893, and the Act not being retrospective; (2) that the plaintiff was entitled to the costs of the transfer and of investigation of title on the principle stated in Wetherell v. Collins, 3 Madd. 255; (3) that no procuration fee ought to be allowed.

National Provincial Bank of England v. Games, 31 Ch. D. 581, distinguished.—DAY v. KELLAND, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; 82 L. T. 142.

3. Covenant—"Tied" public-house—Collateral security for mortgage—Omission of "successors"—Assign and sub-lessee—Superior title.—J. J., the owner of a public-house, mortgaged it, subject to a prior mortgage to J. T., to M. J. and W. J., trading together as "J. Brothers" as brewers and wine merchants. By an indenture of even date with this second mortgage, J. J. covenanted with the said M. J. and W. J., "trading in co-partnership as 'J. Brothers,'" and thereinafter "styled as 'J. Brothers,'" that he, the said J. J., his executors, administrators, and assigns, for so long as he or they should continue in possession of the said public-house, would purchase their beer and spirits from the said "J. Brothers." Subseqently J. J. and J. T. united in granting a sub-lease to H., who had at the time notice of the said covenant; and the business of "J. Brothers," together with the mortgage to them already mentioned, was transferred to the A. Brewery Co.

Held, that the covenant and the mortgage to "J. Brothers" must be read together, and that H. was bound to purchase his beer from the A. Brewery Co., notwithstanding the fact that "J. Brothers" had technically ceased to exist and that H. was not bound by the actual words of the covenant to purchase his beer from their "successors."

Clegg v. Hands, 38 W. R. 433, 44 Ch. D. 503, and similar cases, distinguished.

Held, that "assign" does not necessarily exclude "sub-lessee," and that the fact that H. was not the "assign," but the "sub-lessee," of J. J. did not relieve him from liability on the covenant, with notice of which he was affected.

Bryant v. Hancock, 46 W. R. 386, [1898] 1 Q. B. 716, [1899] A. C. 442, distinguished.

Held, that H. was bound to claim under his superior title; and that he must accordingly be considered, in the eye of the law, to derive his title, not from J. T., but from J. J.—JOHN BROTHERS (ABERGARW, BREWERY) v. HOLMES, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 236; [1900] 1 Ch. 188; 69 L. J. Ch. 149; 81 L. T. 771.

4. Deposit of deeds—Subsequent purchaser for value without notice—Gross negligence—Priority.—Gross negligence on the part of a subsequent purchaser for value without notice will disentitle him to protection against a prior incumbrancer, even though there is no question of fraud on his part.

A purchaser for value without notice of any incumbrance obtained a conveyance of the legal estate in certain houses, but did not require an abstract of title or production of the title deeds. He did ask where the deeds were, and was told that they were in the possession of the vendor, but would not be delivered up as they related to other property. It was subsequently discovered by the purchaser that the deeds had been deposited with a prior equitable mortgagee.

Held, that the purchaser had acted with gross carelessness and would not be allowed to deprive the mortgagee of her security.

Ratcliffe v. Barnard, 19 W. R. 764, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 652, commented on.

Decision of Romer, J., affirmed.—OLIVER v. HINTON, C.A., 3; [1899] 2 Ch. 264; 81 L. T. 212.

5. Distress—Receiver of mortgaged property—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 19, sub-section 1 (iii.); s. 24, sub-sections 1, 2, 3.—A mortgagee, under sub-section 1 (iii.) of section 19 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, appointed a receiver of the rents of a mortgaged property. The rent of the property for one quarter was outstanding. The receiver declined to distrain, and thereupon the mortgagor put in a distress without the receiver's authority.

Held, that, after the appointment of the receiver, the mortgagor had no right to distrain, and that the distress was illegal.—WOOLSTON v. ROSS, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 556; [1900] 1 Ch. 788; 69 L. J. Ch. 363; 82 L. T. 21.

6. Further advance—Second mortgage—Tacking—Trustees—Joint tenants.—In October, 1864, certain property was mortgaged to A., B., and C. (who were trustees) as joint tenants, to secure £3,000 and interest. In February, 1866, the same property was mortgaged to L. to secure £3,500 and interest. In October, 1876, a further charge was executed in favour of the first mortgagees to secure £1,000 and interest. A. died in May, 1883.

The plaintiffs in the action were the present trustees of the settlement of which the first mortgagees had been trustees, and the defendants were the present owners of the second mortgage.

B., who was a solicitor, had acted for all parties in carrying out the first and second mortgages and the further advance by the first mortgagees, and had actual notice of the second mortgage at the date of its creation, but he failed to communicate the fact of the second mortgage to his co-mortgagees at the time of the further advance and they had no personal knowledge of its existence.

Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to tack the amount due in respect of the further advance to the amount due on the first mortgage and so postpone the second mortgagees.

In the case of a mortgage of real estate to joint tenants to secure a debt due to them jointly, it cannot be said as against strangers that any one portion of the security or of the debt belongs to any one of the mortgagees; each is entitled to the whole, and if notice of a second incumbrance is given to any one of them, such notice creates an equity against one in respect of the whole sufficient to prevent any tacking.—FREEMAN v. LAING, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 9; [1899] 2 Ch. 355; 81 L. T. 167.

7. Lease—Mortgagor in possession, lease by—Mansion-house, furniture, and sporting rights—Foreclosure—Lease binding on mortgagee—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 18.—A mortgagor of land while in possession leased for fourteen years the mortgaged mansion-house, together with the furniture and with sporting rights over the whole of the mortgaged land. The mortgagees having foreclosed, Held, that the lease was valid as against the mortgagees under section 18 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881.—BROWN v. PETO, Q.B.D.; [1900] 1 Q. B. 346; 69 L. J. Q. B. 141; 82 L. T. 264.

8. Life policy—Personal covenant—Power of sale—Statute of Limitations (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), s. 8—Moneys received on surrender of policy by mortgagee—Payment or acknowledgment—"In the meantime."—Where a mortgagee, having received neither payment nor acknowledgment in respect of his mortgage for twenty-two years, at the end of that time surrenders to the insurance office a policy on the life of the mortgagor in order to realize part of his security, the surrender value of the policy so paid by the insurance company to the mortgagee will not operate as a payment or acknowledgment of the mortgage debt so as to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations.

The words "in the meantime" in section 8 of 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57 mean the period between the time at which the action or suit is brought and the time at which the debt or the remedy for it would have been barred.—CLIFDEN (LORD), RE, ANNALY v. AGAR-ELLIS, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 428; [1900] 1 Ch. 774; 69 L. J. Ch. 478; 82 L. T. 558.

9. Receipt clause—Execution induced by fraud of mortgagor's solicitor—Implicit confidence of mortgagor in solicitor—Misappropriation by solicitor—Estoppel—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 56.—K. had such confidence in his solicitor that he executed a mortgage deed (containing a receipt for the consideration money) at the request of his solicitor without ascertaining that the deed was a mortgage deed, but only knowing that in some way it dealt with his property. The deed was duly handed over by the solicitor to the mortgagee and the consideration money paid by the mortgagee to the solicitor.

Held, that as K. when he signed the mortgage deed knew he was "doing something with his estate," the deed must therefore be considered his deed (Hunter v. Walters, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 75), and that the payment by the mortgagee to the solicitor was a good discharge under section 56 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881.

The meaning of the term "a solicitor" in section 56 considered.—KING v. SMITH, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; 69 L. J. Ch. 598; 82 L. T. 815.

10. Redemption—Clogging the equity of redemption—Collateral advantage to mortgagee—Leaseholds—Covenant for payment to mortgagee of one-third of the profit rent until the end of the term, though principal and interest paid before—Validity.—A mortgagee may, provided the bargain is not unconscionable or oppressive, stipulate by the mortgage for a collateral advantage to himself; and if he does so, there is no presumption that the mortgagor entered into the contract under pressure.

A covenant in a mortgage of a lease that the mortgagor will, during the residue of the term (besides paying principal and interest), pay to the mortgagee one-third of the net profit rental received from under-tenants, and provisions that the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee shall continue, though all principal and interest may have been paid, do not amount to a clog or fetter upon the equity of redemption, and are therefore valid.

Decision of Byrne, J. (47 W. R. 297), reversed.—SANTLEY v. WILDE, C.A., 90; [1899] 2 Ch. 474; 81 L. T. 393.

11. Redemption—Public-house—Leasehold—"Tied house"—Once a mortgage always a mortgage.—The principle of equity that nothing in a mortgage transaction will be permitted to clog, fetter, or impede the borrower's right to redeem is still valid and unimpaired.

A covenant in a mortgage of a leasehold public-house that the mortgagor shall, during the continuance of the lease, buy his beer only from the mortgagees, is a clog on the equity of redemption, inasmuch as it prevents the mortgagor from getting back the property unimpaired. The mortgagor is therefore entitled on redemption to an assignment of the premises free from the covenant.

Santley v. Wilde, ante, p. 90, [1899] 2 Ch. 474, distinguished.

Decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. (ante, p. 110), affirmed.—RICE v. NOAKES, C.A., 629; 82 L. T. 784.

12. Sale—Power of sale—Action to set aside sale—Laches.—The mortgagee of a reversionary interest sold it under the power of sale in January, 1888. The reversioner had notice of the sale, and he then took legal advice as to his rights, but he took no steps to impeach the sale until December, 1897, when he commenced an action to set it aside. The reversion had fallen into possession in April, 1897.

Held, that, by reason of his laches, the plaintiff could not maintain the action.

Decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. (47 W. R. 430, [1899] 1 Ch. 873), affirmed.—NUTT v. EASTON, C.A.; [1900] 1 Ch. 29; 69 L. J. Ch. 46; 81 L. T. 530.

13. Sale—Power of sale—Sale of part of mortgaged property—Grant of implied easements over unsold land—Light—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 6, sub-sections 1, 2, 4, 5; s. 19, sub-section 1—Co-defendants—Third-party procedure—

Costs—R. S. C., ord. 16, r. 55.—A conveyance by a mortgagee exercising his statutory power of sale of part of the mortgaged property will pass to the purchaser an implied easement as to light over the portion remaining unsold.

An owner of land brought an action for infringement of light and trespass against a neighbouring owner and a person engaged in building a wall for him. The builder, not being satisfied with the way in which the defence was being conducted, severed his defence, and was separately represented.

Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, he was justified in so doing, and entitled to be paid solicitor and client costs by his co-defendant.—BORN v. TURNER, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 697; [1900] 2 Ch. 211; 69 L. J. Ch. 593.

14. Ship — Accounts — Evidence. — In taking accounts between a mortgagor and a deceased mortgagee of a barge, an account book kept by the latter in his own handwriting containing entries of payments made to him by the mortgagor as well as disbursements made by him on account of the barge is admissible on behalf of the mortgagee's executors in evidence as containing entries against interest.

Taylor v. Witham, 3 Ch. D. 605, followed.—HUDSON v. SWIFTSURE (OWNERS OF), P.D. & Ad.D.; 82 L. T. 389.

15. Transfer—No notice to mortgagor — Sale by mortgagor and mortgagee without disclosing mortgage —Fraudulent retention of purchase-money by mortgagee—Satisfaction of mortgage.—A solicitor conveyed certain land to a builder. The builder built some houses thereon and mortgaged it to the solicitor. The solicitor transferred the mortgage. No notice of such transfer was given to the builder. Subsequently the solicitor and the builder sold the land, which was conveyed by a deed containing a recital that it was free from incumbrances. The proceeds of sale were received by the solicitor, who retained the mortgage debt out of them. The solicitor till he absconded paid interest to the transferee.

Held, that the purchaser took the property subject to the mortgage, but the builder, having placed himself entirely in the hands of the solicitor, must have imputed to him the knowledge which the solicitor actually had, and must indemnify the purchaser against any payments to be made to the mortgagee.

Decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. (47 W. R. 620), affirmed.—DIXON v. WINCH, C.A., 612; [1900] 1 Ch. 736; 69 L. J. Ch. 465; 82 L. T. 437.

See also Landlord and Tenant, 4, 18; Merger, 2; Partnership, 3; Principal and Agent, 1; Probate, 1; Will, 19.

NATAL, LAW of:—

Husband and wife—Marriage contract—Registration—Mutual will—Natal Law No. 22 of 1863, s. 7. —By section 7 of Natal Law No. 22 of 1863, passed to prevent community of goods attaching to certain marriages, persons married in South Africa can bring themselves under its provisions by a registered written instrument to that effect.

Held, that, by the true construction of that section, if the instrument is unregistered it is inoperative for all purposes and as between the parties.

Where husband and wife, not within Law No. 22, by mutual will directed their executors to sell the testator's estate as soon as convenient after the testator's death without specifying a date for payment of legacies directed by the testator, and so soon after the death of the testatrix as may be to pay the legacies directed by her,

Held, that by the true construction of the will the testator's legacies were payable at his death. The intention to dispose of everything was apparent, and the words did not necessitate the suspension of payment of testator's legacies with consequent intestacy as to the resulting income.—TAYLOR v. STURROCK, STURROCK v. STURROCK, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 225; 69 L. J. P. C. 29; 82 L. T. 97.

NEGLIGENCE. — See Banker, 2; Company, 6; Libel, 2; Master and Servant, 30; Mortgage, 4; Statute.

NEW ZEALAND, LAW of:—

Railway—Effect of an Order in Council retaining a railway as Government property—Rights of debenture-holders—New Zealand Railways Construction and Land Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. No 37), ss. 123, 125, 126.—Under New Zealand Railways Construction and Land Act, 1881, ss. 125 and 126, the Governor of the Colony, having taken possession of a railway under section 123. is empowered on the happening of events in the later section specified to declare his intention to retain the railway as Government property.

Held, that on publishing an Order in Council giving effect to such intention, his title to the railway is absolute and paramount, and that the rights of debenture-holders whose debentures were authorized by a later Act in 1884 to be a first charge on the railway fall with the company's title.—COATES v. REG., A.C.; [1900] A. C. 217; 69 L. J. P. C. 26; 82 L. T. 162.

NUISANCE:—

1. Interference with right of support—Excavation—Landowner — Drainage — Surface, letting down — Underground water—Water-logged land—Quicksand—"Running silt"—Pitch, stratum of—Ancient lights, interference with—Damages—Injunction—Gasworks Clauses Acts, 1847, 1871 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 15, s. 29; 34 & 35 Vict. c. 41, s. 9)—Lord Cairns' Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 27).—The plaintiff was the owner of land with houses on it. The adjoining land belonged to the defendants, a gas company incorporated by special Act, with power to purchase land by agreement only, and subject to the provisions of the Gasworks Clauses Acts, 1847 and 1871. Under their statutory powers the defendants proceeded to excavate their land for the purpose of erecting a gasometer. In so doing they penetrated an underground stratum of quicksand, or sand loaded with stagnant water, geologically known as "running silt," which extended under the plaintiff's land as well as their own, the silt or sand largely preponderating over the water. In draining their excavation the defendants withdrew a large quantity of the running silt from under the plaintiff's land and thus caused a subsidence of the surface with consequent structural injury to his houses. The liability of the defendants to proceedings for any "nuisance" caused by them in the execution of their works was preserved by section 9 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871.

Held, that the defendants had no statutory authority so to construct their works as to occasion a nuisance, the fact that section 9 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871, expressly preserved their liability for any nuisance, distinguishing the case from London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Co. v. Truman, 11 App. Cas. 45; and that the defendants had committed a nuisance by withdrawing a support of the plaintiff's land consisting of a stratum—not of water—but of wet sand or running silt.

Popplewell v. Hodkinson, L. R. 4 Exch. 248, distinguished.

Decision of North, J. (47 W. R. 222, [1898] 2 Ch. 614), affirmed.

It being proved that the proposed gasometer would obstruct ancient lights in the plaintiff's houses,

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction, since his right would not be adequately protected or vindicated by damages.—JORDESON v. SUTTON GAS Co., C.A.; [1899] 2 Ch. 217; 68 L. J. Ch. 457; 80 L. T. 815.

2. Reasonable use of property—Occupiers of flats in one building—Residential occupier and restaurant keeper.—It is relevant in nuisance cases to inquire whether the defendant was making a reasonable use of his premises in doing the acts complained of.

Dictum of Kekewich, J., in Reinhardt v. Mentasti, 38 W. R. 10, 42 Ch. D. 685, at p. 690, dissented from.

Different flats in one building were let to the plaintiff for residential purposes and to A., a restaurant keeper, for the purpose of his business. When the plaintiff took her flat there were only private residences in the building. The plaintiff brought an action against the common landlord and A. to restrain nuisance by heat, smell, and noise arising from A.'s use of his premises. The action was discontinued as against the landlord on his making certain structural alterations to abate the nuisance by heat, but A. denied liability, and contested the whole action.

Held, that the defendant A. was entitled to make a reasonable use of his premises for the purpose of his business, but not to make an unreasonable use of them, and, on the facts, that he had made an unreasonable use of his premises, which substantially interfered with the plaintiff's enjoyment of her flat; and therefore that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction.

Rule in Ball v. Ray, 21 W. R. 282, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 467, at p. 469, applied.—SANDERS-CLARK v. GROSVENOR MANSIONS CO., Ch.D. Buckley, J., 570; [1900] 2 Ch. 373; 69 L. J. Ch. 579; 82 L. T. 758.

See also Highway, 1; Justices, 4; Local Government, 14; Tramway, 1.

PARTITION:—

1. Conversion—Money received on sale—Distribution—"Person becoming absolutely entitled"—Partition Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 40), s. 8—Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 120), s. 23.—Land was sold under the Partition Act, 1868, and by an order of court a testator's share of the proceeds was paid out to the trustees of his will, and was invested otherwise than in land, in accordance with the trusts of the will. One of beneficiaries of the said trust fund died intestate.

Held, that his share of the fund so invested devolved on his legal personal representative, and not on his heir-at-law.—MORGAN, RE, SMITH v. MAY, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 670.

2. Conversion—Claim for sale by infant as sole plaintiff—Defendants interested in moiety desiring a sale—Sale directed if parties other than infant found entitled to moiety—Partition Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 17), s. 6.—An infant's share in realty will not be converted by a sale of such interest in a partition action in which the infant was plaintiff, where the judgment directed a sale, if (as was found to be the fact) the defendants were entitled to a moiety, although the infant has in his pleadings requested a sale; the form of the judgment precluding the view that the sale was made at the request of the infant.—NORTON v. NORTON, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 140; [1900] 1 Ch. 101; 69 L. J. Ch. 31; 81 L. T. 724.

3. Costs—Inquiries—Discretion of court—Partition Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 40), s. 10—Ord. 65, r. 14 (b).—In a partition action the property long ago had been severed in moieties, one of which was held by the defendant for life with remainders over, and the other had to be divided among a great number of persons. The parties representing the different aliquot parts appeared in chambers. Subsequently, a partition action was brought, and an ordinary judgment directed with one special inquiry. Upon a question arising whether any special directions to be given as to the incidence of the costs,

Held, that, since the Partition Act the usual practice had been to give the costs of all parties out of the proceeds of sale. That ord. 65, r. 14 (b) was not inapplicable to such a case, and that it did not appear that the plaintiffs would suffer any injustice if the ordinary practice were departed from. But that in all the circumstances the usual order as to costs would be made.

Belcher v. Williams, 45 Ch. D. 510, followed.—GRAHAM v. CLINTON (LORD), Ch.D. Stirling, J.; 81 L. T. 717.

4. Practice—Form of judgment—Permanent improvements — Allowance. — A tenant in common, claiming partition, is entitled whether charged with occupation rent or not, to have in the judgment for partition an inquiry as to expenditure properly made in permanent improvements to the property, during the co-ownership, and the inquiry should be reciprocal.

Observations on the authorities.

Williams v. Williams, [1899] W. N. 66, 47 W. R. Dig. 143, approved.—KENRICK v. MOUNTSTEVEN, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 141.

PARTNERSHIP:—

1. Dissolution — Goodwill — Name of old firm—Partner's name.—On the dissolution of a partnership, where no provision is made about the use of the firm name, but the goodwill, apart from the benefit of the firm name, is not to be sold, but is to be divided between the partners, each partner is at liberty to use the firm name so long as he does not thereby hold out his late partner as his partner in business.

A man does not necessarily hold out his late partner as his partner in business by using the old firm name, even though the old firm name is the name of his late partner.—BURCHELL v. WILDE, C.A., 491; [1900] 1 Ch. 551; 69 L. J. Ch. 314; 82 L. T. 576.

2. Goodwill—Sale of business—Soliciting customers.—One of two partners bought out the other under their articles. The articles provided that the outgoing partner might set up a similar business in the neighbourhood.

Held, that the proviso was merely declaratory, and did not authorize solicitation of old customers.—GILLINGHAM v. BEDDOW, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 242; 69 L. J. Ch. 527; 82 L. T. 791.

3. Mortgage of share by one partner—Dissolution—Right to an account—Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), s. 31.—By section 31 of the Partnership Act, 1890, a mortgagee of a share in a partnership has a right to an account and to ascertain what the share of his mortgagor really is from the date of the dissolution of the partnership. The mortgagor is not entitled to say that he has settled the value of his share with his partner before the date of dissolution, and thus take away his mortgagee's right to an account for the purpose of ascertaining that share.—WATTS v. DRISCOLL, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 521; 82 L. T. 255.

See also Bankruptcy, 15; Inland Revenue, 29; Practice, 32.

PATENT:—

1. Chemical process—Infringement—Use abroad—Part of manufacture of commercial article—Sale in England.—The sale in England of an article imported from abroad, in the manufacture of which a process patented in this country has been used, is an infringement of the patent, even although the process is only the first part of the manufacture, which also consists of subsequent processes not patented.—SACCHARIN CORPORATION v. ANGLO-CONTINENTAL CHEMICAL WORKS, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 444.

2. Grant to two patentees—Agreement for sale—Covenants for validity—Death of one grantee—Joint and several covenants.—A provision in an agreement for the sale of letters patent granted to two persons that an assignment should be executed and should contain a covenant by the vendors that the letters patent is valid, is enforceable against the representatives of one of the vendors who has died after the agreement and before assignment, and such representatives are liable for damages for breach of the agreement in this respect.

Decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. (47 W. R. 518, [1899] 2 Ch. 289), reversed.—NATIONAL COMPANY FOR DISTRIBUTION OF ELECTRICITY, &c. v. GIBBS, C.A., 499; [1900] 2 Ch. 280; 69 L. J. Ch. 457; 82 L. T. 443.

3. Infringement—Foreign-made article—Evidence—Presumption—Injunction—Damages—Alternative relief.—In an action by patentees of an article exclusively manufactured abroad, claiming an injunction and damages for the user of the patented article in England, the only evidence of infringement adduced was that of an expert, who deposed that the plaintiffs' patents related to three separate and distinct modes of producing the article in question; that it was not possible to tell, from an examination of any particular parcel, under which process it has been produced, but that it must have been produced under one or other of these three processes. The defendant called no evidence, and claimed a nonsuit.

Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any injunction, as they had not proved that any particular patent had been infringed. On the question of damages, the court found as a fact that the plaintiffs' patents covered every possible mode of producing the patented article, and that one of these patents must therefore have been infringed, and that the nature and extent of the wrong done to the plaintiffs did not depend upon the particular patent infringed. An inquiry was therefore directed, without mentioning any particular patent, whether any and what damages had been sustained by the plaintiffs by reason of the user by the defendant of the patented article.

Semble, it is not always essential to establish the particular alternative under which relief is claimed, provided that the rights of the plaintiff and the obligations of the defendant are identical under each of the alternatives, and that the alternatives exhaust every possible contingency and are mutually exclusive. — SACCHARIN CORPORATION (LIMITED) v. QUINCEY, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 246; 69 L. J. Ch. 530; 82 L. T. 792.

4. Infringement — Patented articles bought in England and sent abroad for sale—"Making use of" the invention—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), Schedule I., Form D—Damages—Assessment.—A person who transports patented articles from place to place in the United Kingdom, but so that the articles are not serving the purpose for which they are patented, does not "exercise" or "put in practice" the patented invention; but the export abroad of such articles with a view to a sale is at least indirectly a "making use" of an invention, and is an infringement within the meaning of Schedule I., Form D, of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883.

The measure of damages is what the defendants would have had to pay for permission to do that which they wrongfully did. — BRITISH MOTOR SYNDICATE v. TAYLOR, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 345; [1900] 1 Ch. 577; 69 L. J. Ch. 377; 82 L. T. 106.

5. Infringement—Petition for revocation—Amendment by disclaimer—Conditions to be imposed—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), ss. 18, 19, 20.—Deeley v. Perkes, [1896] A. C. 496, does not lay down any general rule as to the conditions to be imposed on a patentee, who, after the commencement of an action, desires leave to amend the specification of his patent by way of disclaimer, but the conditions to be imposed will depend on the circumstances of each case.—LUDINGTON CIGARETTE MACHINE CO. v. BARON CIGARETTE MACHINE CO., C.A., 505; [1900] 1 Ch. 508; 69 L. J. Ch. 321; 82 L. T. 173.

6. Utility—What sufficient to support a patent.—Utility in patent law does not mean either abstract utility, or comparative or competitive utility, or commercial utility, but an invention better in some respect, but not necessarily in every respect, than the preceding knowledge of the trade as to a particular fabric.

An invention is patentable which offers the public a useful choice.

A very small amount of utility is sufficient to support a patent.—WELSBACH INCANDESCENT GAS LIGHT CO. v. INCANDESCENT GAS LIGHTING CO., Ch.D. Buckley, J., 362; [1900] 1 Ch. 843; 82 L. T. 293.

PAWNBROKER:—

Purchase at auction—Right to the chattel—Property passing—Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 93), s. 19.—By the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 93), s. 19: "A pledge pawned for above ten shillings shall, when disposed of by the pawnbroker, be disposed of by sale by public auction, and not otherwise. . . . A pawnbroker may bid for and purchase at a sale by auction, made or purporting to be made under this Act, a pledge pawned with him; and on such purchase he shall be deemed the absolute owner of the pledge purchased."

Held, that no property was given to the pawnbroker by this section as against the true owner of the pledge. — BURROWS v. BARNES, Q.B.D.; 82 L. T. 721.

PEER:—

Title or dignity of honour acquired by marriage—Divorce—Re-marriage to a commoner—Injunction to prevent the wife from using her former title.—A peeress, not in her own right, but who has derived her title from marriage with a peer, and who, after procuring a decree of dissolution of the marriage, marries a commoner, loses the right to use the title so acquired, and will be restrained by injunction from continuing its use.—COWLEY v. COWLEY, P.D. & Ad.D., 463; [1900] P. 118; 69 L. J. P. 59; 82 L. T. 466.

PHARMACY:—

Poison—Sale of—Agent only authorized to take orders and give receipts—Pharmacy Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 121), s. 15.—By section 15 of the Pharmacy Act, 1868, it is enacted that no person shall sell or keep an open shop for the retailing, dispensing, or compounding poisons not being a duly registered pharmaceutical chemist or chemist and druggist.

The respondent, who carried on the business of a seedsman and florist, acted as agent for a chemical company who manufactured a certain weed-killer which contained a poison—namely, arsenic. The respondent did not keep the article on his premises, but was authorized to take orders for it, which he sent on to the manufacturers, and to receive payments and give receipts.

Held, that he had not committed any offence under section 15 of the Pharmacy Act, 1868.—PHARMACEUTICAL SOCIETY v. WHITE, Q.B.D., 335; [1900] 1 Q. B. 454; 81 L. T. 821.

POLICE:—

1. Pension on retirement—Mode of computation—Annual pay—Special allowance—Police Act, 1900 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 45), s. 1; Schedule I., Parts 1, 3.—A constable in the Metropolitan Police force had received for five consecutive years before the date of his retirement a special allowance of seven shillings per week (in addition to his ordinary weekly pay) in respect of his employment on special duty at the Houses of Parliament throughout those years.

Held, by Channell, J. (Bucknill, J., dissenting), that, in calculating the amount of the retiring pension to which he was entitled, the amount of the special allowance was not "pay," and ought not to be reckoned as part of his "annual pay" within Schedule I., Part 1, of the Police Act, 1890.

Held, also (by Channell and Bucknill, JJ.), that "annual pay" means the entire amount received as pay in the course of the year, and not fifty-two times the weekly pay.—UPPERTON v. RIDLEY, Q.B.D., 494; [1900] 1 Q. B. 680; 69 L. J. Q. B. 475; 82 L. T. 233.

2. Throwing stones—Power to lay information—No authority of urban council—Towns Police Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 89), s. 28—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 53), ss. 171, 253.—By section 28 of the Towns Police Clauses Act, 1847, everyone who to the annoyance and danger of the passengers wantonly throws stones is liable to a penalty.

By section 171 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the provisions of the Towns Police Clauses Act, 1847, with respect to the above was "for the purpose of regulating such matters in urban districts" incorporated in that Act.

It is provided by section 253 of the Public Health Act, 1875, that "proceedings for the recovery of any penalty under this Act shall not, except as in this Act is expressly provided, be had or taken by any person other than by a party aggrieved or by the local authority of the district in which the offence is committed."

Held, that the district superintendent of police could lay an information under section 28 of the Towns Police Clauses Act, 1847, although not the party aggrieved or authorized by the local authority.—JOBSON v. HENDERSON, Q.B.D.; 82 L. T. 260.

See also Justices, 1; Poor Law, 7.

POOR LAW:—

1. Rating—Appeal against assessment to quarter sessions—Parish council—Notice to—Service of proper notice upon not a condition precedent to entertaining appeal—Poor Relief Act, 1743 (17 Geo. 2, c. 38)—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73).—The service of notice on the town council of a municipal borough is not a condition precedent to the hearing by the quarter sessions of appeals from a poor rate.

Reg. v. Justices of Kent, 80 L. T. Rep. 622, not followed.—REG. v. DE GREY, KING'S LYNN DOCKS, EX PARTE, Q.B.D., 348; [1900] 1 Q. B. 521; 69 L. J. Q. B. 341; 82 L. T. 324.

2. Rating—Appeal from quarter sessions—Gravel pit—Method of rating when partially exhausted.—A company were, at the time of the making of a rate, in rateable occupation of three and a-half acres of land for the purpose of extracting gravel therefrom, which they worked at the rate of two acres per annum. At the date of the rate the gravel from two and a-half acres had been extracted, and the land was used for storage purposes only. The gravel in the remaining acre was in process of being extracted when the rate was made.

On appeal to quarter sessions, it was held that the annual value of the land in the company's occupation at the time of the making of the rate ought to be taken at the amount of rent or royalty at which the same could then be reasonably expected to be let to a tenant for one year, regard being had to the value of the gravel in the unexhausted acre of land, added to the value of the exhausted two and a-half acres for storage purposes.

Held (per Channell J.), that, though at the time when the rate was made the company was only working gravel in one acre, they must be rated for three and a-half acres on the gravel pit value of at least two acres, inasmuch as they were working—both during the preceding year and up to and at the date of the rate—at the rate of two acres per annum. If the two and a-half acres were to be treated separately and rated at storage value only, the remaining acre should be rated at double the rate imposed, because the company was working it at the date of the rate at the rate of getting two acres of gravel per annum.

Bucknill J., dissentiente, held that, as the two and a-half acres were valueless at the time of making the rate for the purpose for which they were acquired, they could only be assessed at the actual value of their occupation at the time of making the rate in question.—FARNHAM FLINT, &c., CO. v. FARNHAM UNION, Q.B.D., 376; 82 L. T. 123.

3. Rating—Change of occupation—Payment of proportion—Period for making the rate—Period from allowance by justices—Issue of distress warrant.—The appellant was summoned on a complaint preferred on behalf of the overseers to show cause why he had not paid a certain poor rate.

The rate was allowed by the justices on the 21st of October, 1898, and was intended for the period from the 29th of September, 1898, up to the 25th of March, 1899. The premises, in respect of which the appellant was rated, were occupied by him from before the 29th of September, 1898, up to the 30th of November, 1898, and the complaint was in respect of the proportion of the rate from the 29th of September to the 30th of November, 1898.

Held, that the appellant was only liable to pay the proportion from the 21st of October to the 30th of November, 1898.—DAVIS v. WOODFIELD, Q.B.D.; 81 L. T. 782.

4. Rating—Lairages—Profit-earning capacity—Evidence of receipts and expenditure—Structural value—Ordinary method of ascertaining rental value unavailable—Principle of assessment.—The appellants were the owners and occupiers of certain lairages, consisting of lands and buildings situated on the side of the River Mersey. These hereditaments were assessed to the poor rate. In ascertaining the rental value of these premises for the purpose of assessing the rate it was not possible to compare them with other similar hereditaments, as no other lairages existed in the neighbourhood; nor by merely considering the structural value of the buildings and the value of the land on which they stood was it possible to ascertain the rent a hypothetical tenant from year to year would give. The profit-earning capacity of the hereditaments, together with the structural value, were therefore taken into consideration, and evidence of the receipts and expenditure of the appellants in the conduct of the business of the lairages was admitted.

Held, that such evidence was admissible, and that the proper principle of assessment had been adopted.—MERSEY DOCKS v. BIRKENHEAD UNION, C.A., 259; [1900] 1 Q. B. 143; 69 L. J. Q. B. 260; 81 L. T. 798.

5. Rating—Land used for exhibition of advertisements—Advertisement hoardings—Advertisement contractor—Advertising Stations (Rating) Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 27), s. 3.—An advertisement contractor hired from builders and owners of land the right to affix advertisements upon the hoardings erected by the builders during building operations, and affixed thereto the advertisements of the persons whose advertisements he had agreed to exhibit.

Held, that the advertisement contractor was not a person who permitted the land on which the hoardings stood to be used for the exhibition of advertisements within the meaning of section 3 of the Advertising Stations (Rating) Act, 1889, and that he was not rateable, as beneficial occupier, in respect of such land.—BURTON v. ST. GILES-IN-THE-FIELDS, &c., UNION, Q.B.D., 222; [1900] 1 Q. B. 389; 69 L. J. Q. B. 184; 82 L. T. 24.

6. Rating—Market garden—Land covered with greenhouses—"Agricultural land"—"Buildings or other hereditaments"—Agricultural Rates Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 16), ss. 1, 5, 9.—Glasshouses within a market garden usued solely for purposes connected therewith are not "agricultural land" within the meaning of the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, so as to entitle the occupier to the partial exemption given by that Act.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (46 W. R. 401, [1898] 1 Q. B. 683), affirmed.—SMITH v. RICHMOND, H.L., 115; [1897] A. C. 448; 81 L. T. 269.

7. Rating—Police station—Residences of officers.—Premises erected by a county council for the purposes of a police station, in addition to cells for prisoners and other offices constituting the police station, comprised three dwelling-houses exclusively occupied by the superintendent, inspector, and sergeant respectively and their families for their domestic use, all three residences being within the boundary wall of the police station. These dwelling-houses might be visited and inspected at any time, and in respect thereof a certain sum was deducted as rent from the salaries of the officers. The officers might be required to move elsewhere at any moment, but whilst they were attached to the station it was necessary that they should be resident within or adjacent to the station, and when appointed they were compelled to reside in such houses. There was frequent communication passing between the officers and those in charge of prisoners, and no prisoner could be locked up, bailed, or remanded unless one of the three officers was present.

Held, that the three dwelling-houses of the officers were a part of the police station, and were therefore with the police station exempt from rateability to poor rate.—CROSS v. WEST DERBY UNION, Q.B.D.; 81 L. T. 645.

8. Rating—Public-house—Assessment—Rateable value—Trade profits.—When assessing licensed premises for the poor rate, the existence of the licence and the amount of business done thereon is proper matter of inquiry and consideration. Evidence of the actual profits made by the occupier are also admissible, but is to be avoided where possible.

Dodds v. South Shields Assessment Committee, 43 W. R. 532, [1895] 2 Q. B. 133, commented on.

Decision of the Court of Appeal ([1899] 1 Q. B. 667, 47 W. R. Dig. 148) affirmed.—CARTWRIGHT v. SCULCOATES UNION, H.L., 394; [1900] A. C. 150; 69 L. J. Q. B. 403; 82 L. T. 157.

9. Rating—Separate assessment of different portions of same hereditament.—The mere fact that the different portions of one undivided hereditament are capable of commanding rents if let to different occupiers does not impose any obligation upon the rating authority to assess and rate the different portions separately.

Whether for rating purposes a particular area of land is to be treated as one hereditament or as more than one is a question of fact.—NORTH-EASTERN RAILWAY CO. v. YORK UNION, Q.B.D.; [1900] 1 Q. B. 733; 69 L. J. Q. B. 376; 82 L. T. 201.

10. Rating—Sewage carrier—Sewage carrier partly above, partly below ground—Liability to be rated.—The respondents were the governing body of a united drainage district, and they constructed a sewage carrier for conveying the sewage of the district to the sea. The total length of the sewage carrier was about 17½ miles, of which some 2½ miles passed through or over land situated in the parish of R., which land was previous to the construction of the sewage carrier, and still remained so, rated for the relief of the poor.

The appellants were the assessment committee of the said parish of R., and they assessed the respondents in respect of the whole of that portion of the sewage carrier which passed through or over land in the parish of R.

The quarter sessions court held that such portion only of the sewage carrier in the parish of R. as was carried on concrete arches was rateable, but that those parts of it which were laid either below the natural surface of the land or on an embankment covered and grassed over were ordinary underground sewers, and came within the exception of rating applicable thereto.

Held, on appeal, that as there had been some interference with the surface of the ground, and as it was impossible to dissever those parts of the sewage carrier which were above from those parts below the natural surface of the ground, the whole of the carrier that passed through or over the land of the appellants was a rateable subject, and liable to be rated accordingly.—NEWPORT UNION v. YSTRADY-

FODWG SEWERAGE BOARD, Q.B.D., 382; [1900] 1 Q. B. 365; 69 L. J. Q. B. 280; 82 L. T. 56.

11. Relief — Improper relief — Strike — Wilful refusal to work—"Sudden and urgent necessity"—Poor Law Act, 1601 (43 Eliz. c. 2), ss. 1, 2—Poor Law Act, 1834 (4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76), ss. 15, 42, 52, 54, 105—Poor Law Audit Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 91), s. 4—Vagrants Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 83), s. 3.—The payment by poor law guardians out of the poor rates of any money for setting to work or for the relief of able-bodied men, who are at the time able to obtain and perform work at wages sufficient to support themselves (and their wives and families, if any), is unlawful, and ought to be disallowed by the auditor on auditing the guardians' accounts. But this statement of the law does not include relief given to or for the wives and children of such men; and it is also without prejudice to, and is in no way to affect, the power of the Local Government Board to remit such disallowed payments, even although unlawfully made, under the statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 91, s. 4, or any other statute enabling them so to do.

Decision of Romer, J. (80 L. T. Rep. 618, 47 W. R. Dig. 149), reversed.

It is not, however, lawful for guardians to refuse relief to those who are in immediate physical need of it, and are at the time unable to obtain and perform work, on the gronnd that such persons have reduced themselves to their present incapacity to obtain and perform work by their own wilful neglect and refusal to work in the past.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. MERTHYR TYDFIL UNION, C.A., 403; [1900] 1 Ch. 516; 69 L. J. Ch. 299; 82 L. T. 662.

12. Separation of parish from union—Adjustment of rights and interests — "Property" of union—"Fixing" amount to be paid by union to parish—Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834 (4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76), s. 32—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), ss. 24 (2) (d), 26 (1).—By section 32 of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834, the Local Government Board may make an order for the separation of a parish from a union, and in such case the board are required to ascertain the proportionate value to every parish of the union of the "workhouses or other property" held or enjoyed by the union for the use of the poor, and to "fix the amount" to be received or paid by every parish affected by the separation.

On the separation of a parish from a union under this section, and on the adjustment of the rights and interests of the union and parish respectively,

Held, that annual sums which the union is entitled to receive from the county council of the county under the Local Government Act, 1888, in respect of the salaries of registrars and the costs of the officers of the union, are "property" within the meaning of the section, and that the Local Government Board have jurisdiction to apportion the same and to fix the amount to be paid by the union to the parish in respect of such sums.

Held, also, that an apportionment of these annual sums according to the rateable values of the union and parish respectively, as shown by the valuation lists in force during the year, is a "fixing of the amount" to be paid by the union to the parish within the meaning of the section; and that the Local Government Board have jurisdiction so to make the apportionment and to order that the union shall in each year pay to the parish the amounts of such annual sums so fixed according to the rateable values.—REG. v. WILLESDEN GUARDIANS, Q.B.D.; 82 L. T. 385.

13. Settlement—Irremovability—Division of parish—County of Wilts (Calne, &c.) Confirmation Order, 1890, arts. 15, 16.—By article 15 of the Wilts (Calne, &c.) Confirmation Order, 1890, as between C. Within and C. Without, every person who on or before the 25th of March, 1890, has acquired a settlement in C. shall be deemed to have acquired such settlement either in C. Within or C. Without, according as the acts or circumstances conferring such settlement shall have been done either in C. Within or C. Without. And if such acts have been done partly in one and partly in the other, then according to the last place of residence, except where such person shall have ceased to reside in either C. Within or C. Without. The provisions of this clause were to have effect unless or until the settlement shall be duly determined to be in some other parish.

By article 16 of that order it is provided that any person who shall have acquired a status of irremovability in the parish of C. shall be deemed to have acquired such status from C. Within or C. Without, according as he resided on the 25th of March, 1890, or if he was in receipt of relief as he was residing when he became chargeable.

A pauper went to reside in May, 1887, in C. parish, in that portion of the parish which became C. Within, when by the order of 1890 C. was divided into C. Within and C. Without.

In September, 1891, he ceased to reside in the parish of C. Within, and has not resided there since.

Held, that he had not acquired a settlement in C. Within when he left in September, 1891.—CALNE UNION v. ST. MARY, ISLINGTON, Q.B.D.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 400; 82 L. T. 121.

14. Settlement—Removal of pauper—Irremovability—Break of residence.—A., a pauper, having an original settlement in the C. Union, had by residence become irremovable in the E. Union, and was sent to the E. Workhouse. Her son was in the C. Workhouse, and, in order to be with him, she obtained her discharge from the E. Workhouse and went to reside for a week with a relative in another union in order to break her status of irremovability in the E. Union, after which she returned to the E. Workhouse, in order to be sent to the C. Union.

Held, that an order for her removal to the C. Union was rightly made.—CAMBRIDGE UNION v. EDMONTON UNION, Q.B.D., 559; [1900] 2 Q. B. 111; 69 L. J. Q. B. 584; 82 L. T. 495.

See also Inland Revenue, 13; Justices, 1; Lunacy, 4.

POWER:—

1. Appointment — Execution — Limited power — Exercise by will—General words of appointment—General powers—No reference to limited power—Intention.—A testatrix had two general powers of appointment in addition to a limited power to appoint the income of certain property to her husband for life. By her will, which contained no reference to the limited power or to the property subject thereto, she gave, devised, and bequeathed all her real and personal estate, and appointed all real and personal estate over which she might have a power of appointment unto her husband absolutely.

Held, that the testatrix had clearly expressed her intention of exercising every power she had in favour of her husband, and that the limited power was therefore exercised. — REW, RE, REW v. WIPPELL, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1899] 2 Ch. 536; 81 L. T. 384.

2. Appointment—Power to appoint invested fund—

Appointment of specified sums of cash—Increase in value of investments.—A father by his will gave to trustees a sum of £30,000 (to be invested as he directed), upon trust to pay the interest and annual proceeds thereof to his daughter during her life, and after her death the same sum, together with the interest and annual proceeds thereof, was to be held on such trusts as the daughter should appoint in favour of her children or grandchildren, with a trust over in default of appointment.

The daughter by her will recited verbatim the gift in the father's will, and then, in exercise of the power, appointed that "the said sum of £30,000, together with the interest and the annual proceeds thereof, by the said will of my father to be held in trust for me, my children and grandchildren, and over which I have such power of appointment as aforesaid," should after her death be held by the trustees of her father's will upon trust as to £1,000 "part thereof" for her daughter Emmeline; upon trust as to five sums of £1,000, £4,000, £6,000, £6,000, and £6,000 respectively, each of which was described as "other part of the said sum of £30,000," on trust for five others of her children respectively, and upon trust as to another sum of £6,000, which was described as "the residue of the said sum of £30,000," for her other child. At the time of her death the securities on which the £30,000 had been invested were worth £39,000.

Held, that the testatrix was dealing with the fund as an invested fund, and that the whole of it was appointed in the proportions indicated by her will.—CRUDDAS, RE, CRUDDAS v. SMITH, C.A.; [1900] 1 Ch. 730; 69 L. J. Ch. 355; 82 L. T. 514.

3. Appointment—Transfer of property by all parties interested—Release of power.—Any dealing with property subject to a power of appointment which is inconsistent with the exercise of that power, releases the power.—FOAKES v. JACKSON, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 616; [1900] 1 Ch. 807; 69 L. J. Ch. 352.

4. Execution—Power to be exercised by will attested by two witnesses—Donee of power a domiciled French subject—Holograph will exercising power unattested—Wills Act, ss. 9 and 10—Lord Kingsdown's Act (24 & 25 Vict. c. 114).—Testatrix, by the will of her father, who died in 1824, was given a general power of appointment over a fund in court "by will, or any writing in the nature of a will, to be respectively executed by her in the presence of and attested by two witnesses." Testatrix, being a domiciled French subject, in 1894 made a holograph will in the French language, and thereby disposed of the fund in question. This will was not attested, and was consequently invalid according to English law, but it was admitted to probate in England by reason of its being valid according to the law of the domicil of the testatrix.

Held, (1) that neither sections 9 and 10 of the Wills Act nor Lord Kingsdown's Act applied, inasmuch as the testatrix was domiciled abroad; (2) that to enable the will of the testatrix to operate as an execution of the power, the special formalities (such as attestation) required by the instrument creating the power should be complied with, and it was not enough that the will of the testatrix was valid as a will, according to the law of her domicil.

In re Price, Tomlin v. Latter, ante, p. 373, approved.—BARRETTO v. YOUNG, Ch.D. Byrne, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 339; 69 L. J. Ch. 605.

5. Execution—Special power of appointment by will—Will made prior to creation of power.—A special power of appointment authorizing the donee to appoint by will in favour of a particular person, will not be exercised by a will made by the donee prior to the creation of the power, wherein the testator appointed to such person all the residue of the property over which at the time of his death the testator should have a disposing power.—HAYES, RE, TURNBULL v. HAYES, Ch.D. Byrne, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 333.

See also Limitation Statutes, 5; Will, 15, 16, 22.

PRACTICE:—

1. Account—Certificate—Entries disallowed—Discretion of court—Digging of pitch.—Where an account ordered by the court is limited to pitch dug and won from certain specified lands, entries relating to pitch in other lands must be excluded, and a certificate made in disregard of this rule will be varied by disallowing them.—BENNICOURT v. LE GENDRE, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 173; 69 L. J. P. C. 21.

2. Appeal—Appeal as to costs only—Judge's discretion not exercised—Costs, charges, and expenses—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 49.—Notwithstanding section 49 of the Judicature Act, 1873, an order as to costs, which are in the judge's discretion, is, if made in pursuance of a general rule which excluded the exercise of that discretion, subject to a right of appeal.

The City of Manchester, 27 W. R. 697, 5 P. D. 221, followed on this point.

Charles v. Jones, 35 W. R. 88, 33 Ch. D. 80, not followed.

There is no right of appeal against an order as to discretionary costs on the ground only that the same order deals with trustees' charges and expenses, as to which there is no appeal.

Charles v. Jones approved on this point.

In re Chennell, Jones v. Chennell, 26 W. R. 595, 8 Ch. D. 492, disapproved.—BEW v. BEW, C.A., 124; [1899] 2 Ch. 467; 81 L. T. 284.

3. Appeal—Appeal from inferior court—Right to appeal from High Court to Court of Appeal—Jurisdiction to give leave to appeal—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 45—Judicature Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 16), s. 1, sub-section 5.—Where a Divisional Court, after deciding an appeal from an inferior court, refuses leave to appeal, the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal.—GODMAN v. MOSES, C.A., 689.

4. Appeal—Court of Appeal—Application to Divisional Court to set aside judgment of official referee—Judicature Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 16), s. 1 (5).—Where an action has been tried before an official referee, and an application is made to a Divisional Court to set aside the judgment of the official referee, the decision of the Divisional Court is final, and there is no appeal to the Court of Appeal without leave.—DAGLISH v. BARTON, C.A., 50; [1900] 1 Q. B. 284; 81 L. T. 551.

5. Appeal—Jurisdiction—Appeal to House of Lords from interlocutory order of the Court of Appeal in Ireland—Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 59), ss. 3, 12—Supreme Court of Judicature Act (Ireland), 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 57), s. 86.—An appeal does not lie to the House of Lords from an interlocutory order of the Queen's Bench Division in Ireland, or from an order of the Court of Appeal in Ireland made on appeal therefrom.—GOSFORD (EARL) v. IRISH LAND COMMISSION, H.L.; 81 L. T. 330.

6. Appeal—Petition of right—Contract—Construction—Canada, Law of—Quebec.—An appeal lies to the Queen in Council from a decision of the Court of Queen's Bench on a petition of right.

The respondent contracted with the Government of Quebec to do certain work for a term of years at one agreed price. The contract did not contain any undertaking on the part of the government to employ the respondent for all or any of such work.

Held, that no such undertaking could be implied, and that the respondent could not recover damages against the Crown for not employing him to do all or any part of such work during the specified period.—REG. v. DEMERS, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 103; 69 L. J. P. C. 5; 81 L. T. 795.

7. Appeal — Special leave — Appeal in formâ pauperis—Jurisdiction of Privy Council to stay an order for sale, pending appeal.—Where a petitioner had obtained leave to appeal in regular form, an order granting leave to prosecute the appeal in formâ pauperis was made.

On petition for special leave to appeal (1) from a decree in a matrimonial separation suit; (2) in a mortgage suit; (3) from an order for execution of the last-mentioned decree,

Held, that there being ground for appealing from the mortgage decree, the leave should be extended to both suits, which were mixed up together.

The Privy Council have no jurisdiction to order a stay, pending the appeal, of a sale directed by the court below in execution of its decree in (2).—QUINLAN v. CHILD, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 496.

8. Assignment—Debt—Security—Power to assignee to sue in name of assignor—Absolute assignment—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25, sub-section 6.—The plaintiffs made an advance to a customer who, in consideration thereof, assigned to them the whole of his rights and interest under an agreement between himself and others, of whom the defendant was one, as security for the repayment on demand of the advance, and by the assignment he appointed the plaintiffs his nominees in pursuance of the provisions of the agreement, with power to exercise all his rights thereunder either in his name or in the plaintiffs' own name, and he appointed them his attorneys in that behalf. In an action to recover from the defendant moneys alleged to be due under the agreement,

Held, that the assignment was not an absolute assignment within the meaning of section 25, sub-section 6, of the Judicature Act, 1873.

Tancred v. Delagoa Bay Railway Co., [1889] 23 Q. B. D. 239, and Comfort v. Betts, [1891] 1 Q. B. 737, distinguished.—MERCANTILE BANK OF LONDON v. EVANS, C.A.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 613; 81 L. T. 376.

9. Attachment—Commission—Trustee—Solicitor—Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 4—Debtors Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 54).—Under a will the persons entitled to possession of the B. estates might sell the heirlooms, but were to replace them out of the proceeds of sale by articles of a similar character. F. was co-trustee with C., the tenant for life of the B. estates, and C. with the consent of F. sold the heirlooms, and received the purchase-money, but did not purchase other articles in their place. The purchaser paid F. £200 in connection with the sale. Before F. (who was a solicitor) was appointed a trustee he received £200 from an insurance company as commission on policies effected through him on C.'s life as security for trust money lent to C. On the death of C. the B. estates passed to the plaintiff, who commenced an action for the administration of the estate of C., and an order was made directing F. to pay the plaintiff the £200 received in connection with the sale of the heirlooms, and also the £200 received from the insurance company. F. failed to comply with that order, and the plaintiff applied for leave to issue a writ of attachment against him.

Held, that the payment of the £200 received as commission from the insurance company ought not to be enforced by attachment as the matter was not within the exception in section 4 of the Debtors Act, 1869; but that attachment ought to issue in respect of the £200 paid by the purchaser of the heirlooms.—BERWICK (LORD) v. LANE, C.A.; 81 L. T. 797.

10. Attachment—Married woman—Judgment debtor—Order for payment into court—Default—Writ of attachment—Separate estate—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 21), ss. 1 (2), 18, 24—Debtors Acts, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), ss. 4, 5; 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 54)—R. S. C., ord. 42, rr. 4, 24.—A married woman, married before 1882, was, as administratrix of a deceased intestate, ordered to pay into court a sum forming part of the estate. In default a motion was made for leave to issue a writ of attachment against her.

Held, that, in the absence of proof of a breach of trust or devastavit, an order for payment by the defendant out of her separate estate would not be appropriate and that the order for the issue of the writ of attachment ought to go.—TURNBULL, RE, TURNBULL v. NICHOLAS, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 136; [1900] 1 Ch. 180; 69 L. J. Ch. 187; 81 L. T. 439.

11. Attachment—Undertaking to execute an indenture—Rules of Court, 1883, ord. 41, r. 5.—Where defendants committed a breach of their undertaking forthwith to execute an indenture, Held, that there ought either to be service in accordance with ord, 41, r. 5, of the Rules of Court, 1883, or a four-day order. An order therefore was made that the defendants should on or before the 5th of December, or subsequently within four days of the service of the order, execute the deed tendered to them by the plaintiff.—HALFORD v. HARDY, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 81 L. T. 721.

12. City of London Court—Jurisdiction—Issue of summons with leave—Cause of action arising within the city—London (City) Small Debts Extension Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. lxxvii.), s. 39—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), ss. 74, 185.—In the City of London Court it is not necessary, in actions where the jurisdiction of the court is based on the cause of action arising within the city, that the leave of the judge or registrar should be obtained for the issue of the summons.—FELTON v. BOWER, Q.B.D., 349; [1900] 1 Q. B. 598; 69 L. J. Q. B. 351; 82 L. T. 419.

13. Costs — Action against public authority — Solicitor and client costs—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1 (6).—Where an action is dismissed against a public body acting in execution of statutory or other public duty, the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, s. 1, gives the defendant corporation solicitor and client costs in the action, but the Act does not apply to appeals.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, sub nomine, Fielding v. Morley Corporation, 47 W. R. 295, [1899] 1 Ch. 1, affirmed.—FIELDING v. MORLEY (MAYOR) H.L., 545; [1900] A. C. 133; 69 L. J. Ch. 314; 82 L. T. 29.

14. Costs—Action against public authority—Trial with jury—Jurisdiction of judge to deprive successful authority of costs—Good cause—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1 (b)—Ord. 65, r. 1.—The power given by ord. 65, r. 1, to the judge at the trial of an action to deprive a successful party of costs is not taken away or affected by section 1 (b) of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893; and, therefore, if in an action brought against a public authority for any act done in pursuance of any Act of Parliament or of any public duty or authority, judgment is obtained by the defendants after a trial with a jury, the judge has, for good cause, a discretion to deprive the successful defendants of costs; and in determining what is good cause the judge may take into consideration the antecedent conduct of the party which led to the litigation.

Cree v. St. Pancras Vestry, [1899] 1 Q. B. 693, not followed. — BOSTOCK v. RAMSEY DISTRICT COUNCIL, Q.B.D., 254; [1900] 1 Q. B. 357; 69 L. J. Q. B. 108; 81 L. T. 756.

15. Costs — Arbitration — Reference of action— Costs of reference in discretion of arbitrator—Award for less than £50—Scale of costs—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 65, r. 12.—Where an action of contract is referred to arbitration, whether compulsorily or by consent, upon the terms that the costs of the action shall abide the event of the award, and the costs of the reference and award shall be in the discretion of the arbitrator, if the arbitrator awards the plaintiff a sum less than £50 and orders that the defendant shall pay the plaintiff's costs of the reference and award, such costs may be taxed on the High Court scale, although by virtue of ord. 65, r. 12, the plaintiff's costs of the action can only be taxed on the county court scale.

Moore v. Watson, 15 W. R. 429, L. R. 2 C. P. 314, overruled.

Galatti v. Wakefield, 4 Ex. D. 249, 27 W. R. Dig. 59, followed. — STREET v. STREET, C.A., 450; [1900] 2 Q. B. 57; 69 L. J. Q. B. 574; 82 L. T. 648.

16. Costs—Debenture-holder's action—Insufficient assets.—Where the assets in a debenture-holder's action were sufficient to pay off the first debenture-holders in full, but not sufficient to pay the second and third debenture-holders in full,

Held, that the plaintiff in the action was only entitled to party and party costs.—QUEEN'S HOTEL CO., CARDIFF, RE, VERNON TIN PLATE CO., RE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 567; [1900] 1 Ch. 792; 69 L. J. Ch. 414; 82 L. T. 675.

17. Costs—Higher scale—Special ground—Allegation of fraud—Ord. 65, r. 9.—The mere fact of an allegation of fraud being made in an action by the unsuccessful party is not a special ground for obtaining costs on the higher scale under ord. 65, r. 9, even when the amount at stake is large and the questions of law and fact raised are difficult.—ASSETS DEVELOPMENT CO. v. CLOSE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 699.

18. Costs—Order of county court, action upon.—An action cannot be maintained in the High Court upon an order of a county court for the payment of costs. —FURBER v. TAYLOR, C.A., 689.

19. Costs—Probate action—Three wills—Severance in defence.—In a probate action the validity of the earliest of three wills was established. Of the four defendants in the action, who were all beneficiaries under the first will, the two who were executors of the first and second wills received the same benefits under the second will, while the other two were cut out under the second will. All four were cut out under the third will.

Held, that there was such a divergence of interests between the two pairs of defendants that the latter pair was justified in appearing separately, and was therefore entitled to have a separate taxation and payment of costs.—BAGSHAW v. PIMM, C.A., 422; [1900] P. 148; 69 L. J. P. 45; 82 L. T. 175.

20. Costs—Security for costs—Foreigner resident abroad—General inquiry—Claimant to fund in court —Person in position of plaintiff.—As a general rule a claimant under a general inquiry cannot be required to give security for costs.

Where a solicitor was ordered to pay into court a fund in his hands belonging to a client subject to the claims of certain alleged incumbrancers thereon, and an inquiry was directed who was entitled thereto, a foreign claimant resident out of the jurisdiction was ordered to give security for costs upon the ground that, in the special circumstances of the case, the inquiry was equivalent to an interpleader issue in which the claimant was in the position of a plaintiff.—MILWARD & CO., RE, C.A.; [1900] 1 Ch. 405; 69 L. J. Ch. 247; 82 L. T. 339.

21. Costs—Set off—Solicitors Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 127), s. 28—R. S. C., ord. 65, r. 14.—An order may be made allowing a judgment debtor to set off against the damages due from him damages due to him from the judgment creditor on a judgment in another action, notwithstanding the existence of an order under the Solicitors Act, 1860, s. 28, charging the first-mentioned damages with a solicitor's costs.

So held by A. L. Smith and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ., the latter doubting.—GOODFELLOW v. GRAY, C.A.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 498; 81 L. T. 314.

22. Costs — Taxation — Barrister — Fees. — A. brought an action against B., which was dismissed with costs. A. appealed, and the Court of Appeal, without calling on counsel for the respondent, dismissed the appeal with costs. A. objected to pay the fee of B.'s leading counsel in the Court of Appeal on the ground that such counsel was not present at the hearing of the appeal.

Held, that the objection must be overruled; and that the court would not disturb the uniform practice extending over forty years, of allowing the fees of non-attending counsel in party and party taxation.—CHARMAN v. BRANDON, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 82 L. T. 369.

23. Costs — Taxation — Fixed costs — Substituted service of writ—Ord. 3, r. 7—Ord. 65, r. 27 (38)—Central Office Practice rule 18.—On a taxation of costs under ord. 3, r. 7, the plaintiff claimed £2 10s. for costs of substituted service of the writ. The master allowed £1 only on the ground that by the practice adopted at chambers that was the sum invariably allowed.

Held, that the practice could not be justified.—FLATAU v. CULLEN, C.A., 36; 81 L. T. 402.

24. Creditors' deed—Account—Discretion—R. S. C., ord. 55, r. 10.—The court will, in the exercise of its discretion, under ord. 55, r. 10, not order an account of the dealings and transactions of a trustee under a creditors' deed of arrangement, where it can determine the questions between the parties without such order, and where such order would have mischievous results, notwithstanding that the trustee may have been guilty of some misconduct in his duties.—CAMPBELL v. GILLESPIE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 151; [1900] 1 Ch. 225; 69 L. J. 233; 81 L. T. 514.

25. Discovery—Affidavit of documents—Claim of privilege — Sufficiency of affidavit.—Where a defendant in making an affidavit of documents claims that certain documents in his possession are privileged from inspection on the ground that they relate solely to his own case and do not tend to support the plaintiff's case, it is not necessary for him to state further that they do not tend to impeach his own case.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE (MAYOR), C.A., 38; [1899] 2 Q. B. 478; 68 L. J. Q. B. 1012; 81 L. T. 311.

26. Discovery—Interrogatories—Objections to answer—Ord. 31, rr. 1, 6.—Each question in an interrogatory must be taken by itself and the reason for refusing to answer stated. It is no ground for refusing to answer an interrogatory that objection may be taken to a portion of it.

In an action for slander the plaintiff administered interrogatories asking whether the defendant had spoken the words complained of and in whose presence.

Held, that the interrogatories were not unreasonably wide, fishing, or oppressive, and that the defendant was bound to answer them.—DALGLEISH v. LOWTHER, C.A., 37; [1899] 2 Q. B. 590.

27. Discovery—Interrogatories—Officer of company—Knowledge—Matters previous to formation of company—Course of employment—Sufficiency of answers—R. S. C., ord. 31, rr. 5, 24.—A corporation answering interrogatories by the proper officer is in the same position as an individual. The officer, therefore, who answers on behalf of the corporation cannot be compelled to inquire of the officers, servants, or agents of the corporation as to matters which happened before the corporation came into existence, or their knowledge of which was not acquired by them as servants of the corporation and in the ordinary course of its business.—WELSBACH INCANDESCENT GAS LIGHT CO. v. NEW SUNLIGHT INCANDESCENT CO., C.A., 595; [1900] 2 Ch. 1; 69 L. J. Ch. 546.

28. Discovery—Particulars—Affidavit of documents—Documents of title—Privilege—Production.—As the authorities stand, privilege can be claimed for several deeds which are merely described as "a bundle of documents." The fact, however, that a transaction is embodied in a document which is protected from production on the ground of privilege, does not take away the right to have particulars of the transaction, if the same is pleaded in too general a way.—MILBANK v. MILBANK, C.A., 339; [1900] 1 Ch. 376; 69 L. J. Ch. 287; 82 L. T. 63.

29. Discovery—Privilege—Solicitor and client, communications between—Evasion of statute—Production of documents.—The privilege from production of confidential communications between a solicitor in his professional capacity and his client does not extend to communications which came into existence for the purpose of the client's procuring advice as to the mode in which he might evade the provisions of a colonial statute imposing a duty in respect of property.—REG. v. BULLIVANT, C.A.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 163; 69 L. J. Q. B. 657; 82 L. T. 493.

30. Discovery—Privilege—Solicitor's correspondence and bill of costs—Note by solicitor of order in judge's chambers—R. S. C., ord. 31, r. 18 (2).—A statement in a letter from a solicitor to his client reporting proceedings in chambers, and communicated for the purpose of obtaining information or instructions from the client necessary for the conduct of the action, is privileged as a professional confidential communication. But those parts of a bill of costs which consist merely of memoranda or notes of proceedings in chambers recorded by a solicitor are not so privileged.

Semble, there is no valid distinction between notes of proceedings in open court and of those in chambers.

Greenough v. Gaskell, 1 My. & K. 98, at pp. 102-104, and In re Worswick, 36 W. R. 685, 38 Ch. D. 370, at p. 373, followed.—AINSWORTH v. WILDING, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 539; [1900] 2 Ch. 315.

31. Evidence—Foreign State—Status and boundaries of—Judicial cognizance—Application to Foreign Office.—The court takes judicial cognizance not only of the status, but also of the boundaries of foreign States, and if in doubt will apply for information to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, whose reply is conclusive.—FOSTER v. GLOBE VENTURE SYNDICATE, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; [1900] 1 Ch. 811; 69 L. J. Ch. 375; 82 L. T. 253.

32. Evidence—Production of books—Partnership—Order upon person not a party—Ex parte application—Form of order—R. S. C., ord. 37, r. 7.—An order may be made ex parte against a person not a party to the action to attend before an examiner for the purpose of producing documents.—ZUMBECK v. BIGGS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 507; 82 L. T. 654.

33. Execution — Leave to issue execution under R. S. C., ord. 42, r. 23—Charging order under R. S. C., ord. 46, r. 1—Death of judgment debtor—Liability of estate.—The effect of obtaining leave to issue execution against an executor under ord. 42, r. 23, is to dispense with the necessity of obtaining a judgment against the executor, but is not equivalent to obtaining a judgment against him. A charging order under ord. 46, r. 1, has only such effect as is provided by the Acts 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 14, 15, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, s. 1. Under these Acts a charging order can only be made against a person against whom a judgment has been obtained.

It follows, therefore, that a creditor who has obtained judgment against a debtor cannot, after the death of the debtor, obtain a charging order nisi against the executor of the deceased judgment debtor without first obtaining judgment against the executor.

Finney v. Hinde, 27 W. R. 413, 4 Q. B. D. 102, and Haly v. Barry, 16 W. R. 654, L. R. 3 Ch. App. 452, discussed.

Decision of Stirling, J., ante, p. 233, affirmed.—STEWART v. RHODES, C.A., 354; [1900] 1 Ch. 386; 69 L. J. Ch. 174; 82 L. T. 337.

34. Jurisdiction — Private international law—American creditor suing in English court—Californian Code.—Where an American court had made an order authorizing a person who had recovered judgment in that court against an American company to bring actions against an English company "in any and all proper courts in his own name or in the name of the said American company,"

Held, that the jurisdiction of the American court was limited to the exact scope of the Californian Code conferring it, and that in an action brought by the said person in an English court he was not properly authorized to sue, and could not sue, in the name of the said American company.—BARBER v. MEXICAN LAND CO., Ch.D. Stirling, J., 235.

35. Landlord and tenant—Lease—Specific performance—Undertaking not to defend—Lease found invalid—Leave given to defend—Jurisdiction.—In an action for specific performance of an agreement to purchase leasehold houses, the defendant gave an undertaking not to deliver any defence in the event of the plaintiffs undertaking not to move for judgment in default of defence until a date named.

The defendant subsequently found that the lease was invalid.

Held, that the court had jurisdiction to give the defendant leave to deliver a defence notwithstanding his undertaking.—SCOTT v. MOXON, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 81 L. T. 774.

36. Leave to discontinue—Auxiliary proceedings before another tribunal—Costs incident to those proceedings costs in the action—R. S. C., ord. 26, r. 1.—A plaintiff seeking to discontinue an action upon terms of paying the defendant's costs in that action will not be compelled as part of his bargain to pay the costs incurred by the defendant in auxiliary proceedings taken by the plaintiff before another tribunal arising out of the same case, and the result of which caused the plaintiff to discontinue his action. — LLOYDS BANK v. PRINCESS ROYAL COLLIERY CO. (No. 1), Ch.D. Byrne, J., 460; 82 L. T. 559.

37. Mandamus—Justices—Application to state case—Decision "erroneous in point of law"—Previous decision of High Court binding on justices—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 33 (1). —A magistrate ought not to be ordered to state a case, upon the ground that his decision was erroneous in point of law, when he has decided in accordance with a previous decision of the Queen's Bench Division upon the same point from which there was no right of appeal.—REG. v. SHIEL, C.A.; 82 L. T. 587.

38. Middlesex Registry—Middlesex deed—Rectification of register—Jurisdiction to order—Land Registry (Middlesex Deeds) Act (54 & 55 Vict. c. 64), s. 1—Land Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87), s. 95—Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 7.—The court now has power to order the Register of Middlesex deeds to be rectified, and, in exercise of this jurisdiction, ordered the registration of certain forgeries purporting to be assignments of leaseholds in Middlesex, dated in 1887, and also the registration of certain mortgages, dated in 1898, of the same property, to be vacated.

Gibbs v. Sydney, 49 L. T. Rep. 132, 31 W. R. Dig. 210, not followed.—STEPHENSON v. YORKE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 430; [1900] 1 Ch. 505; 69 L. J. Ch. 253; 82 L.T. 55.

39. Nonsuit—Discontinuance—Ord. 26, r. 1.—A plaintiff can no longer elect to be nonsuited. Should he wish to discontinue the action at the trial, he must do so under ord. 26, r. 1, by leave of the judge.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (46 W. R. 340, [1898] 1 Q. B. 636), affirmed.—FOX v. STAR NEWSPAPER, H.L., 321; [1900] A. C. 19; 69 L. J. Q. B. 117; 81 L. T. 562.

40. Originating summons—Benefit of written contract and option to repurchase vested in trustee for bankrupt—Construction of contract—"Written instrument"—"Interested"—Ord. 54 A, rr. 1, 4. — A summons was taken out under order 54*A* by the trustee of a bankrupt who claimed an interest under a contract of sale of certain real estate and option of repurchase conferred on the bankrupt, asking certain questions which involved the construction of the written document.

Held, (1) that the contract was an instrument within the meaning of the rule; (2) having regard to the decision in Buckland v Papillon, L. R. 1 Eq. 477, that the plaintiff was a person interested within the meaning of the rule; (3) that the scope of the rule was not limited to cases where an action might be brought, but that the limit was the discretion of the court on the question of construction provided by rule 4; (4) that having regard to Palmer v. Johnson, 13 Q. B. D. 351, the execution of the conveyance which had taken place did not destroy the right of repurchase contained in the contract.—MASON v. SCHUPPISSER, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; 81 L. T. 147.

41. Palatine Court of Lancaster—Taxation—Costs—Scale.—The order of the 28th of November, 1884, of the Chancery Court of the County Palatine of Lancaster, "as to court fees and solicitors' costs" only introduces a modification of the lower scale of costs established by the order of the 27th of November, 1884, and has no application to any cases to which that lower scale did not apply.—MANCHESTER REAL ICE SKATING CO., C.A., 490; [1900] 1 Ch. 573; 69 L. J. Ch. 421; 82 L. T. 513.

42. Parties—Joinder—Action against company and directors—Causes of action—Misjoinder—Separate relief against separate defendants—"Actio personalis moritur cum personâ"—Deceased director—Legal personal representatives, liability of—Directors' Liability Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 64), s. 3.—Where an action is brought by a shareholder against the company and its directors for relief in respect of an improperly issued prospectus, the fact that the relief claimed against the several defendants may differ in detail is no ground for objection that the action is bad as joining separate causes of action against separate defendants, for in substance there is only one cause of action—namely, the improper issue of the prospectus. Neither is it improper to join in such an action the legal personal representatives of a deceased director alleged to have been a party to the issue of the prospectus.

Whether the maxim "Actio personalis moritur cum personâ" applies in the case of a deceased director who may have incurred liability under section 3 of the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, quære.

Gower v. Couldridge, [1898] 1 Q. B. 348, and Thompson v. London County Council, [1899] 1 Q. B. 840, explained.—FRANKENBURG v. GREAT HORSELESS CARRIAGE CO., C.A.; [1900] 1 Q. B. 504; 69 L. J. Q. B. 147; 81 L. T. 684.

43. Payment out—Married woman—Assignment—Affidavit of no settlement.—Where a fund has been assigned by a wife and both husband and wife refuse to make an affidavit of no settlement, the fund may be ordered to be paid out on an affidavit of no settlement made by some person likely to be well informed.

Rowland v. Oakley, 14 Jur. 845, followed.—TIMOTHY v. CROWN, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; 82 L. T. 142.

44. Payment out—Petition—Distribution of fund in court—Assignment of share—Rectification of deed—Jurisdiction—Defective title—Subsequent acquisition of good title.—When a person purports to convey one-sixth of a fund in court representing real estate, though only entitled to one-ninth share, and afterwards becomes entitled to one-sixth, the court will make the good title subsequently acquired available to make the assignment effectual.

Noel v. Bewley, 3 Sim. 103, followed.

The jurisdiction of the court with regard to rectification of deeds on petition considered.

In re Bird's Trusts, 3 Ch. D. 214, 25 W. R. Dig. 97, and Lewis v. Hillman, 3 H. L. Cas. 607, considered.—HOFFE'S ESTATE ACT, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 507; 82 L. T. 556.

45. Pleading — Counterclaim — Counterclaim in reply—Right of plaintiff to plead set-off to counterclaim—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 24, sub-section 3—Ord. 19, r. 3; ord. 21, rr. 10-17. —The plaintiffs claimed a balance of an account. The defendants counterclaimed for damages for breach of contract. The plaintiffs in their reply denied the contract, and further pleaded that, if there was such a contract, the defendants had broken it, and they claimed damages for such breach.

Held, that although the cause of action in respect of which the plaintiffs claimed damages in their reply existed before the issue of the writ, the plaintiffs were entitled to raise the matter in their reply, and were not bound to introduce it into their statement of claim by amendment.

Toke v. Andrews, 30 W. R. 659, 8 Q. B. D. 428, approved.—GIBBS v. NEVILLE, C.A., 532; [1900] 2 Q. B. 181; 69 L. J. Q. B. 514; 82 L. T. 446.

46. Sale by the court—Debenture-holders' action—Property forming debenture-holders' security in jeopardy—Motion for judgment on admissions in pleadings—R. S. C., ord. 51, r. 1b.—The court—on motion for judgment on admissions in the pleadings in a debenture-holders' action, in which the plaintiff sued on behalf of himself and all other debenture-holders, and the debenture-holders were entitled to a charge on the property of the company—directed a sale of the property of the company under ord. 51, r. 1*b*, upon proof of the insolvency of the company and the jeopardy of the property comprising the debenture-holders' security, although the principal moneys secured by the debentures were not due, no interest thereon being in arrear for six months, and no resolution having been passed, or order made, for the winding up of the company.

In such a case the admitted allegations of the statement of claim should be verified by affidavit. —DAY AND NIGHT ADVERTISING CO., RE, UPWARD v. DAY AND NIGHT, &c., CO., Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 362.

47. Summons in chambers — Adjournment into court—Costs of adjournment—Ord. 55, rr. 15, 15a; ord. 26, r. 1—"The court or a judge"—Right of suitor to take an order from the judge personally.—A party to a summons in chambers in the Chancery Division has a right to have the summons adjourned into court, but his right, in cases where the rules do not make an order by the judge in person necessary, is subject to the discretion of the court as to the costs of the adjournment, which will not be exercised against him merely because his application has failed.

The words "the court or a judge" in ord. 26, r. 1, do not mean only the judge in person, and an order made by a master in the Chancery Division is an order made by the court or a judge.

Lambton v. Parkinson, 35 W. R. 545, and In re Watts, 31 W. R. 262, 22 Ch. D. 5, distinguished.—LLOYDS BANK v. PRINCESS ROYAL COLLIERY CO. (No. 2), Ch.D. Byrne, J., 427.

48. Subpœna—Issue of—Oppression—Ord. 27, rr. 26-34—Abuse of the practice of the court.—Although a subpœna ad testificandum may be issued at any time, the court will set aside the service of a subpœna which is issued at a time when it cannot be effective by any possibility, and can only be oppressive to the witness.—LONDON FINANCE CORPORATION v. KAUFMAN, Ch.D. North, J., 458; 69 L. J. Ch. 196.

49. Trial—Mode of trial—Trial with jury—Leave to defend given without any condition or direction as to mode of trial—Right of defendant to trial with jury—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 14, rr. 6, 8; ord. 36, r. 6. —Where on a summons under order 14 an order has been made giving the defendant leave to defend without any condition or direction as to mode of trial, the judge at chambers cannot on a subsequent summons deprive the defendant of his right under ord. 36, r. 6, to have the action tried with a jury. —WOOLFE v. DE BRAAM, C.A., 161; 81 L. T. 533.

50. Trial—New trial—Verdict of jury—Discovery of fresh evidence.—A new trial will not be granted upon the ground that fresh evidence has been discovered, which could not with reasonable diligence have been discovered before the trial, unless that fresh evidence is so conclusive as to make it practically certain that the verdict would be different if it were adduced.—YOUNG v. KERSHAW, C.A.; 81 L. T. 531.

51. Undertaking in an order—Attachment—Service of order on solicitors—Motion for committal—Rules of Supreme Court, 1883, ord. 42, r. 7; ord. 44, r. 2.—Where defendants in an action committed a breach of an undertaking given by them and embodied in an order of the court which was not served on them personally, plaintiffs asked for leave to issue a writ of attachment.

Held, that the order might be enforced by committal without service, and that the proper remedy for the breach of an undertaking is by committal, and not by attachment.—D—— v. A. & Co., Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 429; [1900] 1 Ch. 484; 69 L. J. Ch. 382; 82 L. T. 47.

See also Administration, 7; Admiralty, 1, 3, 6; Annuity; Bankruptcy, 10, 14, 15, 18; Company, 28, 29; Contract, 4; County Court; Crown; Divorce, 5-17; Landlord and Tenant, 3, 13, 18; Merger, 2; Mortgage, 13; Partition, 3, 4; Prohibition; Railway, 5; Solicitor, 1, 6, 12; Trade Union, 1; Trustee, 5.

PRESCRIPTION ACT.—See Easement, 1, 3.

PRINCIPAL and AGENT:—

1. Power of attorney—Power to mortgage—Excess of authority—Liability of donor.—D. gave G. a power of attorney authorizing him to buy, sell, charge, and transfer in any form whatsoever any estate, stocks, or funds, "following his letters of instructions and private advices which, if necessary, shall be considered part of these presents." G. executed a mortgage upon property to which D. became entitled upon the death of his mother.

Held, that the power authorized the execution of the mortgage, although as between D. and G. the mortgage was unauthorized.—DAVY v. WALLER, Ch.D. North, J.; 81 L. T. 107.

2. Undisclosed principal—Unauthorized agent—Ratification—Contract—Contract made by person in his own name on behalf of another without authority. —A contract made by a person in his own name, but intending to act for another in making it, though without authority from him, can be ratified by that other person, although the intending agent did not disclose at the time of making the contract that he was acting for someone else.

So held by the Court of Appeal (Collins and Romer, L.JJ.; A. L. Smith, L.J., dissenting).—DURANT v. ROBERTS, C.A., 476; [1900] 1 Q. B. 629; 69 L. J. Q. B. 382; 82 L. T. 217.

See also Contract, 15; Frauds, Statute of, 2; Solicitor, 13; Stock Exchange, 1-4; Vendor and Purchaser, 3, 20.

PROBATE:—

1. Administration—Creditor—Mortgage of leasehold by sub-demise—Outstanding day held in trust—Limited grant.—A lessee of certain premises mortgaged them by sub-demise for the residue of the term less the last day which he covenanted to hold in trust for the mortgagee. The mortgagee entered into possession of the premises. The mortgagor died intestate and insolvent. The mortgagee assigned his interest in the premises. The assignee desired to surrender his interest, but difficulties arose from the existence of the outstanding day. The assignee applied for administration of the estate of the mortgagor, limited to the outstanding day.

Held, on proof of due citation of the next-of-kin, that the grant might be made as asked for.—KINGWELL, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 81 L. T. 461.

2. Administration—Creditor—Statute-barred debt—Notice to next-of-kin.—The deceased died intestate and a lunatic in a county lunatic asylum. At the time of his death he was indebted to the guardians. Subsequently the guardians were informed that the deceased was entitled to a small amount of property. Their debt was then barred by the Statute of Limitations. The only next-of-kin of the deceased was a lunatic daughter in the same asylum and also indebted to the guardians for maintenance. On an application for a grant of letters of administration to a nominee of the guardians, Held, that, though a creditor for a statute-barred debt might obtain a grant of letters of administration, notice must be given to the daughter.—DRUCE, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 81 L. T. 458.

3. Administration — Disappearance — Practice — Administration de bonis non—Former administratrix—Revocation of grant—Fresh grant to one of the next-of-kin.—The practice by which a grant of administration may be revoked and a fresh grant made in the absence of the holder of the outstanding grant, is not confined to cases where administration has been taken by the creditors.

Where an intestate died leaving a widow and six children by a former marriage, and the widow, who obtained administration, could not be found, the court, upon the application of the children, revoked the grant and directed administration de bonis non in favour of one of their number.—LOVEDAY, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1900] P. 154; 69 L. J. P. 48; 82 L. T. 692.

4. Administration—Foreign domicil—Next-of-kin out of the jurisdiction—Assets and some beneficiaries in England—No executor—Grant to stranger without citing next-of-kin—Practice—Administration with will annexed—Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), s. 73.—The testatrix, who died domiciled in the Republic of Hayti, left a will which was valid by the law of her domicil, but not executed with the formalities prescribed in the Wills Act. There was no appointment of executors, but the will contained the words: "M. E. Bordu of Port-au-Prince and Mr. J. B. Wallace, of Liverpool, shall carry out my last wishes." The only estate in England consisted of a sum of £1,260 7s. 11d. in the hands of Mr. Wallace's firm.

The sole next-of-kin, who was entitled in distribution to half the fund, was in Hayti and had not been cited; but the persons entitled to the other half were in England, and assented to Mr. Wallace being appointed administrator with the will annexed.

The court appointed Mr. Wallace administrator (with the will annexed) under section 73 without requiring the next-of-kin to be cited.—MOFFATT, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1900] P. 152; 69 L. J. P. 98.

5. Administration—Intestacy—Shares in foreign railways—Legal estate outstanding in the intestate—Beneficial owner a bankrupt—Limited grant to trustee in bankruptcy.—A. being the owner of certain shares in two foreign railway companies handed the certificates to C., who received the dividends as beneficial owner until he became bankrupt, after which the trustee in C.'s bankruptcy received such dividends as became payable. A. died, never having divested himself of the legal estate in the shares; and administration to his estate was granted to B., who died leaving part of the estate unadministered. Upon the application of the trustee in C.'s bankruptcy,

The court granted administration to him, in respect of the unadministered estate of A., limited to the shares in the two foreign railway companies.—AGNESE, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1900] P. 60; 69 L. J. P. 27; 82 L. T. 204.

6. Administration — Renunciation—Retractation—Administration de bonis non—Joint grant to three persons—Practice.—In 1896 A. H. T. died bankrupt and intestate, leaving a widow, who was his second wife, and six children surviving. His estate was in the hands of an official receiver in bankruptcy. The widow and children duly renounced all rights to administration, and the official receiver took the grant to A. H. T.'s estate, and also a grant de bonis non to the estate of A. H. T.'s first wife.

In 1899 the administrator, having paid all the debts, desired to be relieved of his office, and with his concurrence the court permitted the widow and children to retract their renunciations; revoked the letters of administration; and made a joint grant to the widow and two of the children, in respect of that portion of A. H. T.'s estate remaining unadministered, thus giving them the right, as of course, to take administration de bonis non in the estate of A. H. T.'s first wife.—THACKER, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1900] P. 15; 69 L. J. P. 1; 81 L. T. 790.

7. Administration—Renunciation by sole next-of-kin—Grant to person next entitled though without interest.—The deceased died intestate, leaving his sister as sole next-of-kin and entitled to his estate. She renounced her right to administration and consented to a grant of letters of administration being made to the deceased's uncle, who, if the sister had not survived, would have been entitled to share in the estate, but under the circumstances possessed no interest. On an application by the uncle for a grant of letters of administration,

Held, that the grant might be made as desired.—TRIGG, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 69 L. J. P. 47; 82 L. T. 626.

8. Administration—Revocation—Previous administration action—Res judicata—Acquiescence.—In 1892 letters of administration to an estate were granted to the defendant in the present action as the cousin and one of the next-of-kin of the intestate, and on the 27th of December, 1892, the defendant commenced Chancery proceedings for the administration of the estate. The present plaintiff made a claim in these proceedings to be entitled as one of the next-of-kin to a share in the distribution of the estate. This claim was disallowed by the chief clerk, and the plaintiff took no further steps in the proceedings. On the 21st of April, 1896, a final order for distribution of the estate was made in the Chancery action, and all further proceedings therein were stayed. On the 7th of June, 1898, the plaintiff commenced the present action to revoke the letters of administration granted in 1892 and to obtain a grant in her own favour.

Held, that, as the only object of the present action was to recover the property which had been distributed, the court would not assist the plaintiff in her attempt to obtain a grant which would be useless to her, seeing that she could institute proceedings in Chancery even though the letters of administration had not been revoked.

Held, also, that, though the matter was not res judicata against the plaintiff by reason of the Chancery proceedings, she had been guilty of such delay and acquiescence as to disentitle her to maintain an action against those who had received the estate by virtue of those proceedings.—MOHAN v. BROUGHTON, C.A., 371; [1900] P. 56; 69 L. J. P. 20; 82 L. T. 29.

9. Intestacy—Father and son—Doubt as to who died first—Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77)—Grant under section 73.—Where a person who left no will was presumed to have died "in or since 1863," and his father died in 1866, also intestate, the court made a grant under section 73 to a brother of the presumed deceased, no representative of the father's estate having been appointed.—HARLING, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1900] P. 59; 69 L. J. P. 32; 81 L. T. 791.

10. Practice—New trial—Motion for—Findings of jury—Legatee preparing will in his own favour.—On a motion for a new trial made by the executors after the court had excluded from probate a pecuniary legacy exhausting nearly the whole of the testator's estate to his confidential agent who had drawn the will, it appeared that the jury had properly found that the testator knew and approved its contents except as regards the above bequest, which he did not know and approve of, but had in a rider expressed its belief that the testator intended to give to said legatee half his property,

Held, that the motion was properly refused. The rider did not neutralize but rather supported the verdict, for, if correct, it showed that the will did not truly express the testator's intention.—FARRELLY v. CORRIGAN, P.C.; [1899] A. C. 563.

11. Will — Administration — Surviving executor absent from England—No intention to return or to continue to act—Application for grant de bonis non on behalf of assignee of reversionary interest.—Where a surviving executor, after proving the will and codicil, left England not intending to return or continue to act, the court, on motion, granted administration de bonis non, with the will and codicil annexed, to the nominee of the assignees of the residuary legatee. — CAMPION, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D., 288; [1900] P. 13; 69 L. J. P. 19; 81 L. T. 790.

12. Will—Codicils—Informalities—Infants interested. — Where a testatrix left three testamentary papers, two of which contained certain informalities and affected the interests of infants, the court, being of opinion that if the usual practice were insisted upon and the documents propounded in solemn form, the result would be to establish all three documents, granted probate thereof, on motion, to the executors.—O'BRIEN, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1900] P. 208; 69 L. J. P. 55.

13. Will—Law of Chili—Evidence—Grant of administration with will annexed to the widow.—A testator died domiciled in Chili, leaving a will, appointing two executors, one of whom died without taking probate. The other was believed to be in Bolivia, but no response had been obtained to repeated applications made to him. The only property in this country of any value consisted of a debt which it was desired to collect.

The court accepted the affidavit of a notary, who was not a qualified Chilian lawyer, as evidence of the law of Chili; and, upon his evidence that the powers and duties of an executor in that country would only extend to seeing that the estate was duly administered by the acting heiress, who in this case was the testator's widow, the court made to her a grant of administration, with the will annexed. — WHITELEGG, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1899] P. 267; 81 L. T. 234.

14. Will — Executor — Disappearance of person named as — Court of Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), s. 73—Substantial estate—Grant to one of the residuary legatees.—The executor named in a will took some steps towards obtaining probate, but, after drawing a sum of £25 from the estate on account of costs, appeared to have departed from the country in embarrassed circumstances, leaving no address, and apparently with no intention of returning.

Held (all parties interested under the will consenting), that, although the estate was of substantial value, administration with the will annexed might be granted, upon motion, under section 73, to one of the persons named as residuary legatees without notice to the executor.—MASSEY, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1899] P. 270; 81 L. T. 493.

15. Will — Lost will — Small estate—Proof on motion—Consent of next-of-kin dispensed with.—The court will now, in the case of a small estate, entertain an application to prove, upon motion, the contents of a lost will, without requiring, as an absolute condition, the consent of all persons interested in the estate.

In the Goods of Pearson, [1896] P. 289, qualified. —APTED, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1899] P. 272; 68 L. J. P. 123; 81 L. T. 459.

16. *Will—Revocation—Third will—Destruction of will—Animus revocandi—Dependent relative revocation.*—The deceased executed three wills, the third of which revoked all former wills. Under the first of the three his wife took almost all his property absolutely. Under the third she was entitled to a limited interest. Before his death the deceased informed his wife that he had been unjust to her in the third will, that he intended to destroy it, and that he desired his property to go by the first will. He summoned a witness, repeated what he had said to his wife, tore up the will, and gave the witness the pieces to burn.

Held, that the doctrine of dependent relative revocation applied; that the deceased had not destroyed the third will with an absolute animus revocandi, but solely with the intention of reviving the first will; and that probate ought to be granted of the third will on proof of its contents.—COSSEY v. COSSEY, P.D. & Ad.D.; 69 L. J. P. 17; 82 L. T. 203.

17. Will—Stranger—Grant of administration with will annexed to stranger—"Special circumstances"—Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), s. 73.—Where all parties interested in the estate of the deceased had entered into a compromise, with a view to putting an end to all further disputes and litigation, upon the basis that B., a stranger in blood, who had been employed by the deceased in auditing his accounts, should apply for and obtain a grant of letters of administration with the will and codicils annexed, the court, upon his application, and subject to the consents of all the persons interested in the estate, and subject to an affidavit of the fitness of the proposed administrator being filed, made the grant to him under section 73.—POTTER, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1899] P. 265; 69 L. J. P. 53; 81 L. T. 234.

PROHIBITION:—

Salford Hundred Court—Jurisdiction—"Cause of action"—Plea to the jurisdiction—Want of—Salford Hundred Court of Record Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. cxxx.), ss. 6, 7.—The expression "the cause of action" in section 6 of the Salford Hundred Court of Record Act, 1868, means the whole cause of action.

Whitehead v. Butt, 7 Times L. R. 609, approved.

By section 7 of the Act, "Save and except as aforesaid, no defendant shall be permitted to object to the jurisdiction of the court otherwise than by special plea, and, if the want of jurisdiction be not so pleaded, the court shall have jurisdiction for all purposes."

Held, that a defendant, against whom judgment had been signed in default of appearance in an action in the Salford Hundred Court, where the claim did not exceed £50, could not get a writ of prohibition on the ground that the cause of action did not arise within the jurisdiction of the court, as section 7 conferred jurisdiction on the court in such a case in the absence of a plea to the jurisdiction.

Chadwick v. Ball, 14 Q. B. D. 855, 33 W. R. Dig. 172, followed.—PAYNE v. HOGG, C.A., 417; [1900] 2 Q. B. 43; 69 L. J. Q. B. 579; 82 L. T. 584.

See also Telegraph, 1.

PUBLIC AUTHORITIES PROTECTION ACT.—See Limitation Statutes, 6; Local Government, 3; Practice, 13, 14.

PUBLIC HEALTH.—See Justices, 4; Landlord and Tenant, 27; Local Government, 2, 8-20; Metropolis, 4-7; Police, 2; Scotland, Law of, 1; Vendor and Purchaser, 2; Water, 2.

RAILWAY:—

1. Lands Clauses Acts—Compensation for injuriously affecting—Intention to use land for special purpose—Adaptability.—Notice was given by a railway company to treat for the purchase of a part of a piece of land which the claimants had recently purchased with the intention of building a school thereon. The land was specially suitable for that purpose, and no other site in the vicinity was equally suitable. The construction of the railway would render the remaining part of the land less suitable for a school. The claimants had not begun to build the school.

Held, that, in assessing compensation for injuriously affecting the land retained by the claimants, their intention to build a school thereon and the suitability of the land for that purpose ought to be taken into consideration.—BAILEY v. ISLE OF THANET LIGHT RAILWAYS CO., Q.B.D., 589; [1900] 1 Q. B. 722; 69 L. J. Q. B. 442; 82 L. T. 713.

2. Level crossing—Speed of trains—Railway Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 48—Infringement of statute by public body—Information by Attorney-General—Injunction—Injury to public, evidence of not necessary.—Upon an information filed by the Attorney-General to restrain a public body with statutory powers from infringing a term introduced into their Act in the interests of the public, as a condition of the exercise of their powers, it is not necessary to prove that injury to the public results from that infringement.

A railway company was by a special Act, which incorporated the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, empowered to carry their railway across a turnpike road on the level. They constantly drove their trains over the level crossing, which adjoined a station, at a speed exceeding four miles an hour, in contravention of the provisions of section 48 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845.

On an information filed by the Attorney-General to restrain them from so doing they set up by way of defence that there was no proof of any injury occasioned to the public by their contravention of the section, and that the inconvenience caused to the public by reason of the existence of the crossing would be increased if they complied with it.

Held (affirming the judgment of Bruce, J., [1899] 1 Q. B. 72, 47 W. R. Dig. 169), that as the information was filed by the Attorney-General to enforce the express terms of an enactment made by the Legislature in the interests of the public, the court could not entertain the question whether injury to the public was in fact occasioned by the contravention of the Act, but were bound to grant the injunction.

Attorney-General v. Great Western Railway Co., L. R. 7 Ch. 767; Attorney-General v. Cockermouth Local Board, L. R. 18 Eq. 172; and Attorney-General v. Shrewsbury (Kingsland) Bridge Co., 21 Ch. D. 752, followed.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO., C.A.; [1900] 1 Q. B. 78; 69 L. J. Q. B. 26; 81 L. T. 649.

3. Obligation to preserve drainage of lands—Limit of time—Railways Clauses (Scotland) Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 33), s. 65.—The appellant company acquired lands for the purposes of their undertaking from the respondent's predecessor in title under a conveyance reciting a decree arbitral following on a statutory reference. The conveyance contained a declaration that "the said railway company shall be bound and obliged to preserve the effective drainage of the lands in so far as the same may be interfered with by the railway works."

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that this obligation was not of unlimited duration, but was subject to the limit of time prescribed by section 65 of the Railways Clauses (Scotland) Act, 1845, which was incorporated in the private Act of the company.—GREAT NORTH OF SCOTLAND RAILWAY CO. v. FIFE (DUKE), H.L. (Sc.); 82 L. T. 425.

4. Quasi-easement—Minerals demised separately from surface—Right reserved to lessee to sink new pits in surface—Reasonable approval of lessor—Purchase of surface by railway company—Compensation—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 Vict. c. 18), s. 68.—A., the freeholder of certain lands (containing some 355 acres), demised the minerals in them to B. for a term of sixty years. The lease contained a proviso that B. and his assigns should be entitled to sink new pits in any part of the surface over the demised minerals, "but so that the position of such pit or pits be subject to the reasonable approval of the said lessor, his heirs or assigns, or his or their agents for the time being." A. afterwards let part of the surface to B. on a tenancy from year to year, and subsequently he agreed with the Great Western Railway Co. to sell to them five acres of the surface so let.

The Great Western Railway Co. gave B. a notice to treat for his interest in those five acres. B. on the same day notified A. of his intention to sink a pit in the five acres agreed to be sold to the Great Western Railway Co. He never gave any such notice to the railway company.

On arbitration as to the compensation to be given B., the arbitrator awarded him £100 in respect of his yearly tenancy of the surface of the five acres taken, and £8,900 in respect of the damage done to his interest in the demised minerals by the right to sink a pit in the five acres being taken from him.

Held, that the right to sink a pit in the five acres sold by A. was an interest which the sale to the railway company had injuriously affected within section 68 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and that B. was therefore entitled to the £8,900 awarded by the arbitrator in respect of it.—MASTERS v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO., Q.B.D.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 673; 82 L. T. 819.

5. Receiver and manager—Cost of litigation—"Other outgoings"—Jurisdiction of court—Railway Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 127), s. 4—Judicature Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 44), s. 5.—Since the passing of the Judicature Act, 1890, there can be doubt that the court has power to order the payment of costs of proceedings under a special Act, though the special Act contains no provision for this purpose.

A railway company incurred costs in defending an action brought by a contractor for a large sum. During the course of the proceedings a receiver and manager of the company was appointed on the petition of a judgment creditor, and inquiries as to creditors were directed by the receivership order. Leave was given to the company to continue to attend the proceedings commenced by the contractor.

Held, that the costs incurred in resisting the contractor's claim were not "other outgoings" within the meaning of section 4 of the Railway Companies Act, 1867, but that all such costs incurred since the receivership order ought to be treated as incurred in pursuance of the inquiries directed by that order, and ought to be paid in priority to any future payments to any creditors of the company who had benefited by the opposition to such claim.—WREXHAM, MOLD, &c., RAILWAY CO., RE, C.A., 311; [1900] 1 Ch. 261; 69 L. J. Ch. 291; 82 L. T. 33.

6. Way-leave—Deed—Construction.—By deed in 1854 H. agreed to grant to a railway company a way-leave and right to make railways through his land for a term of 1,000 years, the company paying H. a specified rent on coal carried over "any part of the railways comprehended in" a Bill which afterwards became the company's special Act of 1854, and which should be shipped at Port B. For more than forty years rent was paid by the company for coal carried over the railways and shipped at Port B., when the coal passed over H.'s land, but no rent was paid or claimed for coal so carried and shipped when not passing over H.'s land. In an action brought by H.'s successor against the company,

Held, that the words of the deed were unambiguous; that the fact that the parties had interpreted the words wrongly could not affect the construction; that the company were liable to pay rent upon coal conveyed over any part of the railways comprehended in the special Act and shipped at Port B., even though it did not pass over H.'s land; and that the plaintiff was entitled to an account for the six years' prior to the issue of the writ.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, [1899] 1 Ch. 656, affirmed.—NORTH-EASTERN RAILWAY CO. v. HASTINGS (LORD), H.L.; [1900] A. C. 260; 69 L. J. Ch. 516; 82 L. T. 429.

See also Arbitration, 6, 7; Easement, 5; Inland Revenue, 30, 32; Local Government, 23; Master and Servant, 20, 21.

RATING.—See Highway, 2; Local Government, 5, 21-23; Metropolis, 8-10; Poor Law, 1-10; Scotland, Law of, 1.

RESTRAINT of TRADE.—See Contract, 16.

REVENUE.—See Inland Revenue.

RIVER:—

Pollution—Putrid solid matter—Right of impounding or diverting water—Rivers Pollution Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), ss. 2, 17, 20.—The defendant had been for many years the owner of weaving sheds on the bank of a river, and, before the passing of the Rivers Pollution Act, 1876, had acquired a right of diverting and impounding water for the purpose of his business. The water higher up the stream contained vegetable refuse, which, if it had been allowed to flow along the natural course of the river, would not have become putrid. But when it settled in the defendant's impounding reservoir it became putrid, and, when the reservoir was periodically cleared out by opening sluices, the effluent contained the vegetable refuse which had so become putrid. The effluent consisted of 97·6 per cent. of water and 2·4 of solid matter. Proceedings having been taken against the defendant, in which it was alleged that he put putrid solid matter into the river contrary to the provisions of section 2 of Rivers Pollution Act, 1876,

Held, that the defendant was protected from liability under the Act by section 17.

Held, also (by A. L. Smith and Rigby, L.JJ.), that the matter put into the river by the defendant was not solid matter.

Per Vaughan Williams, L.J.—Quære, whether the proper time for considering whether the matter was solid was not the moment of commencing the operation of flushing rather than the moment when the matter came into contact with the stream.—RIBBLE (RIVER) JOINT COMMITTEE v. HALLIWELL, C.A., 22; [1899] 2 Q. B. 385; 81 L. T. 38.

See also Local Government, 13, 19.

SALE of GOODS:—

1. Contract for sale by description—Implied condition—Acceptance—Passing of property—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 13, 17, 35.—Where a specific article is sold by description without having been seen by the buyer, there is an implied condition, under section 13 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, that the goods shall correspond with the description, and the vendor cannot make the property pass by delivering something which does not correspond with the description.—VARLEY v. WHIPP, Q.B.D., 363; [1900] 1 Q. B. 513; 69 L. J. Q. B. 333.

2. Memorandum—Loose case and memorandum book—Name of seller only on case—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4.—A purchaser of goods signed a memorandum in a paper book, in which orders were generally put, slipped into a leather cover. The name of the seller did not appear in the memorandum, but was stamped upon the cover.

Held, that this was a sufficient memorandum to satisfy section 4 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893.—JONES v. JOYNER, Q.B.D.; 82 L. T. 768.

See also Trade-Mark, 3.

SCHOOL:—

1. School board—Disqualification of member—Member "concerned . . . in any work done under the authority of such board"—Sale of gravel and sand to contractor with the board—Elementary Education Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 75), s. 34.—The respondent, a member of a school board, supplied sand and gravel to a builder who had entered into a contract with the said school board for the erection of some school buildings. The sand and gravel were used in the course of the said contract being carried out, and the respondent, when selling the said sand and gravel to the contractor, knew they would be so used.

By section 34 of the Elementary Education Act, 1870, it is enacted that "No member of a school board shall in any way share or be concerned in the profits of any bargain or contract with, or any work done under the authority of, such school board."

Held, that the respondent had committed an offence within the above section, he having been concerned in work done under the authority of the school board of which he was a member.—BARNACLE v. CLARK, Q.B.D., 336; [1900] 1 Q. B. 279; 69 L. J. Q. B. 15; 81 L. T. 484.

2. Subscriber to school—Management of school vested in subscribers—Bonâ fide subscriber.—In a case in which the management of a school and the right to appoint the teachers were, under a deed, vested in the subscribers to the school to the amount of twenty shillings and upwards,

Held, that certain persons, on behalf of whom subscriptions were sent to the treasurer of the school on the day of the election of head master, with a view to their voting at such election, and whose subscriptions were returned by him to the person sending the same, were not bonâ fide subscribers with a right to vote at such election.

It appears to be a right inherent in such a body of subscribers to refuse to admit a new subscriber for good cause.—NOTT v. WILLIAMS, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 316.

SCOTLAND, LAW of:—

1. Cost of opposing bill in Parliament—Burgh—Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 101), s. 95—Rates—Ultra vires.—The magistrates and council of Leith, who were also the local authority for public health, incurred costs in opposing in Parliament a bill for amalgamating the burghal territory of Leith and Portobello with an enlarged district subject to the government of the new and extended corporation of the city of Edinburgh, and they succeeded in having the bill thrown out as regards Leith,

Held, affirming the decision of the Second Division of the Court of Session, (1897) 25 R. 126, that it was ultra vires of the magistrates to include the expenses of the opposition in the public health assessment as expenses "incurred in executing" that act.

Attorney-General v. Mayor of Brecon, 10 Ch. D. 204, distinguished.—LEITH COUNCIL v. LEITH HARBOUR AND DOCKS COMMISSIONERS, H.L. (Sc.); [1899] A. C. 508; 81 L T. 98.

2. Succession — Vesting — Postponed period of distribution—Conditional institution.—A testator directed his trustees to allow his widow the liferent use of his house and such allowance as they thought necessary, and "on the dissolution and winding-up of the firm of B. & Co." (of which he was a partner), "in the event of the predecease of my said wife, and if she then survives, on her death, to realize my whole means and estate and to divide the same into four equal shares, and pay one share to each of my children" A., B., C., and D., "or to their respective heirs." The widow survived the testator, and the firm had not been wound up. C. and D. survived the testator, but were dead.

Held, affirming the decision of the First Division of the Court of Session, (1898) 25 R. 811, but not on the same reasoning, that the interests of the children were not in suspense, but had vested a morte testatoris.—BOWMAN v. BOWMAN, H.L. (Sc.); [1899] A. C. 518.

3. Succession — Will — Provision for widow—Partial intestacy—Terce, jus relictæ, and legitim.—A testator by his will made a provision for his wife declaring it to be in full of all claims by her of terce and jus relictæ or otherwise. Through the death of certain devisees before vesting took place, the residue fell into intestacy.

Held, affirming the decision of the First Division of the Court of Session, (1898) 25 R. 899, that the declaration was to be construed as excluding the widow's claim in so far only as conflicting with the will, and, an event happening which the testator never contemplated, the widow was entitled both to her provision and to terce and jus relictæ out of such heritables and movables as had fallen into intestacy. —NAISMITH v. BOYES, H.L. (Sc.); [1899] A. C. 495.

4. Water—"Heritor"—Church and manse—Assessment of way-leave—Scottish Act, 1663 (c. 21 or c. 31). —The Scottish Act, 1663 (c. 21 or c. 31): "Wher competent manses are alreadie built, ordaines the heritors of the paroche to releive the minister and his executors of all costs charges and expenses for repairing of the forsaids manses." A conduit of the Glasgow Waterworks Commissioners was carried underground through lands in a parish in virtue of grants of way-leave in perpetuity, obtained from the proprietors of the land.

Held, affirming the decision of the First Division of the Court of Session, (1899) 1 F. 523, that the commissioners were liable under the Act of 1663 to assessment in respect of their conduit as "heritors" of the parish for the repair of the manse.—GLASGOW CORPORATION v. M'EWAN, H.L. (Sc.); [1900] A. C. 91.

SETTLED LAND:—

1. Capital moneys—Improvements—Estates in England and Ireland settled by one settlement upon the same trusts—Application of proceeds of sale of Irish estates in payment for improvement of English estates —Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 21 (3).—The tenant for life of estates in England and Ireland which were settled by the same will and upon the same trusts, laid out considerable sums on improvements upon the estates in England in pursuance of a scheme approved of by the trustees of the settlement, and was desirous that the trustees should apply capital moneys in their hands, being the proceeds of the sale of part of the estates in Ireland, in repaying him the sums already laid out on such improvements, and in completing the improvements authorized by the scheme which was left at the chambers of the judge. On a summons by the tenant for life against the trustees as defendants,

Held, that the capital moneys in the hands of the trustees arising from the sale of part of the estates in Ireland might be applied in payment for improvements on the estates in England in accordance with the principle of Re Mundy's Settled Estates, [1891] 1 Ch. 399, and similar cases.—COOTE v. CADOGAN, EYRE-COOTE, RE, Ch.D. North, J.; 81 L. T. 535.

2. Drainage—Improvement without scheme—Incidental expenses and outgoings—Income or capital—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 21, 25, and 26—Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), ss. 13, 15.—A testator gave his residuary estate to trustees on trust for conversion and investment, then to pay the income in the manner therein directed to three persons as tenants for life, then to hold the estate for the children of one of them. The investment clause contained a power to invest on freehold ground-rents, and power was given to the trustees to postpone the sale of any part of the estate. Part of the estate retained by them unsold consisted of three leasehold houses held for the residue of long terms, and upon these large sums had to be expended by the trustees in putting in modern systems of drainage.

Held, that the drainage expenses were improvements within the meaning of the Settled Land Acts, and that under the circumstances they should be borne by capital.—THOMAS, RE, WEATHERALL v. THOMAS, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 409; [1900] 1 Ch. 319; 69 L. J. Ch. 198.

3. Heirlooms—Application of proceeds of sale of heirlooms for repair of unsold heirlooms—Salvage—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 37, sub-section 2.—A settlement made by will included several large estates, with three mansion-houses and the pictures, china, and furniture therein, which were settled as heirlooms. Two of the mansion-houses were sold under orders of court made in pursuance of the provisions of the Settled Land Acts, and certain pictures, china, and furniture removed therefrom, for which no room could be found in the remaining mansion-house and the town house of the tenant for life for the time being, were warehoused. Of the other pictures for which room was found in the remaining mansion-house, some were in a bad state of repair, and required the expenditure of a considerable sum for the preservation. On an originating summons taken out by the tenant for life, to which the trustees of the settlement were made defendants, for authority to sell the warehoused heirlooms, and that the trustees might have liberty out of the proceeds of sale to repair the remaining heirlooms, Held, that the tenant for life might sell the warehoused heirlooms, and that the trustees might, out of the proceeds of sale, spend such a sum as was necessary in repairing the remaining heirlooms, with liberty to apply in chambers as to the amount to be spent for that purpose.—WALDEGRAVE (EARL) v. SELBORNE (EARL), Ch.D. North, J.; 81 L. T. 632.

4. Lease—Tenant for life—Building lease—Reservation of minerals—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 6, 7, 13, 17, 20—Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78).—The Settled Land Act, 1882, does not enable a tenant for life to grant a building lease of the surface reserving the mines and minerals.—NEVILL AND NEWELL'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 181; [1900] 1 Ch. 90; 69 L. J. Ch. 94; 81 L. T. 581.

5. Lease—Tenant for life—Building lease—Reservation of minerals—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 6, 13, 17.—A tenant for life has power, under section 6 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, to grant a lease of settled land containing a reservation of the mines and minerals.

In re Nevill and Newell's Contract, ante, p. 181, [1900] 1 Ch. 90, overruled.—GLADSTONE, RE, GLADSTONE v. GLADSTONE, C.A., 531; [1900] 2 Ch. 101; 69 L. J. Ch. 455; 82 L. T. 515.

6. Lease — Tenant for life — Surface reserving minerals—Power of leasing.—Where, under a settlement, a tenant for life has power to lease all or any part of the settled lands for building purposes, and also power to lease mines of coal, iron, or other materials, either with or without the surface lands, those powers enable him to lease the settled lands for building purposes, reserving the minerals under the lands so leased.

Cockerell v. Cholmeley, 10 B. & C. 564, discussed and distinguished.—DUKE OF RUTLAND'S SETTLED ESTATES, RE, DUKE OF RUTLAND v. MARQUIS OF BRISTOL, Ch.D. Byrne, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 206; 69 L. J. Ch. 603.

7. Scheme for improvement approved by trustees, who had not capital moneys in their hands—Improvements executed at expense of tenant for life—Reimbursement—Settled Land Act, 1882, ss. 21, 22, 25, 26.—Trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts may approve a scheme by the tenant for life for the execution of improvements thereunder, although at the time of giving such approval they have not in their hands capital moneys for the execution of such improvements; and when, after such approval, the tenant for life, with the knowledge of such trustees, has expended money for such purpose, it is lawful for the trustees, if such early expenditure is for the advantage of all parties concerned, and subject to the proper certificate being obtained, to reimburse him out of capital moneys which may subsequently come to their hands.—NORFOLK (DUKE) PARLIAMENTARY ESTATES, RE, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 328; [1900] 1 Ch. 461; 69 L. J. Ch. 236; 82 L. T. 613.

8. Trustee — Will — Crown — Escheat — Bona vacantia—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 2 (2), 22 (5).—A testator gave a life interest in all his property to his wife. There was no remainder over on her death nor any residuary gift. There were trustees appointed by the will who were also appointed trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1882.

The testator's widow as tenant for life under the Settled Land Act sold part of the freehold estate of the testator, and handed over the proceeds of sale to the trustees. On the widow's death it was found that the testator had no heir or next-of-kin.

There was in the trustees' hands a sum of £1,900 the proceeds of the sale of the testator's freehold estate. On summons by the trustees claiming to be beneficially entitled to the money in their hands,

Held, that the Crown was entitled to the money as bona vacantia.—BOND RE, PANES v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 82 L. T. 612.

SETTLEMENT:—

1. Construction—Meaning of "income"—Tithes—Rent-charges under the Improvement of Land Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 114)—Voluntary abatements to tenants—Unlet property—Personal occupation of unlet property.—In calculating the amount of "income"—as the word is used in a popular sense—actually derived from landed estates for any particular year, it is right to deduct from the gross receipts sums payable by way of tithe and of rent-charges under the Improvement of Land Act, 1864, created by the predecessor in title of the person whose "income" is being calculated; and also such voluntary abatements of rent to tenants as are fairly necessitated by the circumstances of the case. The owner of the "income" is not to be credited with rent for any part of the property which happens to be unlet during the particular year.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (ante, p. 165), affirmed.—BATEMAN (LADY) v. FABER, C.A., 625.

2. Domicil—Infant—Husband a domiciled Austrian—Ratification—Repudiation—Austrian law—Application of English law.—In 1864 an Irish lady, an infant, married an Austrian at Berne. Previously to her marriage she executed a settlement. According to the law of her domicil after marriage, which was Austrian, she was unable to ratify the contract, or to place it out of her power to revoke it.

In 1893 the husband and wife executed a document in Austria to annul the settlement.

Held, that the wife never had, either before marriage or after, power to make an irrevocable settlement.

The effect of the change of the domicil was that the English doctrine as to the repudiation of a contract by an infant within a reasonable time became inapplicable by reason of the impossibility of effectually ratifying it.

Decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. (47 W. R. 571, [1899] 2 Ch. 569), reversed.—VIDITZ v. O'HAGAN, C.A., 516; [1900] 2 Ch. 87; 69 L. J. Ch. 507; 82 L. T. 480.

3. Portions—Term for raising portions—Infants — Contingent portions — Maintenance.— Portions, whether payable at a certain age or not, are so far contingent as not to be raisable, but to sink into the land, where children do not live to want their portions—i.e., where the children being sons do not attain twenty-one, or being daughters do not attain that age or marry. They are, however, so far considered vested as to carry with them such a rate of interest or such allowance as the court may deem necessary for the reasonable maintenance of the children.—GREAVES' SETTLED ESTATES, RE, JONES v. GREAVES, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; 69 L. J. Ch. 596; 82 L. T. 799.

4. Rent-charge—Term to secure—Arrears of rent-charge—Whether raisable by sale of inheritance.—A legal rent-charge was by deed charged upon and payable out of land, and besides the usual powers of distress and entry, a term was limited by the deed to the use of trustees upon the usual trusts if the rent-charge fell into arrear by mortgage or demise for all or part of the term, or by other reasonable means to raise the arrears.

Held (applying Hall v. Hurt, 2 J. & H. 76, 10 W. R. Ch. Dig. 5), that the limiting of the term negatived the right to have arrears raised by a sale of the inheritance.—BLACKBURNE v. HOPE EDWARDES, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 701.

5. Settlor's life interest—Forfeiture—Separation deed—Alienation by law—Receiving order.—By a settlement, dated in 1859, and made upon the marriage of A. and B. certain property of the husband was vested in trustees upon trust to invest the same, and to pay the interest, dividends, and annual produce thereof unto or permit the same to be received by the husband until he should be outlawed, or be found or declared a bankrupt, or become an insolvent debtor within the meaning of some Act of Parliament for the relief or relating to insolvent debtors, or should do or commit any other act, or any other event should occur whereby the income or any part thereof would or might if thereby settled absolutely upon or in trust for him become alienated by law or vested in any other person or persons; and from and after the decease of the husband, or the sooner determination of the trust thereinbefore declared for his benefit, upon trust to pay the whole of such interest, dividends, and annual produce unto, or permit the same to be received by, the wife and her appointees or assigns during her life for her separate use; and subject thereto upon trust for the children of the marriage as therein mentioned.

A receiving order was made against the husband in 1885, but was rescinded in February, 1886.

By a separation deed dated in September, 1886, and made between the husband and the wife, the husband covenanted that he would, during their joint lives if they should so long live separate from each other, allow the wife to receive for her own benefit the interest, dividends, and annual income of the property therein mentioned, being the property brought into the marriage settlement by the husband.

Held (dissentiente Vaughan Williams, L.J.), that the covenant in the separation deed operated as an equitable assignment of the husband's life interest; and that consequently a forfeiture had occurred.—SPEARMAN, RE, SPEARMAN v. LOWNDES, C.A.; 82 L. T. 302.

6. Voluntary settlement by young lady only just of age—Rescission—Undue influence—Fiduciary relationship—Independent advice—Power of revocation —Duty of solicitor—Costs.—Where a young person is minded to make a voluntary settlement in favour of a parent, it is not enough that he should have independent advice unless he acts on that advice: it is the duty of a solicitor independently advising an intending settlor to protect him against himself, and not merely against the personal influence of the donee in the particular transaction; and if his advice is not accepted he should decline to act further for the intending settlor.

In every voluntary settlement of this kind a power of revocation should be inserted.

Voluntary settlement of a young lady just of age set aside with costs against the relation in whose favour it was made and by whose undue influence it had been executed: trustee, being the solicitor who had drawn the settlement, disallowed his costs of the action in which the settlement was set aside. —POWELL v. POWELL, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; [1900] 1 Ch. 243; 69 L. J. Ch. 164; 82 L. T. 84.

See also Inland Revenue, 6; Married Woman, 1; Mine, 3, 4.

SHANGHAI:—

Consular court—Consular and Marriage Fees Order in Council, 1900—Land taken for public purposes—"Extension" of roads—Shanghai Land Regulation VI. of 1869—Construction.—Shanghai Regulation VI. of 1869 authorized the municipal council of that place to take the respondent's land as being required for the "extension of the lines of roads at present laid down as means of communication in the settlement." A proviso directed that no appropriation "for roads other than those already defined" shall be sanctioned or held lawful.

Held, that, on the true construction of the regulation, "extension" is not restricted to the enlargement of an existing road by adding to its length or breadth, but includes new lateral branches therefrom; and that the roads "already defined" are the roads mentioned in the whole of the preceding part of the regulation including the extensions.—SHANGHAI MUNICIPAL COUNCIL v. MCMURRAY, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 206; 69 L. J. P. C. 19; 82 L. T. 101.

SHERIFF:—

Rates—Duty of sheriff to pay—Seizure of goods of person liable to pay rates—Goods "taken in execution" —35 Geo. 3, c. 73, s. 195.—By 35 Geo. 3, c. 73, s. 195, where in a certain metropolitan parish the goods of any person liable to pay a rate by virtue of the Act shall have been "taken in execution" by a sheriff before the rate shall have been paid, the sheriff upon demand by the rate-collector is "directed and required in the first place" to pay the rate to the collector.

A sheriff seized under a fi. fa. the goods of a judgment debtor who was at the time liable to pay to the vestry as the rating authority of the parish a certain rate made in conformity with the Act. A demand was made on the sheriff by the rate-collector for the amount of the rate; but the sheriff, having subsequently received from the debtor the amount of the judgment debt, withdrew from possession without having paid the rate.

Held, that the sheriff was liable to the vestry for the rate.—ST. MARYLEBONE VESTRY v. SHERIFF OF LONDON, Q.B.D.; [1900] 1 Q. B. 111; 69 L. J. Q. B. 69.

See also Bankruptcy, 4; Landlord and Tenant, 4.

SHIP:—

1. Bill of lading—Contract of sale—Documents—Alteration of, before execution—Cash against surrender of documents—Tender of altered documents—Sufficiency of tender.—A contract for the sale of wheat to be shipped from New Orleans to Hamburg provided that payment should be net cash against surrender of documents, which were to consist of the bill of lading, certificate of inspection, and policy of insurance.

On the 3rd of September, 1898, the sellers appropriated to the sale a quantity of wheat on board a certain vessel, and on the 8th of September tendered to the purchasers the three documents, two of which were altered and one of which was unaltered.

The purchasers refused to accept and pay for the documents by reason of the erasures and alterations therein, and, on a formal tender being made on the 12th of September, they again refused to accept them.

As tendered, the bill of lading contained a marginal note reading "stored in holds 3 and 4." The figures 3 and 4 had been substituted for the figures 2 and 3, which had been erased; the certificate of inspection stated that the wheat was in holds 3 and 4; the figures "and 4" had been added after the figure 3, and the figures "2 and," which had been in the certificate before the figure 3, were struck through; and the certificate of insurance was unaltered and stated the wheat to be in holds 3 and 4, which was the fact, so that as tendered all three documents agreed and were in accordance with the facts.

The mistake arose through an error, and, having been discovered, was corrected as above described in the bill of lading and the certificate of inspection before those documents were executed. The certificate of insurance was correct from the first and was unaltered.

The ship arrived in Hamburg on the 14th of September, and on the 16th of September the documents were again tendered, together with two confirmatory documents showing that the alterations were made before the execution of the documents, and were proper alterations as agreeing with the facts.

Held, by Darling, J., that the tenders on the 8th and 12th of September were good tenders of the documents, and ought to have been accepted by the purchasers, as, upon such tenders, the purchasers were put upon inquiry and were bound to look at all the documents, and, as one of the documents was unaltered and the altered documents agreed with the unaltered one, they ought to have come to the conclusion that the altered documents were altered before execution, and were perfect documents in the sense that they absolutely agreed with the facts.—SALOMON v. NAUDSZUS, Q.B.D.; 81 L. T. 325.

2. Bill of lading—Description of goods—"Marked and numbered as in the margin"—Mistake—Bills of Lading Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 111), s. 3.—By the Bills of Lading Act, 1855, s. 3, "Every bill of lading in the hands of a consignee or indorsee for valuable consideration, representing goods to have been shipped on board a vessel, shall be conclusive evidence of such shipment as against the master or other person signing the same, notwithstanding that such goods, or some part thereof, may not have been so shipped . . ."

A bill of lading described goods as "marked and numbered as in the margin." Some of the goods shipped were marked and numbered differently from the description in the margin, but this marking and numbering did not affect or denote the substance, quality, or commercial value of the goods.

In an action for damages for short delivery, brought by the consignee against the shipowners' agents, who had signed the bill of lading,

Held, that the defendants were not prevented by the Bills of Lading Act, 1855, s. 3, from showing that there was a mistake in the marginal description, and that these goods formed part of the quantity set forth in the bill of lading, and were shipped as part of the plaintiff's consignment.

Bradley v. Dunipace, 1 H. & C. 521, distinguished.—PARSONS v. NEW ZEALAND SHIPPING CO., Q.B.D.; [1900] 1 Q. B. 714; 69 L. J. Q. B. 419; 82 L. T. 327.

3. Bill of lading—Freight—Exemptions in bill of lading—Errors in the navigation or management of the vessel—Injury caused by drainage pipe leading through cargo space—Act of United States, 13*th February,* 1893, relating to Navigation (the Harter Act), s. 3.—Bills of lading incorporating the United States Navigation Act of 1893 (the Harter Act) were given in respect of a cargo laden on board a vessel bound from a port of the United States, and by the 3rd section of that Act the owners of a vessel transporting merchandize from any United States port are not, if they have exercised diligence to make the vessel seaworthy, responsible "for damage or loss arising from faults or errors in navigation or in the management of the said vessel." During the voyage on which the cargo was being carried, sea water accumulated in the forecastle of the vessel, and the boatswain, in attempting to free a drainage pipe which led from the forecastle through part of the cargo space and thence through the side of the vessel into the sea, and was intended to carry off water from the forecastle, broke through the side of such pipe into the cargo space, and thus caused water to flow into that space and damage the cargo. The owner of the cargo sought to recover for the damage thus done by way of counterclaim in an action for balance of freight brought by the shipowners against the owner of the cargo in a county court having admiralty jurisdiction. The judge of the county court gave judgment in favour of the defendant on the counterclaim.

Held, on appeal, that the appeal must be allowed and the counterclaim dismissed, as the damage sought to be recovered by the defendant resulted from an error in the management of the vessel within the Harter Act and the exemptions provided for by the bills of lading.

The Glenochil, [1896] P. 10, 44 W. R. Dig. 148, followed.—"RODNEY." THE, P.D. & Ad.D. 527; [1900] P. 112; 69 L. J. P. 9; 82 L. T. 27.

4. Bottomry—Absence of maritime interest—Bond payable on vessel putting into port short of port of destination—Payment of bottomry loan by cheque or approved draft—Insurance of bond.—A bottomry instrument may be valid though it does not stipulate for maritime interest, and notwithstanding that it be made payable if the vessel on which the money is lent on bottomry "shall, in the course of the voyage on which she is now being despatched, go into any port of refuge to repair there."

The Cecilie, 4 P. D. 210, 27 W. R. 198, followed. —"HAABET," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 223; [1899] P. 295; 81 L. T. 463.

5. Cargo — Coals — Reshipment — Unfitness.— A vessel carrying a cargo of coals had to put into a port of refuge for repairs, which necessitated the discharge of the cargo. When the repairs were completed the master refused to reship the cargo of coals as being in an unfit state for reshipment, owing to danger of spontaneous combustion.

In an action by the owners of the cargo against the shipowners for breach of contract,

Held, that the cargo being unfit for reshipment at the date of bringing the action, and there being no evidence to show how long a time must elapse before the cargo would be in a fit condition, the master was justified in refusing to reship it.

Held, also, that the time which would be occupied in rendering the cargo fit, and the cost of so doing were elements to be taken into consideration by the master at the time when he had to make up his mind to carry the cargo or not.—"SAVONA," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 69 L. J. P. 95.

6. Cargo—Contract—Sale of wheat for shipment in United States—"Clearance not later than May 31"—Certificate of clearance given before completion of loading—Meaning of "clearance."—Wheat was sold for shipment at Galveston, in the United States, by a specified vessel for Havre, "clearance" to be not later than the 31st of May.

A certificate of clearance was obtained on the 28th of May. Part only of the cargo was then on board, the rest being alongside ready to be loaded. The loading was not completed until the 2nd of June, when the vessel sailed.

By the statute of the United States the master must furnish a manifest of the cargo "on board, whereupon the collector shall grant a clearance." It was, however, customary to grant a clearance before the completion of loading, and such a clearance was valid and effective for all purposes, and entitled the vessel to sail immediately.

Held, that the vessel had obtained a "clearance" within the meaning of the contract, when the certificate of clearance was granted.—THALMANN v. TEXAS STAR FLOUR MILLS, C.A.; 82 L. T. 833.

7. Charter-party—Advance freight—Destruction of part of cargo before sailing—Liability to pay advance freight on cargo destroyed.—By a charter-party it was provided that the charterers should load a full and complete cargo at a certain rate of freight per ton on the quantity to be delivered to the consignees, the freight to be due and paid "two-thirds in cash three days after sailing, ship lost or not lost, and the balance on unloading and right delivery of the cargo." A portion of the cargo which had been loaded on board was destroyed by fire—a peril mutually excepted in the charter-party—before the sailing of the ship. Three days after sailing the shipowners claimed two-thirds advance freight on the whole cargo, including the part destroyed.

Held, that the shipowners were not entitled to the advance freight on the part of the cargo which had been destroyed.

Judgment of Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J. (47 W. R. 365, [1899] 1 Q. B. 193), affirmed.—WEIR v. GIRVIN, C.A., 179; [1900] 1 Q. B. 45; 69 L. J. Q. B; 168; 81 L. T. 687.

8. Charter-party—Agreement to load cargo "say about 2,800 tons"—Obligation to load more than 2,800 tons.—The charterer of a ship the capacity of which was 2,880 tons agreed by a contract of charter-party to load "a cargo of ore, say about 2,800 tons." He loaded 2,840 tons.

Held, that he had performed his contract.

Morris v. Levison, 24 W. R. 517, 1 C. P. D. 155, distinguished.—MILLER v. BORNER, Q.B.D., 588; [1900] 1 Q. B. 691; 69 L. J. Q. B. 429; 82 L. T. 258.

9. Charter-party—Ballast—Obligation of shipowner to supply.—By a charter-party which did not involve a demise or parting with possession of the ship by the shipowners, she was, consideration of a certain sum per month, to be placed at the disposal of the charterers to be employed by them in the conveyance of lawful merchandize and (or) passengers between certain ports, and it was stated that she was let for the sole use and benefit of the charterers for two or three round voyages at charterers' option commencing not later than a day specified, by which day she was to be placed with "clear holds" at the disposal of the charterers at the port of New York, they having the "whole reach or burthen" of the vessel, proper and sufficient room being reserved to the owners for the officers, crew, tackle, apparel, furniture, provisions and stores, and the vessel was not to be required to load more than she could reasonably stow and carry over and above her tackle, provisions, stores, and fuel.

Held, by the Court of Appeal (A. L. Smith and Collins L.JJ., Vaughan Williams, L.J., doubting) that the terms of the charter-party did not rebut the ordinary implication in the case of a charter-party by which the obligation of supplying any ballast that may be necessary for the safe navigation of the ship rests upon the shipowner.—WEIR v. UNION STEAMSHIP CO., C.A.; [1900] 1 Q. B. 28; 69 L. J. Q. B. 193; 81 L. T. 553.

10. Ship — Charter-party — Bill of Lading — Excepted port—Port of Manchester—Meaning—Immaterial addition.—A contract for the sale of a cargo of wheat per Vanduara provided that the vessel should discharge at any safe port in the United Kingdom. The vessel was chartered by the sellers to discharge at any safe port in the United Kingdom (Manchester excepted), and the bill of lading was in the same terms.

By the Manchester Ship Canal Act, 1885, and by the Customs regulations, the port of Manchester included the whole of the ship canal, but in the commercial meaning it included only Manchester and the waters adjacent thereto.

In the wider meaning Manchester was, but in the more limited meaning was not, a safe port for the Vanduara.

Held (affirming the decision of the Queen's Bench Division), that Manchester within the meaning of the charter-party and bill of lading was not a safe port for the Vanduara, and that therefore the addition of the words "Manchester excepted" was not a material alteration of the contract of sale so as to release the buyers.—GOODBODY AND BALFOUR'S ARBITRATION, RE, C.A.; 82 L. T. 484.

11. Charter-party—Cargo in frozen condition—Decrease of amount that could be stowed—Full and complete cargo.—In an action against charterers for not loading a full and complete cargo of wet woodpulp, it appeared from the charter-party that the contemplated loading was to be in midwinter, at which time, as the evidence showed, wet woodpulp arrived at the port of loading, and was loaded, in a frozen condition. In this condition it would not stow so closely as when unfrozen, and consequently a lesser amount could be loaded than if the pulp had been in a normal condition.

Held, that the charterers in loading as much wet woodpulp in a frozen condition as the ship would carry had performed their obligation to load a full and complete cargo.

Decision of the Court of Appeal ([1899] 2 Q. B. 364) affirmed.—ISIS STEAMSHIP CO. v. BAHR, H.L.; [1900] A. C. 340; 69 L. J. Q. B. 660; 82 L. T. 571.

12. Charter-party—"Cargo to be brought to and taken from alongside steamer"—"Any custom of the port to the contrary notwithstanding"—Exclusion of custom.—By a charter-party a ship was to proceed to the Surrey Commercial Docks and there deliver a cargo of timber, "the cargo to be brought to and taken from alongside at charterer's risk and expense, any custom of the port to the contrary notwithstanding."

A custom of the port of London with regard to timber ships required the shipowner to place the timber either into barges or on to the quay.

Held, that the custom of the port was excluded by the charter-party, and that the charterers were bound to pay the expense of taking the cargo from the ship's rail to the barges or on to the quay.—BRENDA STEAMSHIP CO. v. GREEN, C.A., 321; [1900] 1 Q. B. 518; 69 L. J. Q. B. 445; 82 L. T. 66.

13. Charter-party—"Cargo of steam coal as ordered by charterers"—Colliery guarantee—Strike clause—Colliery on strike.—It was agreed by a charter-party that the ship should sail to Cardiff, and proceed to such loading berth as the freighters might name, and should there load "a cargo of steam coal as ordered by the charterers," which they bound themselves to ship, except in the event of (inter alia) strike of shippers' pitmen; the vessel to be loaded as customary, "but subject in all respects to the colliery guarantee, in —— colliery working days as may be arranged, any claim for demurrage in loading to be settled with colliery direct." The charterers, for the purpose of fulfilling their obligation under the charter-party, contracted with a colliery for a cargo of steam coal, subject to the usual exception as to strikes. Subsequently a strike of pitmen took place, which extended to 85 per cent. of the South Wales collieries, including the before-mentioned colliery. The charterers, in performance of their obligation under the charter-party, tendered to the shipowners the guarantee of that colliery, by which the colliery proprietors undertook to load the ship in twenty days after she should be ready to receive cargo, subject to the usual exception as to strikes. The shipowners objected to the colliery guarantee, as not being in accordance with the charter, on the ground that the colliery was then on strike. The strike still continuing for three months after the arrival of the ship at Cardiff, her loading was in consequence delayed for that period. Steam coal might have been obtained from other collieries in the district which remained working during the strike, although at a very high price.

In an action by the shipowners against the charterers for damages for the detention of the ship.

Held, that the shipowners were not entitled to object to the colliery guarantee as not being in accordance with the charter-party, and that the action was not maintainable.—DOBELL v. GREEN, C.A.; [1900] 1 Q. B. 526; 69 L. J. Q. B. 454; 82 L. T. 314.

14. Charter-party—Colliery guarantee—Incorporation with charter-party — Demurrage — "Colliery working days"—Contract—Time for delivery—Time of essence of contract—Option to cancel.—By a charter-party the charterers agreed to load a ship in twelve working days, "demurrage as per colliery guarantee." The colliery guarantee contained clauses excepting from the lay days, Sundays, holidays, and time lost through strikes, and providing that all holidays and full-day stoppages should be deemed to commence at 5 p.m. on the working day preceding, and to end at 7 a.m. on the working day following, such holiday or stoppage. In case the vessel, whether on demurrage or not, should be able to complete loading by 5 p.m. on the day preceding any Sunday, holiday, or other stoppage of work, time should not count either for loading or demurrage until 7 a.m. on the day on which work should be resumed. Demurrage was to be at the rate of £13, payable per colliery working day.

After the expiration of the lay days a strike occurred at the colliery which prevented the charterers from loading the vessel. In an action for demurrage, Held, that time lost through a strike was not to be included in the term "colliery working days," and that the charterers were not liable for demurrage during such time.

Judgment of Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J. (79 L. T. Rep. 487), reversed.

A colliery company agreed by contract in writing to deliver 25,000 tons of coal in equal monthly instalments of from 1,000 to 2,000 tons, to be shipped into collier vessels, the time for loading as per colliery guarantee; provided that if from stoppage of their works through strikes the colliery company should be prevented from delivering the full quantities, the purchasers should have the option of cancelling the contract so far as related to coals to be delivered during the stoppage. The colliery guarantee provided that the vessel in this case should be loaded in sixteen days, demurrage to be at the rate of £13 per day. The sixteen days expired on the 31st of March, 1898; on the 9th of April a strike occurred at the colliery and on the 24th of May the colliery company wrote to say they could not load the vessel.

Held, that there had been a breach of contract on the 24th of May and not before; and that the purchasers were not bound to exercise their option for the benefit of the vendors.

Judgment of Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J. (79 L. T. Rep. 487), affirmed.—SAXON STEAMSHIP CO. v. UNION STEAMSHIP CO., UNION STEAMSHIP CO. v. DAVIS, C.A.; 81 L. T. 246.

15. Charter-party—Despatch money—Demurrage—Option to average days for loading and discharge.—A charter-party provided that the charterers were to have "the option of averaging days for loading and discharging, in order to avoid demurrage . . . despatch money at the rate of ten shillings per hour to be paid for any time saved in loading or discharging, to be settled in loading or discharging ports respectively."

The vessel was loaded within the time allowed, and the charterers claimed despatch money for the days saved, and the amount so due to them was indorsed on the charter-party. At the port of discharge the lay days were exceeded, and the shipowners claimed in respect thereof demurrage.

Held, that the charterers could not exercise their option of averaging days of loading and discharge, because the question of how the time saved at port of loading was to be treated must be considered as closed when the vessel sailed from port, and therefore the shipowners were entitled to claim in full demurrage.—OAKVILLE STEAMSHIP CO. v. HOLMES, Q.B.D., 152.

16. Charter-party — Demurrage — Discharge of cargo "with all despatch as customary"—Contract by charterers with railway company for supply of trucks for discharge—Insufficient supply of trucks by company—Liability of charterers.—A charter-party provided that "the ship is to be discharged with all despatch as customary."

The custom and practice of the port of discharge was to discharge the cargo into railway trucks, and to procure such trucks from one railway company.

For the discharge of the cargo the consignees, in accordance with the custom, had contracted with a railway company for the supply of trucks to receive the cargo.

A delay in the discharge of the ship was caused by the railway company not providing a sufficient supply of railway trucks alongside to receive the cargo; but the consignees had not been guilty of any personal neglect, and had done their best to get the customary appliances for the discharge of the ship, and had used such appliances, when obtained, with proper despatch.

In an action by the shipowners against the consignees for demurrage or damages for the detention of the vessel,

Held, that the consignees, having done their best to get the customary appliances for the discharge of the ship, and having used the same with proper despatch, had discharged the ship "with all despatch as customary," and were therefore not liable for the delay of the vessel caused by the insufficient supply of trucks.—LYLE SHIPPING CO. v. CARDIFF CORPORATION, Q.B.D.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 93; 81 L. T. 642.

17. Charter-party — Demurrage — Exceptions — Delay caused by collision, but not owing to shipowner's default.—By a charter-party made on the 12th of January, 1899, it was agreed that the vessel should proceed to Poti, and there load a a cargo for Baltimore or Philadelphia. By clause 4 of the charter-party (amongst other exceptions), "all unavoidable accidents or incidents and all causes beyond the control of the shippers, consignees, or the charterers, which might prevent or delay the delivery of the ore at port of shipment, and (or) the loading or discharging during the said voyage were always mutually excepted." The cargo was to be loaded in ten running days, Sundays and holidays excepted, and all hours on demurrage over and above the said days were to be paid for at a certain rate, charterers having the option of averaging time for loading and discharging. Subject to the exceptions in clause 4, the charterers guaranteed cargo and quay-berth ready at Poti, counting from the time the steamer had received free pratique and written notice had been given to charterer's agent to that effect.

By noon on the 11th of February, 1899, the vessel had arrived at Poti and had received free pratique, and notice to that effect had been given to the charterer's agent. Owing to the number of steamers waiting to be loaded, a quay-berth was not ready for her. The lay-days began to count at noon on the 11th of February, and the ten running days expired on the 24th of February. At this date a quay-berth had not been provided for the vessel, and while lying at anchor in the Poti roads she sustained serious damage by collision, in consequence of which she was obliged, on the 7th of March, to proceed to Constantinople to repair. If it had not been for the collision she would have obtained a quay-berth by the 8th of March, and would have completed her loading by the 16th of March. On the 19th of April she again arrived at Poti, but again, owing to the number of steamers, was unable to obtain a qu berth until the 2nd of June. The loading completed, and the vessel left Poti on the 10th June, and arrived at Philadelphia on the 14th July, and discharged her cargo in two days.

Held, that demurrage was enforceable ag the charterers from the 19th of April to the of June, and that they were not protected by exceptions in clause 4. There having been default on the part of the owners, the period demurrage was resumed upon the return of t vessel to Poti.—TYNE SHIPOWNING CO. v. LEAD Q.B.D., 590; [1900] 2 Q. B. 12; 69 L. J. Q 353.

18. Charter-party—Demurrage—Time for loadi —"Thirty-six running hours on terms of usual collier guarantee."—By a charter-party between the plaintiffs and defendants it was provided that th plaintiffs' vessel should proceed to Grimsby and there load a cargo of coal in the usual manner according to the custom of the place, from such colliery as the charterers might direct; and that the loading time should be thirty-six running hours "on terms of usual colliery guarantee."

The vessel arrived at the usual loading dock at Grimsby, and was ready to load on the 19th of July. Owing to the coal strike in South Wales a very large number of vessels were waiting to load coal at Grimsby, and the plaintiffs' vessel was unable to get a berth at a coal tip until the 29th of July, when she was loaded within thirty-six hours. The coal was loaded from collieries at which no "colliery guarantee" was in use.

Held, that the defendants were not liable to pay demurrage, because there was a "usual colliery guarantee" in use at Grimsby, by which the time for loading did not commence until the vessel came under a coal tip.—SHAMROCK STEAMSHIP CO. v. STOREY, C.A.; 81 L. T. 413.

19. Charter-party—Demurrage—"Working days of twenty-four hours."—The appellant shipowners agreed by charter-party to provide the respondents with ships for the carriage of iron ore during a period of twelve months. The charter-party contained a clause as follows: "Charterers or their agents to be allowed 350 tons per working day of twenty-four hours, weather permitting (Sundays and holidays excepted), for loading and discharging . . . to count from 6 a.m. of the day following the day when steamer is reported, unless she be reported before noon. . . . Steamer to work at night if required, also on Sundays and holidays, such time not to count as lay days unless used."

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that the charterers were entitled to twenty-four hours in which to load or discharge each 350 tons. —FOREST STEAMSHIP CO. v. IBERIAN IRON ORE CO., H.L.; 81 L. T. 563.

20. Charter-party—Salvage services—Division of sum awarded for—Construction of charter-party.—A charter-party provided (clause 2) that the shipowner should maintain the chartered vessel (the steamship Pocklington) in a thoroughly efficient state for and during the service. Clause 6 provided that if any damage prevented the working of the vessel for more than twenty-four hours the hire should cease. By clause 13 the vessel had liberty to tow and assist vessels in distress, and to deviate for the purpose of saving life or property. By clause 20 all derelicts and salvage were to be "for owners' and charterers' equal benefit." The shipowners obtained an award in the Admiralty Court for a large sum for salvage services rendered by The Pocklington in towing another vessel in distress.

Through performing those services the hull, engines, and towing gear of The Pocklington were strained and damaged, and she incurred expenses and losses attributable to the salvage services in respect of repairs, the costs of gear used in towage, loss of hire for several days whilst she was under repair, and other matters. In an action by the charterers against the shipowners to recover a moiety of the salvage earned by The Pocklington,

Held, that the defendants were entitled to deduct from the amount awarded by the Admiralty Court all such losses and expenses incurred by them (including loss of hire) as were attributable to the salvage services, and that the balance only ought to be divided between themselves and the plaintiffs. —BOOKER & Co. v. POCKLINGTON STEAMSHIP Co., Q.B.D.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 690; 69 L. J. Q. B. 10; 81 L. T. 524.

21. Collision—Anchor lights—"At or near the stern"—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, Article 11.—The decision of the Court of Appeal in The Gannet, [1899] P. 230, 47 W. R. Dig. 184, reversed on the facts so far as The Gannet was held to be in fault.—"GANNET," THE, H.L.; [1900] A. C. 234; 69 L. J. P. 49; 82 L. T. 329.

22. Collision—Anchor lights—Vessel exceeding 150 feet in length—"In the forward part of the vessel"—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897, art. 11.—By article 11 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897, a vessel of 150 feet or upwards, when at anchor, shall carry "in the forward part of the vessel" a white light, and another at or near the stern.

A vessel, 313 feet in length, at anchor, carried her forward light in the fore-rigging abreast of the foremast, 72 feet from the stem.

Held, that the light was carried "in the forward part of the vessel" within the meaning of article 11.

Decision of Bucknill, J. (ante, p. 431, [1900] P. 43), on this point dissented from.—"PHILADELPHIAN," THE, C.A., 514; 69 L. J. P. 101; 82 L. T. 601.

23. Collision—Damage—Nominal and real damage. —The wrongful deprivation of another of his property is ground for substantial damage, and it is immaterial that he has provided himself with what supplies the place of the detained or injured article.

The appellants' steamboat wrongfully ran down the respondents' lightship Comet, whereupon the owners provided a substitute which was kept for the purpose.

Held, that this circumstance was not a matter which lessened the wrongdoer's liability.

Decision of the Court of Appeal ([1899] P. 127, 47 W. R. Dig. 183) affirmed.

The City of Peking, 39 W. R. 177, 15 App. Cas. 438, explained and distinguished.—"MEDIANA," THE, H.L., 398; [1900] A. C. 113; 69 L. J. P. 35; 82 L. T. 95.

24. Collision — Damage — Vessel turning in the Thames not a crossing vessel—Bye-laws for the Navigation of the River Thames, 1898, art. 48.—A steam vessel partly athwart the River Thames, and not in motion through the water or moving ahead or astern over the ground, but slowly swinging to her anchor in the act of turning round, is not a vessel crossing the river within the 48th article of the Thames Bye-laws, 1898, which provides that steam vessels and steam launches crossing from one side of the river towards the other side shall keep out of the way of vessels navigating up and down the river.—"JOHN HOLLWAY," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 416; [1900] P. 37; 69 L. J. P. 15; 81 L. T. 726.

25. Collision caused by running foul of sunken barge —Damage—Liability of owner of wreck, where not abandoned, for negligence of independent contractor employed by him to raise wreck.—The owner of a vessel sunk in the fairway of a navigable river, who has not abandoned the wreck, but has agreed to have her raised by an independent contractor, is answerable in damages for the loss sustained by the owners of another vessel running foul of the wreck without negligence, in consequence of the wreck being improperly lighted.

Decision of Barnes, J. (47 W. R. 398), affirmed.—"SNARK," THE, C.A., 279; [1900] P. 105; 69 L. J. P. 41; 82 L. T. 42.

26. Collision—Fog—Duty to keep course and speed —Whistle—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, arts. 16 and 21.—The steamship C., while proceeding at the rate of about three knots an hour in a thick fog, heard the whistle of another steamship about four points on the port bow. The C. kept her course and speed, and the whistle of the other vessel was heard to be apparently broadening. Shortly afterwards the other steamship was seen close to and bearing five or six points on the port bow of The C. The engines of The C. were then at once stopped and reversed, but a collision occurred.

Held, that The C. was in part to blame for the collision for having failed, in accordance with art. 16 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions, when the whistle of the other steamship was first heard, to stop her engines and afterwards to navigate with caution until all danger of collision was over, and was not justified in continuing her speed under article 21. Although article 21 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea directing a ship to keep her course and speed is a general rule, it is qualified by article 16, and hence, where two steamships in a fog are crossing, each ought to stop her engines if she hears the whistle of the other forward of her beam.—"CATHAY," THE (No. 1), P.D. & Ad.D.; 81 L. T. 391.

27. Collision—Fog—Failure to stop and ascertain position of approaching vessel—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, art. 16.—It is the duty of a steam vessel in a fog, under article 16, on first hearing forward of her beam another vessel's fog signal, to stop her engines and to keep them stopped until, by hearing further signals, she ascertains the position of the other vessel.—"RONDANE," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 82 L. T. 828.

28. Collision—Lights—Breach of article 5 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 419, sub-section 4.—Where a steamer collided with a sailing ship which after sunset was showing no lights, the court held that, although there was some look-out on the steamer, nevertheless the absence of the lights could not in the circumstances have possibly caused or contributed to the collision; and that, therefore, the sailing ship was not to be deemed to be in fault under section 419, sub-section 4, of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.—"ARGO," THE, C.A.; 82 L. T. 602.

29. Collision—Tug and tow—Judgment by default against tow—Proceeds of sale of tow paid into court—Plaintiffs' vessel and tug held both to blame—Judgment against tug for half damage—Measure of tug's liability—Right of owners of tug to have credit for sum paid into court.—In an action against a tug and a tow for damage by collision, the owners of the tow allowed judgment to go by default, and the proceeds of the sale of the tow—viz., £855—were paid into court. The plaintiffs' vessel and the tug were found both to blame, and judgment was given against the tug for half the damage. The total damage sustained by the plaintiffs' vessel was £4,146.

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to take the £855 out of court, and that the owners of the tug were liable to pay the plaintiffs £2,073 without having any credit given to them for the £855.—"MORGENGRY," THE, "BLACKCOCK," THE, C.A., 121; [1900] P. 1; 69 L. J. P. 3; 81 L. T. 417.

30. Collision—Tug and tow and a ship of war—Duty of single vessels to avoid crossing course of large fleet—Exemption of her Majesty's ships from Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea—Order in Council of June, 1899, applying collision regulations to her Majesty's ships—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, arts. 19, 21, 27, 29—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 419, 741.—The statutory sanction imposed by section 419 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, for a breach of the collision regulations has no application to a merchant trader which is crossing the course of one of her Majesty's ships from starboard to port, because the obligations imposed by articles 21 and 27 are only applicable to ships both of which are bound to obey the regulations.

Under ordinary circumstances a tug and tow are not justified in crossing ahead of a fleet of warships which has the tug and tow on the starboard hand, and the tug and tow ought not to keep their course and speed under article 21 of the collision regulations.

A vessel which neglects, in disregard of articles 27 and 29 of the collision regulations, to depart from any of the collision regulations is not to be deemed in fault under section 419 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.—"SANSPAREIL," THE, C.A.; 82 L. T. 606.

31. Docks—Dock-master, duty of—Requisition to remove vessel—Obstruction—West India Dock Act (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. lii), s. 101.—Section 101 of the West India Dock Act provides that every master or other person in charge or command of a vessel, having placed such vessel within 200 yards of the entrance to any of the docks to which the Act applies, "who shall not immediately remove such vessel from within such distance on being therewith required by the dock-master," shall incur a penalty "for every hour that such obstruction shall remain after such requisition."

Held, that a notice or requisition, signed by a dock-master, with the name of the vessel left blank, and handed by him to his deputy, with instructions to serve it upon any master who should place his vessel within the proscribed limit, and which was afterwards served by such deputy upon the respondent, was a sufficient requisition within the Act.

Held, also, that it is not necessary that the vessel should be proved to have actually obstructed navigation to constitute the offence.—DUCKHAM v. GIBBS, Q.B.D., 239; [1900] 1 Q. B. 394; 69 L. J. Q. B. 127.

32. General average—Depreciation in cargo—Maintenance of cattlemen—Fodder for cattle.—The plaintiffs shipped in the defendants' steamship a cargo of live cattle for carriage from Buenos Ayres to the United Kingdom under a charter-party, which provided that average (if any) should be adjusted according to the York-Antwerp Rules; and that the vessel should on no account call at Brazilian or Continental ports before landing her live stock. The reason of this proviso was that by the law of the United Kingdom live cattle could not be landed in the United Kingdom if the ship carrying them had touched at the ports specified. In the course of the voyage the vessel sprang a leak, and it became necessary for the safety of all concerned to put into Bahia, a Brazilian port, for repairs. Consequently the cattle could not be landed in the United Kingdom, and were sold in Antwerp, realising less than they would have done if they had been sold in the United Kingdom.

Held, that the loss sustained by the owners of the cattle was the subject of general average contribution.

During the execution of the repairs to the vessel at Bahia the owners of the cattle incurred expense in the maintenance of the cattlemen in charge of cattle on the ship and in the supply of fodder and water to the cattle.

Held, that these expenses were not recoverable in general average either under the York-Antwerp Rules, 1890, or at common law.—ANGLO-ARGENTINE LIVE STOCK AGENCY v. TEMPERLEY STEAMSHIP CO., Q.B.D., 64; [1899] 2 Q. B. 403; 69 L. J. Q. B. 900; 81 L. T. 296.

33. General average—Loss of freight.—The plaintiffs' ship was chartered to carry coal from Cardiff to Esquimalt. In the course of the voyage the coal heated to such an extent that, if the voyage to Esquimalt had been continued, the ship and cargo would have been burnt. The captain, for the safety of ship, freight, and cargo, put into Buenos Ayres and discharged the coal. It was found to be in such a condition that it could not be reloaded and carried to Esquimalt. The coal was therefore condemned and sold at Buenos Ayres, and the voyage to Esquimalt was abandoned, and the chartered freight was lost.

Held, that the freight had not been lost in such circumstances as to make the loss the subject of general average contribution.—IREDALE v. CHINA TRADERS' INSURANCE CO., Q.B.D., 48; [1899] 2 Q. B. 356; 69 L. J. Q. B. 783; 81 L. T. 231.

34. Registration—General lighthouse fund—Fees—Merchant Shipping (Mercantile Marine Fund) Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 44), s. 3, Schedule I.—The Merchant Shipping (Mercantile Marine Fund) Act, 1898, Schedule I., gives a scale of the fees which are to be paid on the transfer of British ships "according to the gross tonnage represented by the ships or shares of ships transferred." Fifty-eight shares in a ship, each share being one-sixty-fourth, were transferred to a firm by twenty different bills of sale.

Held, that the firm was liable to pay a separate fee, according to the scale, on the tonnage represented by the shares comprised in each bill of sale, and not merely to pay one fee upon the total of the tonnage represented by all the shares transferred.—HARROWING STEAMSHIP CO. v. TOOHEY, Q.B.D.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 28; 69 L. J. Q. B. 447; 82 L. T. 677.

See also Admiralty, 1-7; Conflict of Laws, 1; Conspiracy; Inland Revenue, 17; Insurance, 4-12; Master and Servant, 15, 16; Mortgage, 14.

SHOP:—

"Public-house or refreshment-house"—Hotel—"Domestic servant"—Page-boy—Shop Hours Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 62), ss. 9, 10.—Any place of business having a public-house licence is a shop within the meaning of the Shop Hours Act, 1892, notwithstanding that it is an establishment which would ordinarily be termed a hotel, and not a public-house.

A young person employed as a page and messenger boy in such an establishment held not to be wholly employed as a domestic servant within the meaning of the same statute.—SAVOY HOTEL CO. v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, Q.B.D., 351; [1900] 1 Q. B. 665; 69 L. J. Q. B. 274; 82 L. T. 56.

SOLICITOR:—

1. Charging order in favour of solicitor—Application to discharge—Limit of time for application—Jurisdiction to make charging order—Solicitors Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 127), s. 28—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 104.—Where property has been "recovered or preserved" by an order of the Court of Appeal, the court or judge of first instance which has seisin of that order when it comes down to be enforced is equally entitled with the Court of Appeal under section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860, to make a charging order in favour of a solicitor on the property so recovered or preserved.

An application to discharge a charging order must be made with promptitude, even although no steps have been taken to enforce the charging order.

Semble, a judge sitting in bankruptcy is entitled in that capacity to make a charging order under section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860.

The interpretation put upon In re Suffield and Watts, 36 W. R. 584, 20 Q. B. D. 693, by Vaughan Williams, J., in In re Wood. Ex parte Fanshawe, [1897] 1 Q. B. 314, 45 W. R. Dig. 155, criticised and questioned. — DEAKIN, RE, DANIELL, EX PARTE, C.A., 678; 69 L. J. Q. B. 725; 82 L. T. 776.

2. Charging order—Costs—Property recovered or preserved—Solicitors Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 127), s. 28.—A testator devised his estate to his wife for life, and after her death to his two daughters, of whom one was legitimate and the other illegitimate. The daughters having opposed probate of the will, an action was commenced by the executor, in which the will was upheld.

Held, that the solicitor of the executor was entitled to a charging order for his costs on the property devised, as being property preserved though his instrumentality.—TWEED, EX PARTE, C.A., 4; [1899] 2 Q. B. 167; 69 L. J. Q. B. 794; 81 L. T. 1.

3. Costs—Solicitor employed at a fixed salary—Solicitors Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 28), ss. 4, 5.—A public body employed a solicitor to do their legal and other work at a fixed annual salary. The costs of the public body in legal proceedings to which they were a party having been ordered to be paid to them by the other party to the proceedings,

Held, that they were entitled to charge, as part of such costs, sums in respect of the services of their solicitor, provided that such sums did not exceed an undue proportion of the solicitor's salary, having regard to the work done.—HENDERSON v. MERTHYR TYDFIL COUNCIL, Q.B.D., 332; [1900] 1 Q. B. 434; 69 L. J. Q. B. 335.

4. Costs—Taxation—Common order—Suppression of material facts—Agreement to refer.—An agreement was made to pay reasonable and proper costs, and a bill of costs was delivered. The only real question was whether the negotiation fee was properly chargeable. It was agreed to refer the question to the Council of the Law Society, and a case was submitted to the respondents for approval. The respondents said they would have altered the case by stating that no negotiation in fact took place, and refused to proceed with the reference, and obtained the common order to tax. For the applicants it was said that an order of course would not have been made if the agreement to refer had been disclosed. The respondents said that only a special agreement going to the whole bill required to be mentioned, not an agreement as to one item, even if such an agreement was in fact concluded.

Held, that the test was that stated in In re Gedye, 15 Beav. 254, at p. 257: Was the matter omitted of sufficient moment and importance to require grave consideration or discussion? Only matters of real moment and importance require to be mentioned, and the fact that at one time the parties intended to refer the question to the Law Society was not such a matter.—COLLYER-BRISTOW, RE, FLETCHER, EX PARTE, Ch.D. North, J.; 81 L. T. 110.

5. Costs—Taxation—Consolidated salvage suits—Country solicitor—Attendance at trial in London.—In a consolidated salvage suit the two sets of plaintiffs were at issue at the trial as to the merits of the services performed by them respectively, and the judge at the trial directed that the costs of two counsel should be allowed to both sets of plaintiffs. The district registrar, upon taxation, disallowed the costs of the attendance at the trial in London of the country solicitor to that set of plaintiffs who had not had the conduct of the consolidated suit. Those plaintiffs appealed.

Held, that inasmuch as the judge at the trial had considered it reasonably necessary for the elucidation of the true state of the facts that both sets of plaintiffs should be represented by two counsel, it was also reasonably necessary that the country solicitor should be in attendance at the trial, and he ought to be allowed the costs of attendance.—"METROPOLIS," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 81 L. T. 236.

6. Costs—Taxation—Pauper client—Taxation of costs in House of Lords—Liability to costs as between solicitor and pauper client—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 16, rr. 22-31.—Where a solicitor had been retained by, and acted for, a successful pauper appellant (since deceased) in the House of Lords, but in accordance with the practice in the House of Lords as laid down in Johnson v. Lindsay, [1892] A. C. 110, the respondent in the House of Lords was not liable for party and party costs,

Held, on an application by the solicitor against the estate of his deceased client for taxation of the costs of the appeal to the House of Lords—that the evidence showed that the bargain between the parties was that the solicitor should charge no costs other than out-of-pocket costs, and consequently that that was all the solicitor was entitled to.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (47 W. R. 330, [1899] 1 Ch. 853), reversed on the facts.—RAPHAEL, RE, SALOMON, EX PARTE, C.A.; 81 L. T. 479.

7. Costs—Taxation—Sale by auction in lots—One title—Different purchasers—"Transaction"—Scale charge—Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 44)—Construction of General Order, rr. 1, 7, 8.—Where real estate is ordered to be sold and is sold by auction in separate lots to different purchasers for prices under £100, with one title common to all the lots, the solicitor engaged to carry out the sale is, under rule 8 of Schedule I. (Part I.) of the General Order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, entitled to the remuneration of a minimum fee of £3 for deducing title and perusing and completing the conveyance in respect of each sale of a lot, each such sale being a "transaction" within the meaning of the rule.—THOMAS, RE, EVANS v. GRIFFITHS, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 299;

[1900] 1 Ch. 454; 69 L. J. Ch. 219; 82 L. T. 105.

8. Costs—Taxation—Shorthand notes of evidence—Patent action.—On the trial of a patent action it was agreed in court, with the sanction of the judge, that a shorthand note should be taken of the evidence and used at the trial as the authentic record of the evidence, the expense being shared equally between the parties in the first instance.

Held, that the solicitor of the defendant company was entitled to be allowed on taxation as against his client the expenses of the shorthand note, which the solicitor had paid.

In re Blyth & Fanshawe, 31 W. R. 283, 10 Q. B. D. 207, discussed.—OSMOND v. MUTUAL CYCLE MANUFACTURING AND SUPPLY CO., C.A., 125; [1899] 2 Q. B. 488; 81 L. T. 254.

9. Costs—Taxation—Translations made in office.—Certain letters and legal documents necessary to the conduct of an administration action were translated into English from French by competent clerks in a solicitor's office. On the taxation of the bill of costs, the taxing-master disallowed the the charges for translation.

Held, that the taxing-master must allow reasonable costs for the translation of such documents as had been used and entered as read in the orders of the court.—BOWERS, RE, STRATHMORE (EARL) v. VANE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 604; [1900] 2 Ch. 251; 69 L. J. Ch. 544; 82 L. T. 673.

10. Costs — Taxation — Trustee — Application by cestui que trust—Twelve months after payment—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), ss. 39, 41.—The power of the court to make an order for taxation of a trustee's bill of costs under section 39 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, is purely discretionary, and is not controlled by section 41. Such a bill may therefore be ordered to be taxed though paid more than twelve calendar months before the application by the cestui que trust.—WELLBORNE, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 375; [1900] 1 Ch. 857; 69 L. J. Ch. 462; 82 L. T. 375.

11. Married woman—Confidential relation—Benefit to solicitor's son—Independent advice—Confirmation.—A person who enters into a transaction which has the effect of benefiting the solicitor employed or members of his family cannot be bound by such transaction unless he or she has had independent advice.

By a deed executed in 1890 property was settled on trusts in favour of a husband for life, then for his wife for life, then as the husband and wife should jointly appoint, and, in default of such joint appointment, as the survivor should appoint, with an ultimate remainder as to one moiety for one of the trustees of the deed, and as to the other moiety for the son of another trustee.

In 1891, by a subsequent deed, the wife's life interest was cut down to an interest during widowhood, and the funds were settled to go on trust as the husband alone should appoint, and in default (excluding the power of appointment in the wife if she survived her husband) upon the trusts of the deed of 1890.

By a third deed in 1894 (made after the death of the husband, who never exercised his power of appointment) the wife's life interest was restored to her, and in all other respects the deed of 1891 was confirmed.

All three deeds were prepared by the solicitor of the husband, who was one of the trustees of the deed of 1890, and whose son benefited under that deed. He explained the effect of the deeds to the wife, but she had no independent advice, and it was never pointed out to her, either by the solicitor or by anyone else, that she ought to have independent advice.

Held, that, under the circumstances, the rule of law laid down in Huguenin v. Baseley, 14 Ves. 273, applied, and the transaction must be set aside.

Decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. (ante, p. 26, [1899] 2 Ch. 578), reversed.—BARRON v. WILLIS, C.A., 579; [1900] 2 Ch. 121; 69 L. J. Ch. 532; 82 L. T. 729.

12. Practice—Unstamped documents—Undertaking to stamp—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 14.—Where a solicitor undertakes at the hearing to have a document stamped, such an undertaking is properly given by the solicitor and not by the client, and is a personal undertaking of the solicitor, and will be enforced against him by attachment. — COOLGARDIE GOLD FIELDS, RE, FLEMING, EX PARTE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 461; [1900] 1 Ch. 475; 69 L. J. Ch. 215; 82 L. T. 23.

13. Principal and agent—Revocation of authority by dissolution of defendant company—Notice of revocation—Liability of solicitor to pay plaintiff's costs—Companies Act, 1862, s. 143.—A company had been dissolved by reason of the expiration of three months from the registration of the return made by the voluntary liquidator, to the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies under section 143 of the Companies Act, 1862.

Subsequent to the dissolution of the company, an action against the company, which had been commenced before the dissolution, came on for trial. On the 16th of March, the day of the trial, the solicitor of the company was informed that the final meeting had taken place, but he did not use due diligence to ascertain whether the company was dissolved. Judgment was given against the company.

Held, that the solicitor of the company was liable to pay costs as from the 16th of March.

Whiteley Exerciser (Limited) v. Gamage, 47 W. R. 296, [1898] 2 Ch. 405, distinguished.—SALTON v. NEW BEESTON CYCLE CO., Ch.D. Stirling, J., 92; [1900] 1 Ch. 43; 69 L. J. Ch. 20; 81 L. T. 437.

See also Mortgage, 2, 9; Practice, 9, 21, 29, 30, 51; Settlement, 6.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA, LAW of:—

Covenant—Construction—"Intent to evade payment of duty"—South Australian Succession Duties Act, 1893, ss. 16, 17.—Deceased in his lifetime covenanted to pay £200,000 to his children with interest at 1½ per cent. per annum, the debt being payable at call; he regularly paid the interest, but no portion of the capital.

Held, that the covenant, in absence of evidence to the contrary, conferred on the children complete ownership of the debt and was a non-testamentary disposition of property within section 16 of the South Australian Succession Duties Act, 1893, and not subject to duty under section 17, as the deceased died more than three months thereafter.

Held further, that it was not chargeable with double duty under section 27 as made "with intent to evade the payment of duty hereunder," in the absence of evidence of some device or contrivance for that purpose.—SIMMS v. REGISTRAR OF PROBATES, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 323; 69 L. J. P. C. 51; 82 L. T. 433.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.—See Landlord and Tenant, 17; Vendor and Purchaser, 15, 16, 24-27.

STAMP ACTS.—See Inland Revenue, 22-32.

STATUTE:—

Construction—Permissive or imperative—Water—Rights of adjoining proprietors—Irrigation—Negligence—Common law rights.—Where the statutory provisions enabling a proprietor to irrigate his land from external sources are permissive merely, the right of action of neighbouring proprietors for injury done to their lands consequent upon any such irrigation are preserved; and this is so though the injury was not occasioned by the negligence of the irrigator.—CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY CO. v. PARKE, P.C., 118; [1899] A. C. 535; 81 L. T. 127.

STOCK EXCHANGE:—

1. Defaulter—Assets—Official assignee—Right to sue—Stock Exchange Rules.—Rule 176 of the Rules of the Stock Exchange, which says that the official assignee shall collect the assets of a defaulting member, applies to all his assets without any limitation. The official assignee is, by virtue of the rule, in the position of an equitable assignee of the assets, and, if he has allowed the defaulting member to sell any of the assets as his agent, he can recover the price from the purchasers.

Tomkins v. Saffery, 26 W. R. 62, 3 App. Cas. 213, considered.—RICHARDSON v. STORMONT, C.A., 451; [1900] 1 Q. B. 701; 69 L. J. Q. B. 369; 82 L. T. 316.

2. Principal and agent—Broker lumping several orders in one contract—Liability of principal to jobber on default of broker—Stock Exchange Rules, r. 177.—Defendant employed a firm of brokers on the Stock Exchange to purchase for him shares in a certain undertaking, and instructed them to "carry over" 210 of these shares to the next account. The brokers, having orders from other clients for shares in the same undertaking, purchased by a single contract in their own name 360 of these shares for the next account from the plaintiffs, who were jobbers on the Stock Exchange, and they apportioned in their books 210 of these shares to the defendant. Before the next settling day the brokers were declared defaulters on the Stock Exchange, and, in accordance with the rules of that body, their transaction with the plaintiffs was closed by the official assignee, the price of the shares being fixed at the price then current. Plaintiffs, having ascertained that the brokers were acting for defendant as regarded the 210 shares, tendered those shares to him, and, on his refusal to take them, sold them on the settling day and claimed from the defendant the difference between the contract price and the selling price.

Held, that, since the brokers had lumped defendant's order with the orders of other clients, and had contracted in a single transaction with plaintiffs for the purchase of a larger number of shares than they were authorized to purchase for defendant, no such contractual relation existed between plaintiffs and defendant as would support the action.

Effect of rule 177 of the Stock Exchange Rules discussed.—BECKHUSON & GIBBS v. HAMBLET, Q.B.D.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 18; 69 L. J. Q. B. 431; 82 L. T. 459.

3. Principal and agent—Default of broker—Liabilility of client to jobber—Privity of contract.—The defendant employed a broker to purchase for him certain shares on the Stock Exchange, and afterwards directed him to "carry over" the shares to the next account. The broker, in accordance with the regulations of the Stock Exchange, purchased the shares in his own name from the plaintiffs, who were jobbers on the Stock Exchange, and afterwards carried over with them the same shares. The defendant's name was not disclosed. Before the next settling day the broker was declared a defaulter on the Stock Exchange, and in accordance with the rules of that body his contract with the plaintiffs was closed, and the plaintiffs took back the shares at a price fixed by the official assignee of the Stock Exchange, and known as the "hammer price." The plaintiffs, having ascertained that the broker was acting for the defendant in this transaction, called upon him to take up the shares. He declined to accept any responsibility for them; and the plaintiffs thereupon at once sold the shares for the best price then obtainable, and sued the defendant for the difference between the price at which the shares had been carried over and that at which they had sold them.

Held, that the defendant was liable for this amount, and not merely for the difference between the price at which the shares were carried over and the "hammer price."

Dictum of Kennedy, J., in Beckhuson & Gibbs v. Hamblet, [1900] 2 Q. B. 18, followed and approved. —ANDERSON v. BEARD, Q.B.D.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 260; 69 L. J. Q. B. 610; 82 L. T. 714.

4. Stockbroker—Continuation account—Death of principal—Contracts for sale and repurchase after death—Liability of stockbroker for loss.—Where a stockbroker having a continuation account with a client, on the death of the client, instead of closing the account immediately, upon his own authority enters into a fresh continuation and ultimately effects a sale of the securities at a loss, he is liable for the loss so incurred.—OVERWEG, RE, HAAS v. DURANT, Ch.D. Byrne, J.; [1900] 1 Ch. 209; 69 L. J. Ch. 255; 81 L. T. 776.

See also Bankruptcy, 21, 28.

SUNDAY:—

Sunday trading—Barber—Words ejusdem generis —Lord's Day Observance Act, 1676 (29 Car. 2, c. 7), s. 1.—A barber is not within 29 Car. 2, c. 7.—PALMER v. SNOW, Q.B.D., 351; [1900] 1 Q. B. 725; 69 L. J. Q. B. 356; 82 L. T. 199.

TELEGRAPH:—

1. Prohibition—Laying wires or tubes under a street—Jurisdiction of highway authority—"Difference"—Former jurisdiction of stipendiary magistrate or county court judge to arbitrate—Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), ss. 3, 4—Telegraph Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 59), s. 5.—By the Telegraph Act of 1892 the statutory power which a stipendiary magistrate or county court judge had to hear and determine an appeal from the refusal of a highway authority to permit a telegraph company licensed by the Postmaster-General to break up a street for the purpose of laying wires or tubes, has been rescinded; and the increased power given to such local authorities by that Act to veto the laying down of wires or tubes under any street within their district is now final.—NATIONAL TELEPHONE CO. v. TUNBRIDGE WELLS (MAYOR), Q.B.D., 686.

2. Telephone company—Public street—Licence from Postmaster-General—Right to lay wires—Power to open street—Consent—Person liable for repair—Tramway company—Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), ss. 10, 12, 13—Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), ss. 28, 32.—A telephone company, acting under a licence from the Postmaster-General pursuant to the Telegraph Acts, 1863, 1878, and 1892, need not obtain the previous consent of a tramway company before proceeding to break open a street or public road on which tramway lines are laid for the purpose of laying telephone wires, even though the tramway company is liable for the repair of that street or public road.—BRISTOL TRAMWAYS AND CARRIAGE CO. v. NATIONAL TELEPHONE CO., Ch.D. North, J.; [1899] 2 Ch. 282; 80 L. T. 836.

See also Contract, 17.

TELEPHONE.—See Local Government, 24; Telegraph, 2.

TOLL:—

Private carriage of officer on duty—Exemption—Army Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict c. 58), s. 143.—A private carriage used by an officer on duty, in respect of which he is in receipt of no allowance, is not a carriage employed in her Majesty's military service so as to be exempt from tolls within section 143 of the Army Act, 1881.—CRAIG v. NICHOLAS, Q.B.D.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 608; 82 L. T. 765.

See also Bicycle; Market, 2, 3.

TRADE-MARK:—

1. Disclaimer—Old and new marks—Patents, &c., Acts, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 62, sub-section 2; s. 64, sub-section 2; s. 74; 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 60), ss. 10-16.—If application for registration of an old trade-mark has to be made under sub-section 2 of section 64 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, as amended by the Act of 1888, there is no distinction in reference to disclaimer between new marks and old marks.

Where, under section 62, sub-section 2, application is made to register a trade-mark which was used by the applicant or his predecessors in business before the 13th of August, 1875, it is not necessary in the application to state the names of the members of the firm for the time being since the alleged first user, nor even to insert the words "and their predecessors in business, members of the firm for the time being."—WRIGHT, CROSSLEY, & CO.'S APPLICATION AND ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO. OF NEW YORK, RE, Ch.D. Byrne, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 218; 69 L. J. Ch. 589.

2. Merchandize marks—Auctioneer—Sale of china—Suggestion as to forged mark—Merchandize Marks Act, 1887, s. 2, (2) (c).—An auctioneer, having a suspicion that Dresden china sent to him as genuine to be put up for sale bore a forged trade-mark, told the bidders that he sold the lot "for what it is," thereby suggesting suspicion as to its genuineness in the minds of the buyers.

Held, that the auctioneer acted innocently within section 2, sub-section 2 (c), of the Merchandize Marks Act, 1887.—CHRISTIE v. COOPER, Q.B.D.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 708.

3. Merchandize marks—Sale of goods—Trade description — Implied representation. — Appellant asked for two half-pounds of tea at respondents' shop. The salesman took two packets off the counter, wrapped them in paper, and handed them to the appellant, who paid for them. The appellant afterwards found that though each packet, including its paper wrapper weighed more than a half-pound, the tea in each packet weighed less than half a pound. Upon each packet was a printed statement that its weight, including the wrapper, was half a pound.

Held, that the handing over of the packets by the salesman to the appellant, who had asked for a greater weight of tea than the packets in fact contained, did not amount to a false trade description of the foods so as to bring the case within the provisions of section 2, sub-section 2 (c), of the Merchandize Marks Act, 1887. — LANGLEY v. BOMBAY TEA CO., Q.B.D.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 752.

4. Rectification of register—Mark registered under Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57)—Order to expunge simply—Not subject to application to amend.—Semble, leave should not now be given to amend a bad trade-mark, which was originally registered under the Act of 1883.

The court rejected the owner's contention that an order to expunge his mark, which had been registered under the Act of 1883, should only be made subject to an application to amend being made by him within a reasonable time, but made an order to expunge the mark absolutely.

In re Wills' Trade-Mark, [1893] 2 Ch. 262, 41 W. R. Dig. 252, not followed.—DAY v. RILEY, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 556.

5. Registration — Invented word — Patents. &c., Acts, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 64; 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 50), s. 10 (d).—To be registered as a trade-mark, an "invented word" need not be absolutely new, or invented for the purpose.

The word "Tachytype" had been used as part of the name of a foreign company who had advertised and made communications of patented inventions in their own name in England. An English company were allowed to register the word "Tachytype" as a trade-mark.—LINOTYPE COMPANY'S TRADE-MARK, RE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 238; 82 L. T. 794.

6. Registration — Invented word — "Savonol"— Infringement—Rectification—Registered five years— Certificate of right to exclusive user—Patents, &c., Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 77*a*.—The word "Savonol," being meaningless, is an "invented word," and as such is capable of being registered as a trade-mark for soaps, notwithstanding that the French word "savon" had been used for many years in the soap trade. Even if "Savonol" does suggest "savon" and "soap," it is only a covert or skilful allusion to the character or quality of the goods, and may still be an "invented word." A meaningless affix like "ol" is distinguishable from such terminations as "ette" and "ine," which indicate resemblance.

Eastman's Photographic Materials Co. v. Comptroller-General of Patents, 47 W. R. 152, [1898] A. C. 571, commented on.

Where a motion to rectify the register by the removal of a trade-mark more than five years old is heard together with an action for infringement of the trade-mark as one matter, the court has power under section 77*a* of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, to grant a certificate that the right to the exclusive use has come in question.—FIELD v. WAGEL SYNDICATE, FIELD'S TRADE-MARK, RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 390; [1900] 1 Ch. 651; 69 L. J. Ch. 365; 82 L. T. 231.

7. Registration — Non-user — Non-appearance of proprietor—Removal from register—Service abroad of notice of motion.—A word was registered as a trade-mark in 1891 upon the instructions and in the name of an American giving Chicago as his address, with the name and address of an English firm of patent agents as his address for service. In 1899 an American company applied for the registration of the same word as their trade-mark, they having used it for a long time in America and also more recently in England. This application was objected to by the comptroller, in view of the previous registration. Thereupon inquiries were instituted by the company, the result of such inquiries being that the registered proprietor could not be found to have ever used the mark, or done any business either in America or in England; that he could not be traced in Chicago or elsewhere; that letters addressed to him at Chicago were returned through the Dead Letter Office; and that the patent agents named as the address for service could give no information with respect to him. The company then gave notice of motion to rectify the register by expunging the mark, and left a copy of this notice at the address for service and sent another copy of it in a registered packet to Chicago, accompanied by a letter as directed in In re Compagnie Générale d'Eaux Minérales et de Bains de Mer, 40 W. R. 89, [1891] 3 Ch. 451.

On proof of these facts, and the registered proprietor not appearing, though more than twenty-eight days had elapsed since the dispatch of the packet and letter to Chicago.

Held, that the mark should be expunged.—ASHTON'S TRADE-MARK, RE, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 389.

8. Registration—"St. Raphael"—Geographical name—Descriptive name—Fancy word—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), ss. 64 (1) (c) (2), 74 (a).—The company had registered under the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, as their trade-mark a label upon which the words "St. Raphael" appeared several times. On the application by a rival company to have this mark removed from the register unless a disclaimer of the said words was entered,

Held, that the words, being contained in a distinctive label, registered as a whole under the Act of 1883, need not be disclaimed under section 74, inasmuch as they formed a part of the label and were not additions to it.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (47 W. R. 407), affirmed.—CLEMENT ET CIE.'S TRADE-MARK, RE, C.A., 67; [1900] 1 Ch. 114; 69 L. J. Ch. 52; 81 L. T. 400.

TRADE NAME:—

1. Defendant using his own name—Sale of same to a company—Imitation—Tendency to deceive—Fraud.—A trader, if he is honestly carrying on a business in a particular article, cannot be restrained from using his own real name in connection with that business, because an old-established trader of the same name has made a reputation in a similar but distinct article.

The plaintiffs had long made and sold meat juice, put up in bottles, and used chiefly by invalids, and known on the market by various titles, including "Valentine's" simply. The defendant invented a method of putting up solid meat extract in the form of portable globules, chiefly used by travellers. Before any sales he sold his invention and the goodwill of the business "being created" to the defendant company, bearing his name.

Held, that an action for injunction must fail, as, although there were features of suspicion, want of good faith on the part of the defendants was not established either in the inception of the business or in the sale to the company.—VALENTINE'S MEAT JUICE CO. v. VALENTINE'S EXTRACT CO., Ch.D. Stirling, J., 127.

2. Right to injunction—Colourable imitation of name—What constitutes false representation.—The appellant company, being the transferee of the assets and goodwill of the dissolved Sabiston and Lithographic and Publishing Co., sued to restrain the respondent from carrying on business under the name of the Sabiston Lithographic and Publishing Co., or any other name so framed as to lead to the belief that his business was in succession to that of the dissolved company.

Held, that the respondent had no right so to represent, but that there was no evidence that he had done so, and that the appellants were not entitled to an injunction against the mere use of the name.—MONTREAL LITHOGRAPHIC CO. v. SABISTON, P.C.; [1899] A. C. 610; 81 L. T. 135.

3. Same name—Goods of same class—Misleading the public—Injunction.—In 1895 J. & J. Cash, an old firm at Coventry, was converted into a limited company, J. & J. Cash (Limited), of which the defendant Joseph Cash was one of the directors. He retired in 1898, and set up in the same class of business at Coventry as Joseph Cash & Co.

Held, that, notwithstanding the defendant's surname happened to be Cash, he was not entitled to sell his goods in a manner calculated or likely to mislead or deceive the public into the belief that the business of the defendant or the goods manufactured by him were the business of and goods manufactured by the plaintiffs. Injunction granted.—CASH v. CASH, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 82 L. T. 655

TRADE UNION:—

1. Strike and lock-out—"Watching or besetting"—Interlocutory injunction—Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), sub-section 3, 7—Practice—Joinder of parties—R. S. C., ord. 16, rr. 1, 4, 11.—The eight defendants, who were officials of various trades unions, met men who had been brought over by the plaintiffs under contracts from Ireland to replace workmen on strike, at the railway station of their destination, and persuaded many of them to leave the place or to refuse to work for the plaintiffs. The seven plaintiffs were several master builders and members of a master-builders' association.

Held, (1) that the action was properly constituted, since the seven plaintiffs were suing the eight defendants on one and the same series of transactions and to determine a question of combination; (2) that the acts complained of in two out of the eight cases were a "watching or besetting" within the meaning of section 7 of the Conspiracy Act, 1875; and an injunction was granted in those two cases accordingly.

Charnock v. Court, 47 W. R. 633, [1899] 2 Ch. 35, followed.—WALTERS v. GREEN, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 23; [1899] 2 Ch. 696; 81 L. T. 151.

2. Trade combination—Circular—Interference with business—Inducing persons not to deal with the plaintiffs.—A statement of claim in effect stated that the defendants, in combination with others, had maliciously interfered with the plaintiffs in carrying on their business by issuing a circular asking persons not to deal with them.

It was alleged that the intention of the defendants and other signatories to the circular was to induce print-sellers to refrain altogether from dealing with any print publisher who might sell any goods to the plaintiffs, and to coerce printsellers into refusing to supply the plaintiffs with any goods; that the defendants had so coerced the majority of the printsellers in this country, and that the plaintiffs had suffered damage in consequence.

Held, by Bigham, J. (Phillimore, J., dissenting), that, as an action would not lie against persons who, for their own benefit, combined to induce others to refrain from dealing with a particular person, the plaintiffs' statement of claim disclosed no cause of action, since the acts complained of, if done by an individual, would have been lawful, and they did not become tortious because they were done by several in combination.—BOOTS' CASH CHEMISTS v. GRUNDY, Q.B.D., 638; 82 L. T. 769.

See also [illegible]: Justices, 2.

TRAMWAY:—

1. Corporation—Statutory powers—Construction of electrical tramway — Roadway and pavement — Nuisance—Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 3—Liverpool Corporation Tramways Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. civ.), ss. 36, 37.—The defendants, a corporation purporting to act in the exercise of their powers under their special Tramways Act, which incorporated the Tramways Act, 1870, and authorized the construction of an electric tramway, erected a pole and a fuse-box in the footpath close to the principal entrance of the plaintiffs' premises.

Held, that the defendants' statutory powers authorized them to use the pavement for the purpose of doing that which was necessary for making their tramway an electrical tramway; that the nuisance which the defendants were authorized to commit could not be interfered with unless the plaintiffs could prove that the powers conferred upon the defendants had been abused, which the plaintiffs had failed to do; and that therefore the action could not be maintained.—GOLDBERG v. LIVERPOOL (MAYOR), C.A.; 82 L. T. 362.

2. Metropolis — Purchase by London County Council—Running omnibuses—London County Tramway Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. li.), s. 2.—A county council authorized by statute to purchase and work tramways, purchased certain tramways from a limited company which had, under its memorandum of association, power to run omnibuses in connection with its undertaking. The county council, on taking over the undertaking continued to run omnibuses.

Held, that the county council had no power to apply the county funds in running omnibuses.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 241; 82 L. T. 671.

3. Purchase of undertaking by local authority—Purchase, under special Act, before expiration of twenty-one years—Valuation—Contingency of purchase under Tramways Act, 1870—The Southampton Corporation Tramways Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. cxxvi.), ss. 1, 5.—The Tramways Act, 1870, by section 43, provides that "Where the promoters of a tramway in any district are not the local authority, the local authority . . . may, within six months after the expiration of a period of twenty-one years from the time when such promoters were empowered to construct such tramway . . . require such promoters to sell, and thereupon such promoters shall sell to them their undertaking . . . upon terms of paying the then value (exclusive of any allowance for past or future profits of the undertaking, or any compensation for compulsory sale or other consideration whatsoever) of the tramway and all lands, buildings, works, materials, and plant of the company."

The Southampton tramways were constructed by a company under a special Act passed in 1877. By a special Act in 1897 the Southampton Corporation were empowered to purchase "the undertaking of the company" upon such terms as, in case of dispute, might be settled by "arbitration under and according to the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act."

Held, that, in determining the price to be paid for "the undertaking of the company," the arbitrator should treat the undertaking as one which the company only enjoyed subject to the contingency of being compelled to sell the same under the provisions of section 43 of the Tramways Act, 1870.—SOUTHAMPTON TRAMWAYS CO. v. SOUTHAMPTON CORPORATION, C.A.; 81 L. T. 651.

See also Telegraph, 2.

TRESPASS.—See Highway, 2; Local Government, 3.

TROVER:—

Waiver of tort—Wrongful sale of goods—Joint tortfeasors—Action against one in trover and for money had and received—Compromise by accepting proceeds of sale—Action of trover against the other—Election.—The plaintiff's servant wrongfully sold goods of his master to the defendant, who knew that the servant was improperly dealing with them, and the servant paid the proceeds of the sale into his account at his bank. The plaintiff brought an action against the servant and the bank, claiming as against the servant damages for conversion of the goods, and in the alternative for money had and received, and as against the servant and the bank an injunction to restrain them respectively until the trial of the action from drawing out or parting with the sum of £1,500 then standing to the servant's credit at the bank. The plaintiff applied for an interim injunction as above upon an affidavit that £1,500 at the least could be specifically traced to the servant's account as being moneys paid by the defendant for the goods wrongfully sold. An interim injunction was granted, but no further steps in the action were taken, an agreement being arrived at between the plaintiff and the servant that £1,125 out of the £1,500 then at the bank should be paid to the plaintiff in full settlement of all claims against the servant, without prejudice to the plaintiff's claim against the defendant. This agreement was embodied in a judge's order, but no judgment was signed. Before the agreement was made the plaintiff had brought an action against the defendant claiming damages for the conversion of the goods.

Held, that the plaintiff had not, by his proceedings in the former action and by his dealings with the servant therein, elected to affirm the sale and to waive the tort, and the action against the defendant was maintainable.—RICE v. REED, C.A.; [1900] 1 Q. B. 54; 69 L. J. Q. B. 33; 81 L. T. 410.

See also Banker, 2.

TRUSTEE:—

1. Breach of trust—American securities—One trustee in England and one in America—Delivery of such securities by former to latter—Loss of such securities—Laches—Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59), s. 8.—By his will a testator, who died in 1862, left his residuary estate to G. W. T. and others upon trust for his daughter A. H. T. for life for her separate use, with remainder in the events which happened as she should appoint. G. W. T., who survived the other trustees, died in 1879, having by his will appointed J. T. L. and W. H. S. executors thereof. J. T. L. resided in England and W. H. S. in America. Part of the testator's estate consisted of American securities, which J. T. L. when in America delivered into the custody of W. H. S., who regularly paid the income thereof to A. H. T., then the wife of J. B. A. In 1883 new trustees of the testator's will were appointed in England. Mrs. A. died in 1892, having by her will given her property to her husband. They both recognized W. H. S. as the American trustee. W. H. S. was then pressed to transfer these securities to the new trustees here, which he refused to do, and it then transpired that he had recently made away with them and was insolvent. In an action by the new trustees and J. B. A. against J. T. L. and W. H. S. to render J. T. L. liable for the loss,

Held, (1) that, as against the trustees, section 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888, was a good defence; (2) that as to J. B. A., inasmuch as he might at any time since 1883, when the securities were intact, have brought an action in the name of his wife for the purpose of transferring the securities to the new trustees, and neglected to do so, he was guilty of laches, and could not now recover against J. T. L. —TAYLOR, RE, ATKINSON v. LORD, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; 81 L. T. 812.

2. Breach of trust—Negligence—Immunity clause —Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 17 (3).—A fund consisting in part of a heritable bond was vested in trustees upon trust for a life annuitant and after his decease among the persons entitled in remainder absolutely. The bond was paid off on the 15th of July, 1887, but the trustees allowed their law agent to receive the money and retain it in his hands uninvested for more than six months, when the agent became bankrupt and the greater part of the money was lost.

Held (Lord Morris dissenting), that the trustees were guilty of a positive breach of trust and were liable to replace the money lost.—WYMAN v. PATERSON, H.L. (Sc.); [1900] A. C. 271; 69 L. J. P. C. 32; 82 L. T. 473.

3. Charges for time and trouble—Will—Trustees' remuneration clause.—A will provided that "Any trustee and executor hereunder, being a solicitor or other persons engaged in any profession or business, shall be entitled to charge and be paid all usual professional or other charges for any business done by him or his firm in relation to the management and administration of my estate . . . whether in the ordinary course of his profession or business or not, and although not of a nature strictly requiring the employment of a solicitor or other professional person."

Held, that a trustee was not entitled to charge generally for his time and trouble in the management of the estate, but only for work done in the course of his profession or business.

In re Fish, [1893] 2 Ch. 413, distinguished.—ROBINSON, RE, CLARKSON v. DIXON, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 698.

4. Company—Sale by liquidator—Sale set aside—Interest on rents and profits—Breach of trust—Sale by trustee to himself—Liability of trustee.—Where the sale of an undertaking of a company effected by its liquidator, nominally to another company, but really to himself, had been set aside on the ground of fraud, and the re-transfer of the undertaking to the original company had been ordered,

Held, that the liquidator, being in a fiduciary capacity, should repay the rents and profits which had accrued, but that he was not to be charged with interest on the same.—SILKSTONE HAIGH MOOR COAL CO. v. EDEY, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 137; [1900] 1 Ch. 167; 69 L. J. Ch. 73.

5. Felon—Removal from trusteeship—Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53) s. 25—R. S. C., ord. 55, r. 13a.—The court has jurisdiction on an application by originating summons to make an order for the removal of a trustee who has been convicted of felony, but who is unwilling to retire.—DANSON, RE, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 73.

6. Resulting trust—Fund raised by means of circular inviting subscriptions—Death of objects of the fund—Unapplied surplus—Resulting trust for subscribers.—Where funds are raised by circulars inviting subscriptions, and there is no declaration of trust, on the death of the objects of the fund there is a resulting trust for the subscribers.—ABBOTT FUND TRUSTS, RE, SMITH v. ABBOTT, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 541; [1900] 2 Ch. 326; 69 L. J. Ch. 539.

7. Will—Trust for sale of real estate—"Absolute and unfettered discretion."—A direction to trustees to sell real estate at their absolute and unfettered discretion is not equivalent to a direction that they may sell or not at their absolute discretion; in the first case the time and mode of sale only were in their discretion, but they were not entitled to abstain from following the directions of the will because the tenant for life would then receive a better income; and, in consequence of the difficulty of deciding whether a sale would be beneficial in the interest of the tenant for life and those entitled in remainder regarded as one, the court ordered the application to stand over for three years, with liberty to the trustee to abstain, if he thought fit, from selling during that period, and with liberty for all parties to apply, but so as not to prevent the trustee from selling without application to the court if he considered a sale advisable.—ATKINS, RE, NEWMAN v. SINCLAIR, Ch.D. North, J.; 81 L. T. 421.

See also Administration, 8; Landlord and Tenant, 12; Practice, 9; Settled Land, 8; Solicitor, 10; Vendor and Purchaser, 21, 27; Will, 7, 24, 27.

VACCINATION:—

1. Justices—Non-compliance with order—Evidence of non-vaccination—Burden of proof—Vaccination Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 84), s. 31.—In proceedings under section 31 of the Vaccination Act, 1867, for non-compliance with a vaccination order, the burden of proving non-vaccination lies on the prosecution, and evidence that the fact of vaccination has not been notified to the proper officer is good primâ facie evidence from which non-vaccination may be presumed until the contrary is shown by the defendant.—OVER v. HARWOOD, Q.B.D., 608; [1900] 1 Q. B. 803; 69 L. J. Q. B. 272.

2. Mandamus—Alternative remedy—Legal remedy —Duty of guardians to appoint vaccination officer—Vaccination Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 98), s. 5—The duty imposed upon guardians by section 5 of the Vaccination Act, 1871, to appoint a vaccination officer may be enforced by a writ of mandamus upon the application of the Local Government Board.—REG. v. LEICESTER UNION, Q.B.D.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 632; 81 L. T. 559.

VAGRANT:—

Poor law—Person wilfully refusing or neglecting to maintain himself—Delirium tremens—Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 83), s. 3.—A person who becomes chargeable to a parish or place during an attack of delirium tremens is not on that account a person who, being able to maintain himself, wilfully refuses or neglects so to do.—ST. SAVIOUR'S UNION v. BURBRIDGE, Q.B.D., 685.

See also Justices, 3; Poor Law, 11.

VENDOR and PURCHASER:—

1. Building scheme—Auction sale—Restrictive stipulations—Prior purchaser—Restrictive covenants—Benefit of covenants—Assigns of vendor.—A vendor, the owner in fee of an estate, conveyed part of it to D., who, for himself, his executors, administrators, and assigns, entered into certain restrictive covenants with the vendor, his heirs and assigns. About the same time the vendor conveyed two other portions of the estate to two other purchasers, subject to restrictive covenants similar to D.'s covenants. The vendor subsequently sold the remainder of the estate in lots by auction subject to restrictive stipulations binding on each purchaser similar to D.'s covenants. The auction sale plan showed the whole estate sold and unsold. Action by the assigns of purchasers at the auction sale to enforce against a lessee of an assign of D. the covenants entered into by D. with the vendor. The benefit of these covenants had never been expressly assigned to the purchasers at the auction sale.

Held, that there was a general building scheme affecting the whole estate; that D. was not bound by it for want of reciprocity; but that the plan and particulars of the auction sale raised an irresistible inference that the vendor intended the purchasers at that sale to have the benefit of D.'s covenants so that the purchasers at that sale could enforce D.'s covenants as assigns of the vendor.—NALDER v. HARMAN, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 82 L. T. 594.

2. Conditions of sale—Construction—Liability for expenditure on property—Expense of compulsory sanitary work before completion — Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), ss. 4, 141. —Conditions of sale provided for completion of the purchase on a certain day, and for the apportionment of rents, rates, taxes, and outgoings up to that day, and also in the event of completion being delayed beyond such day for the purchase-money bearing interest, or, at the vendor's option, he to receive the rents up to the day of actual completion of the purchase.

Held, that in the event of completion being delayed beyond the appointed day the vendor had the option of either claiming interest and accounting to the purchaser for rents since the appointed day, or of keeping all sums in fact received by the vendor since that day from tenants; but there being no words expressly relieving the purchaser from the obligation to discharge outgoings after the appointed day, and no ground for inserting anything by implication, the expense of complying with a sanitary notice under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, after the appointed day and after the title having been accepted, must be borne by the purchaser.—BARSHT v. TAGG, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 220; [1900] 1 Ch. 231; 69 L. J. Ch. 91; 81 L. T. 777.

3. Contract—Agreement by vendor to pay commission to undisclosed purchaser's agent—Action on contract by vendor—Claim by purchaser to set off agent's commission.—The plaintiff was the owner of certain mineral rights in British Columbia, and he agreed with one Govan that Govan should have the option of finding a purchaser for the property, and that he would pay him, if successful, 10 per cent. of the price obtained from the purchaser. Govan succeeded in arranging a sale of the property to the defendant syndicate, of which, unknown to the plaintiff at that time, he was a director, and for whom he acted as agent in the transaction. Before the contract was entered into, however, and before the commission had become payable, the plaintiff learned Govan's position with regard to the defendants.

Held, that, the plaintiff having completed the contract without disclosing to the syndicate the agreement to pay commission to their agent, any part of the commission still in the plaintiff's hands could be recovered by the defendants.

By a second agreement between the plaintiff and Govan, made before the commission became due, it was agreed, in consideration of an immediate payment, that Govan should accept a less commission than he was entitled to under the original agreement. The syndicate subsequently became aware of this second agreement, and they demanded and received from Govan, in satisfaction of all claims from him, the amount he had received from the plaintiff.

Held (reversing the decision of Bigham, J.), that the defendants had not lost their remedy by their conduct after they had discovered the real facts of the case. Neither were they bound by the terms of the second agreement between the plaintiff and Govan as to a reduction of the amount of commission; and therefore, notwithstanding that second agreement and their demand and receipt from Govan of the reduced amount of the commission paid him, they were entitled to recover the balance from the plaintiff.—GRANT v. GOLD EXPLORATION Co., C.A., 278; [1900] 1 Q. B. 233; 69 L. J. Q. B. 150; 82 L. T. 5.

4. Contract for sale of lease of public-house—Date of completion—Deposit—Forfeiture—Conditions of sale—Time during which conditions imposed on vendor may be performed.—When a lessee of a house, upon which there is a subsisting mortgage, agrees to assign the residue of his lease, and the purchaser agrees to buy it on the condition that the whole of the mortgage loan is transferred to him, and a deposit is paid by him and a time fixed for the completion of the contract, he is not justified in treating a refusal of the mortgagee, prior to the date fixed for completion, to transfer the whole, but only a part, of the loan as entitling him, the purchaser, to at once treat the contract as at an end, for the vendor has until the date fixed for the completion of the contract in which to obtain the consent of the mortgagee.—SMITH v. BUTLER, C.A., 583; [1900] 1 Q. B. 694; 69 L. J. Q. B. 521; 82 L. T. 281.

5. Conveyance—"All estate, term, and interest . . . in land coloured red in plan"—Covenant for title—Damages—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 7, sub-section 1 (a).—A conveyance expressed to be supplemental to a "principal agreement," wherein the vendor, "as beneficial owner," assigned and conveyed "all the estate, term, and interest . . . in the said piece of land coloured red in the said plan annexed to the said principal agreement, and a copy of which is annexed hereto," is a covenant by the vendor that he has the interest given to him by the principal agreement in the land coloured red.

Where the vendor has not all the land coloured red in the plan, he is liable to make good the damage which the purchaser suffers by the deficiency.—MAY v. PLATT, Ch.D. Farwell, J. 617; [1900] 1 Ch. 616; 69 L. J. Ch. 357.

6. Conveyance—Land inclosed by purchaser in excess of parcels — Mistake — Expenditure — Acquiescence — Compensation—Costs.—A purchaser in 1895 took possession of land in excess of that puported to be conveyed to him, and inclosed the land with a wall.

In 1899 the vendors brought an action for declaration of title.

Held, that the defendant was bound to give up so much of the land as did not pass by his conveyance; he was not entitled to compensation for his expenditure thereon; there was a duty on the part of the vendors under the conditions of sale to mark out the plots, which in this case they had not done, therefore there would be no order as to costs.—MARRIOTT v. REID, Ch.D. Kekewich, J. 82 L. T. 369.

7. Conveyance—Parcels—Misdescription in deed—Evidence—Survey.—A. was in possession of two contiguous estates, M. and P. In 1872 he sold M. to the respondents, and a survey was made on behalf of both parties to determine the boundary between M. and P., and the respondents thenceforward occupied the lands of M. as determined by the survey.

In 1881 the estate of P. was sold to the appellants and in 1896 he commenced proceedings to establish that the respondents were occupying as part of the estate of M. lands which were really part of the estate of P.

It appeared that on measuring up the acreage of the plots of land specifically mentioned in the deeds as forming part of M., they were found to be less than the land actually occupied by the respondents.

Held, that the measurements in the deeds did not affect the title of the respondents to the lands included in the conveyance to them as determined by the contemporary survey.—BARNARD v. DE CHARLEROY, P.C.; 81 L. T. 497.

8. Covenant—Restrictive covenant—Covenant running with the land—Intention—User—Restriction on number of houses—Private dwelling-house—Residential flats.

Held (1) that when the benefit of a covenant has once been clearly annexed to a piece of land, it passes by assignment of that land, and may be said to run with it, as well in contemplation of equity as of law, without proof of special bargain or representation on the assignment; (2) that the erection of a block of flats is a breach of a covenant not to erect more than one messuage or dwelling-house on a piece of land; and (3) that such erection is also a breach of a covenant not to use such messuage otherwise than as a private residence.

Decision of Farwell, J. (ante, p. 202), affirmed as to (1) and (2), but reversed as to (3).—ROGERS v. HOSEGOOD, C.A., 659.

9. Covenant — Restrictive covenant — Meaning of "house" — Flats. — The term "house" in a restrictive covenant in a conveyance on sale prohibiting the erection of more than a certain number of houses on a certain piece of land, will be construed, in the absence of indications to the contrary, as being equivalent to a block of flats, but not to each single flat.—KIMBER v. ADMAMS, C.A., 322; [1900] 1 Ch. 412; 69 L. J. Ch. 296; 82 L. T. 136.

10. Covenant—Restrictive covenant—Noxious or offensive trade — Business of fish-frying — Trade necessarily offensive.—In an action to restrain a defendant from carrying on a fish-frying business in contravention of a covenant not to use his premises "for carrying on any offensive trade whatsoever,"

Held, that the business, although not necessarily offensive, must, having regard to its nature, the locality, and the manner in which it was carried on, be considered an offensive trade within the meaning of the covenant.—DEVONSHIRE (DUKE) v. BROOKSHAW, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 81 L. T. 83.

11. Covenant—Restrictive covenant — Windows—"Buildings adjoining."—Vendors sold and conveyed land, retaining adjacent land. The purchaser covenanted, "in the erection of buildings adjoin-the hereditaments of the vendors," not to insert windows overlooking their land. He nevertheless built houses with windows which did so overlook. Between the houses and the land of the vendors were gardens belonging to the purchaser, several yards long, and a fence.

Held, that the houses "adjoined" the land of the vendors within the meaning of the covenant. —IND v. HAMBLIN, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 238; 81 L. T. 779.

12. Covenant—Undisclosed restrictive covenant—Notice—Form of conveyance—Summons—Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78), s. 9.—A vendor is not entitled to insert in the conveyance to the purchaser restrictive covenants or stipulations not expressly provided for in the contract. In determining such a question upon a summons under section 9 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, it is not within the intention of that section that the court should be influenced by extraneous considerations, such, for instance, as the vendor's right to rescind the contract on the ground of mistake, or the fact that in omitting such restrictive covenants from his conveyance the vendor will be committing a breach of some other contract. The true intention of that section is to provide that distinct and isolated questions between the vendor and purchaser on the matters therein mentioned may be raised and determined in a summary way as and when they arise, and not to enable a general declaration as to title to be made.—WALLIS AND BARNARD'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 57; [1899] 2 Ch. 515; 81 L. T. 382.

13. Covenant not to use as an inn or beerhouse—Acquiescence in sale—Waiver.—Acquiescence for a long period of years in the use of freehold premises in a manner inconsistent with the purpose of a restrictive covenant contained in the conveyance will amount to a waiver or release of the covenant.

Gibson v. Doeg, 6 W. R. 107, 2 H. & N. 615, followed.—HEPWORTH v. PICKLES, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 184; [1900] 1 Ch. 108; 69 L. J. Ch. 55; 81 L. T. 818.

14. Freeholds—Sale by executors—Executor named but not proving — Concurrence — Disclaimer — Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), Part I.—Real estate under section 1, sub-section 1, of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, devolves to and becomes vested in all the executors named in the will who survive the testator, and in order that the legal estate may pass on a conveyance by the executors who have obtained probate, it is necessary for those executors to whom power to prove the will has been reserved, either to expressly disclaim or to concur in such conveyance.—PAWLEY AND LONDON PROVINCIAL BANK'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch D. Kekewich, J., 107; [1900] 1 Ch. 58; 69 L. J. Ch. 6; 81 L. T. 507.

15. Glebe—Contract for sale by vicar—Entry by purchaser—Payment of interest on purchase-money — Non-payment of principal — Ecclesiastical Commissioners — Action by — Specific performance — Vendor's lien—Ecclesiastical Leasing Acts, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 108) and 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 57).—In 1873 a vicar, with the approval of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners and with the consent of the patron of his living, agreed to sell the glebe lands of the vicarage under the powers of the Ecclesiastical Leasing Acts, 1842 and 1858, for £24,963, to the trustee of a settled estate who had power to invest trust funds in the purchase of land.

The contract was entered into with the consent of the then tenant for life of the settled estate, and the Ecclesiastical Commissioners were parties to and executed it.

The title was accepted and the then tenant for life entered into possession, and paid the vicar interest on the purchase-money. The vicar died, the estate devolved, and payment of the interest (which was more than an investment of the purchase-money would have produced) was continued by the tenant for life for the time being to the vicar for the time being until 1896, when, the purchase-money being still unpaid, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners brought an action against the present vicar, the tenant for life, and the legal personal representatives of the trustee, for specific performance of the contract and damages, or an account and a declaration that they were entitled to a lien on the lands and to enforcement thereof.

Held, that the contract was not enforceable against any person or persons subsequently becoming entitled to the estate; that the vendors were not entitled, by subrogation or otherwise, to be placed in the same position as the trustee would have been in had he personally discharged his liability on the contract, nor could they claim payment out of any assets in the hands of the trustees liable to be laid out in land or distributed in payment of portions to the relief of the settled estate; and that they were entitled to nothing more than a vendor's lien on the land sold.—ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSIONERS v. PINNEY, Ch.D. Byrne, J.; [1899] 2 Ch. 729; 69 L. J. Ch. 139; 81 L. T. 536.

16. Leaseholds — Assignment of public-house — Covenant by lessee not to assign without lessor's consent —Consent unreasonably withheld—Forcing title on purchaser—Specific performance—Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78).—The lessee of a public-house contracted to sell the lease to a brewery company. The lease contained a covenant that the lessee would not assign, underlet, or otherwise part with the demised premises without the written consent of the lessor, but that such consent should not be unreasonably withheld. The lessor refused to consent chiefly on the ground that he wished to retain the house as a "free house."

Held, that the vendor had not made out a sufficient title which could be forced on the purchaser.—MARSHALL AND SALT'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 508; [1900] 2 Ch. 202; 69 L. J. Ch. 542.

17. Leaseholds—Sale subject to consent of lessor—Duty of vendor to obtain consent—Vendor inducing lessor to refuse—Measure of damages.—When a lessee whose lease prohibits assignment without the written consent of the lessor enters into an agreement, expressed to be subject to the lessor's consent, to sell the property, he is bound to do his best to obtain such consent. If the vendor does not perform that duty, and still more if he actually induces the lessor to refuse, he is liable to an action for damages in which the purchaser may recover not only his deposit with interest and costs, but also damages for the loss which he has sustained owing to the vendor's omission to obtain the required consent.

Bain v. Fothergill, 23 W. R. 261, L. R. 7 H. L. 158, distinguished.

In such a case, if it appears that the vendor has made no effort to obtain the lessor's consent, it will be presumed against him that he could have procured it; and it is then for him to prove that he could not have induced the lessor to accept the purchaser as a tenant.—DAY v. SINGLETON, C.A., 18; [1899] 2 Ch. 320; 81 L. T. 306.

18. Leaseholds—Title—Assignment of lease recited, but not abstracted in chief—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 3, sub-section 6—Expense of verification of abstract.—A vendor contracted to sell two leasehold houses held under separate leases. An assignment of one of the leases to an intermediate assignee was not abstracted in chief in the abstract of title, though it was recited in the abstract of a subsequent assignment in the same abstract of title.

Held, that the assignment must be abstracted in chief and verified at the vendor's expense.—STAMFORD BANKING CO. v. KNIGHT, Ch.D. North, J., 244; [1900] 1 Ch. 287; 69 L. J. Ch. 127; 81 L. T. 708.

19. Party wall — Adjoining owners — Implied contract to pay half cost of party wall.—A building society, who were the mortgagees of a building estate, joined with the mortgagor in selling a site on the estate to a purchaser; the conveyance contained a covenant by the purchaser to perform the building and other conditions in the schedule, one of which was that the purchaser first building a party wall should be repaid half the value by the purchaser of the adjoining site. The purchaser, having built a house on the site, mortgaged it to the building society, who subsequently under their power of sale sold it to the plaintiff. At a later date the building society, in exercise of their power of sale under the original mortgage of the building estate, sold the residue of the estate to a company, who in their turn sold to the defendants a site adjoining the plaintiff's house, the agreement of sale containing a similar (though not verbally identical) condition as to party walls to that above mentioned. The defendants built a house on their site, making use for that purpose of the plaintiff's party wall, half of which (as provided by the building conditions) was built on the plaintiff's, and half on the defendants', land.

Held, that the circumstances raised an implied contract on the part of the defendants to pay half the cost of the party wall to the plaintiff as the owner of the adjoining house, notwithstanding that the wall had in fact been built by the plaintiff's predecessor in title.—IRVING v. TURNBULL, Q.B.D.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 129; 69 L. J. Q. B. 593.

20. Principal and agent—Sale by agent—Authority —Contract for sale.—An authority given by the owner of land or houses to an agent to sell them is primâ facie an authority to make a sale effectual in point of law, including the execution of a contract in writing where the law requires it.—ROSENBAUM v. BELSON, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 522; [1900] 2 Ch. 267; 69 L. J. Ch. 569; 82 L. T. 658.

21. Rescission—Common mistake—Settled land—Capital moneys.—A tenant for life sold a public-house, portion of a settled property. After conveyance it was found that the public-house was subject to a reversionary lease, granted by the predecessor in title of the tenant for life, of which all parties were ignorant.

Held, that this did not furnish any ground for rescission.

But held, applying the principle of Bennett v. Wyndham (4 De G. F. & J. 259), that the repurchase of the public-house by the trustees out of capital moneys in their hands might be sanctioned.—TYRELL v WOODHOUSE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; 82 L. T. 675.

22. Reversionary interest—Expectant heir—Unconscionable bargain—Sales of Reversions Act, 1867 —Reversioner of "full age and full intelligence."—Where the plaintiff sold a share in a reversionary interest, to which he was entitled, for such a sum that the interest on the expectation was about 10 per cent., although the plaintiff was of full age and of full intelligence, and had written a letter prior to the sale showing that he understood the exact nature of the bargain into which he was about to enter,

Held, that the onus was on the defendent to show that there had been no unconscionable bargain.—BRENCHLEY v. HIGGINS, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; 82 L. T. 143.

23. Sale by order of the court—Purchaser for value without notice of superior title—Conveyancing Act 1881 (44 & 45 Vict c. 41), s. 70, sub-section 1.—An order of the court under the Conveyancing Act 1881, s. 70, sub-section 1, which purports to dest with property belonging to the vendor, which turns out not to be his, does not confer a good title on the purchaser.

Decision of Romer, J. (47 W. R. 493), affirmed. —JONES v. BARNETT, C.A., 280; [1900] 1 Ch. 370; 69 L. J. Ch. 242; 82 L. T. 37.

24. Specific performance—Open contract—Restrictive covenants—Compensation.—In the case of an open contract the court will not decree specific performance with compensation where a vendor has entered into an open contract to sell property which, unknown to the vendor, is subject to restrictive covenants, and where there is no condition in the contract as to compensation, as to decree specific performance with compensation in such a case would be making a new contract, and not enforcing the one which the parties agreed to.

The very great difficulty in assessing compensation in such a case is another ground for refusing such relief.—RUDD v. LASCELLES, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 586; [1900] 1 Ch. 815; 69 L. J. Ch. 396; 82 L. T. 256.

25. Specific performance—Payment by instalments —Purchaser's repudiation of contract before last instalment—Acts amounting to—Right to recover money paid.—The plaintiff was the purchaser and the defendant was the vendor of certain land under a written agreement providing for payment of the purchase-money by certain instalments. By this agreement if the purchaser made default in payment of any instalment for thirty days the whole price was to become immediately due, but provision was made for this time being extended by agreement; and in the event of default being made for thirty days in payment of the whole of the unpaid instalments with interest the vendor was empowered to resell. The plaintiff took possession under this agreement and paid all the instalments except the last one; the defendant requested payment of it, but did not give the plaintiff notice that if it was not paid he would treat the contract as abandoned. The plaintiff then disappeared. More than a year afterwards the defendant let the property to B. with an option to purchase, and B. was now in possession. The plaintiff, having returned, thereupon made an offer to the defendant to "make the final instalment and settlement of the ground purchased," which offer was refused.

The plaintiff then brought an action for specific performance of the above agreement and damages, or alternatively damages for breach of contract and repayment of the purchase-money with interest. The claim for specific performance was practically abandoned at the hearing.

Held, that the plaintiff had not, in fact, by his conduct repudiated his contract; and the defendant was not justified in treating the contract as abandoned; and that the plaintiff was entitled to damages, but not to specific performance.

Decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. (ante, p. 42, [1899] 2 Ch. 710), reversed.—CORNWALL v. HENSON, C.A.; [1900] 2 Ch. 298; 69 L. J. Ch. 581; 82 L. T. 735.

26. Specific performance—Property used as a disorderly house—Rescission of contract.—Property sold by auction under the description of an eligible freehold property for investment, comprising a house and shop let on a quarterly tenancy, was discovered before completion to be used by the tenant as a disorderly house. Neither the vendors nor the purchaser knew previously that the house was being improperly used. The agreement of tenancy contained a covenant by the tenant not to use the house as a disorderly house, and a proviso for re-entry in case of breach of covenant.

Held, (1) (reversing Cozens-Hardy, J., 47 W. R. 479, [1899] 1 Ch. 879) that specific performance ought not to be granted, inasmuch as the purchaser, unless he took steps to prevent the improper use of the property by the tenant, would become liable as lessor to criminal proceedings under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, by reason of the state of the property at the time of the sale; (2) (affirming Cozens-Hardy, J.) that this was not a ground for rescission of the contract.

Lucas v. James, 7 Hare 410, distinguished.—HOPE v. WALTER, C.A.; [1900] 1 Ch. 257; 69 L. J. Ch. 166; 82 L. T. 30.

27. Specific performance—Title—Trustee for sale who has purchased from himself—Effect of intermediate executory contract of sale to third party.—Specific performance of a contract for the sale of land will not be enforced where the title disclosed by the vendor was a previous purchase made by him, from himself selling in the character of a trustee for sale.

A trustee cannot adopt for his own benefit an executory contract to purchase to which he is a party as vendor.

Parker v. McKenna, L. R. 10 Ch. App. 96, approved.—WILLIAMS v. SCOTT, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 499; 82 L. T. 727.

See also Contract, 10; Easement, 6; Frauds, Statute of, 3; Local Government, 18; Practice, 40; Settled Land, 4.

VOLUNTARY GIFT:—

Misrepresentation—Inducement of gift—Right of donor to recover back gift.—Where a voluntary gift is obtained by means of an innocent misrepresentation of fact on the part of the donee, the donor on discovery of the mistake has a right in equity to recover his gift.

Wilson v. Thornbury L. R. 10 Ch. App. 239, not followed.—GLUBB, RE, BAMFIELD v. ROGERS, C.A.; [1900] 1 Ch. 354; 69 L. J. Ch. 278; 82 L. T. 412.

WAIVER.—See Bankruptcy, 8; Company, 14; Landlord and Tenant, 19; Master and Servant, 8; Trover; Vendor and Purchaser, 13.

WASTE.—See Landlord and Tenant, 27; Will, 25, 26.

WATER:—

1. Canal—"Waste water"—Wrongful abstraction of water—Damages for tort—Waiver of tort—Profits in lieu of damages.—In 1792 power was obtained by a company of proprietors to construct the A. Canal, and provision was made for the waste water of that canal passing into a tunnel belonging to the Duke of B. which was connected with the B. Canal.

In 1794 power was given to a company by an Act of that year to construct the R. Canal, and to connect the same with the B. Canal. Provision was made for the A. Canal making a junction with the R. Canal at a specified place, and it was provided that the waste water of both canals when so joined together should be afterwards conveyed into the duke's tunnel. By the same Act the owners of lands within twenty yards of the R. Canal were empowered to draw therefrom such quantities of water as should be sufficient to supply steam engines with cold water for the sole purpose of condensing steam used for working such engines.

By a further Act of 1800 it was provided that all the waste water of the A. Canal, except such as should necessarily flow over the waste weirs of that canal, should be discharged into the R. Canal, and that the waste water so discharged and the waste water of the R. Canal, when so united in the said canal, should be at all times conveyed either into the B. Canal or into the duke's tunnel at the expense of the R. Canal Co.

Since 1830 the R. Canal Co. had supplied water from their canal to works situate alongside the canal for purposes other than condensing steam, the quantity being stated to be many millions of gallons per week.

In 1885 the plaintiffs under statutory powers acquired the B. Canal, with the statutory obligations of maintaining and keeping it in good working order and condition and of preserving the supplies of water thereto, so that the canal might at all times be kept open and navigable for the use of all persons desirous to navigate and use the same without any unnecessary hindrance, interruption, or delay.

The plaintiffs brought an action for an injunction to restrain the alleged illegal abstraction and sale of water from the R. Canal by the defendants, and an account of profits and damages.

The plaintiffs contended that they had the right to waive the tort which had been committed and elect to affirm what had been done and take the profits made by the defendants in lieu of damages.

Held, that, as the defendants were a canal company and not a waterworks company, the true meaning of "waste water" in the statutes was water not legitimately needed for navigation purposes, or flowing over the waste weirs, or supplied for the purpose of condensing steam, and which would in the ordinary course pass down into and subsequently become the united water of the R. Canal and the A. Canal.

Held, therefore, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the injunction claimed by them, and an inquiry in respect of damages.—MANCHESTER SHIP CANAL CO. v. ROCHDALE CANAL CO.; C.A.; 81 L. T. 472.

2. Riparian owner—Right to flow of water—Water flowing in defined channel—Artificial construction at source of spring—Local authority—Public well—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55).—The fact that the issuing point of a spring has at some remote period been built round and over in order to improve its issuing from the earth will not justify any interference with the water at its source, whereby its natural flow will be diminished.

Dudden v. Clutton Union, 1 H. & N. 627, 5 W. R. C. L. Dig. 242, followed.—MOSTYN v. ATHERTON, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 168; [1899] 2 Ch. 360; 81 L. T. 356.

3. Waterworks—Metropolis—Fire hydrants—Right of company to use—User for extinguishing fire—User for other purposes—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), ss. 3, 37-43—Metropolitan Fire Brigade Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict c. 90), s. 32—Metropolis Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), s. 34—London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxii.), s. 4.—A waterworks company which, under statutory obligation, has provided hydrants at the request, and maintained and repaired them at the expense, of the London County Council, and which, by the various statutes above referred to, is bound to provide a supply of water for extinguishing fire and for certain other specified purposes, and to allow all persons to use the water for extinguishing fire without making compensation, may use the hydrants for other purposes in addition to the supply of water for extinguishing fires, and such additional user may take place without the consent of the London County Council, and the right may, with the permission of the water company, be exercised by other persons.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. EAST LONDON WATERWORKS CO., Q.B.D., 252; [1900] 1 Q. B. 330; 69 L. J. Q. B. 304; 82 L. T. 268.

4. Waterworks—Recovery of arrears of water rate — Bankruptcy — Adjudication — "Owner and occupier"—"Incoming tenant"—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 53—Metropolis Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), s. 48.—A trustee in bankruptcy who takes over the bankrupt's premises is an "incoming tenant" within the meaning of section 48 of the Metropolis Water Act, 1871, and is entitled to a supply of water without being obliged to defray the arrears of water rate left unpaid by the bankrupt.—FLACK, RE, BERRY, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 446; [1900] 2 Q. B. 32; 69 L. J. Q. B. 458; 82 L. T. 503.

See also Local Government, 20; Statute.

WAY.—See Contract, 4; Easement, 3-6.

WEIGHTS and MEASURES:—

1. Barrel used as measure — No facility by local authority for verification and stamping—Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), ss. 29, 44.—A local authority are not precluded from prosecuting a person for using a measure not stamped in conformity with section 29 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878, by reason of having failed to fix times and places for verifying and stamping weights and measures in accordance with section 44 of the same Act.—HAYLEY v. TAYLOR, Q.B.D.; 82 L. T. 803.

2. False or unjust weighing machine—Weighing tea—Paper bag stuck into weighing machine—Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), s. 25.—In order to facilitate and quicken the process of weighing out tea into small packets the respondent's servants placed a piece of paper, of somewhat less than the weight of the wrapper, in the weighing machine between the scoop in which the tea was and the cup which supported it, and kept it there while the tea was being weighed. The machine without the piece of paper weighed true, but with the piece of paper placed in the position described it weighed untrue.

Held, that the weighing machine was false or unjust within the meaning of section 25 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878. — LANE v. RENDALL, Q.B.D., 153; [1899] 2 Q. B. 673; 68 L. J. Q. B. 8; 81 L. T. 445.

WILL:—

1. Accumulations—Direction to accumulate—Rents and royalties from mining leases—Tenants for life—Remaindermen.—A testator devised his residue upon trust to convert with power to postpone conversion for twenty-one years and with a direction that the surplus income of the unconverted estate during the twenty-one years and all accumulations thereof should go in augmentation of capital. The residue was settled on trusts for tenants for life and remaindermen. The trustees under powers in the will granted a mining lease, and retained the leasehold property unconverted for more than twenty-one years.

Held, that the rents and royalties received under the mining lease during the twenty-one years ought to be invested, and that the income therefrom ought to be invested and accumulated.

Held, also, that after the twenty-one years the tenants for life of settled shares in the residue were entitled to receive out of the rents and royalties such an annual sum as in the opinion of the court would under all the circumstances of the case be a fair equivalent for the annual income that would have resulted if the estate had been converted.

The rule laid down in Meyer v. Simonsen, 5 De G. & Sm. 723, and Brown v. Gellatly, L. R. 2 Ch. 751, approved.—WENTWORTH v. WENTWORTH, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 163; 69 L. J. P. C. 13; 81 L. T. 682.

2. Ademption—Gift by testator within the period of twelve months prior to his death of property to legatee—Advancement—Sum to be brought into account—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 2, sub-section 1 (c); s. 9, sub-section 1.—Where a gift inter vivos of property by a testator to a legatee constitutes an ademption pro tanto of the legacy to such legatee under the will, the sum to be brought into account by such legatee is the amount advanced less the estate duty charged on such gift.—BEDDINGTON, RE, MICHOLLS v. SAMUEL, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 552; [1900] 1 Ch. 771; 69 L. J. Ch. 374; 82 L. T. 557.

3. Ademption—Specific legacy.—A testatrix by her will, made in February, 1897, gave a moiety of a trust fund of £8,000 on deposit at V. & Co., to which she was entitled, subject to a prior life interest, to her nephews and nieces. She bequeathed her residue, including money at her bankers and on deposit with V. & Co., to S. M. M.

In March, 1897, the prior life interest determined; and on the 14th of December, 1897, £4,000 was transferred by the trustee to the testatrix's deposit account with V. & Co.

Held, that the plain rule in cases of ademption was to inquire whether the specific thing given remained or not at the death of the testator. Here the £4,000 (the moiety of the trust fund of £8,000) was intact, and was not ademed either in whole or in part.—VICKERS v. MELLOR, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 81 L. T. 719.

4. Construction—"Die unmarried"—Secondary meaning.—Testatrix by her will directed her trustees to divide a certain fund between two beneficiaries if her brother "shall die unmarried and without leaving any children or a child who shall attain twenty-one years." The brother died leaving a widow, but no child, surviving him.

Held, that, in this case, the words "die unmarried" meant "die without leaving a wife," and that there was, therefore, an intestacy.—CHANT, RE, CHANT v. LEMON, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 646; [1900] 2 Ch. 345; 69 L. J. Ch. 601.

5. Construction—"Eldest son" entitled to possession—A will limited successive life estates in Blackacre to members of a class, other than and except an eldest or only son for the time being entitled to the possession or receipt of the rents of Whiteacre as tenant for life or a greater estate. A tenant in tail in remainder of Whiteacre joined with his father, the tenant for life, in a sale of which he had the benefit.

Held, that on the death of his father he became an eldest son within the exception, and incapable of succeeding to a life estate in Blackacre under the limitations of the will.—SHUTTLEWORTH v. MURRAY, Ch D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1900] 1 Ch. 795; 69 L. J. Ch. 423; 82 L. T. 668.

6. Construction—Gift of real estate to A., but, should she die without child or children, gift over—Executory limitation—Conveyancing Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 39), s. 10.—A gift of real estate to A. for her absolute use—but, should she die without child or children, then over—vests in A. an absolute interest subject to an executory limitation over in the event of her not having any child who survives her or attains twenty-one years during her life.—BOOTH, RE, PICKARD v. BOOTH, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 566; [1900] 1 Ch. 768; 69 L. J. Ch. 474.

7. Construction—Trust for sale—Trustee's indemnity and reimbursement clause—Unexhausted residue—Resulting trust.—A gift of property to trustees on trust for sale, followed by the declaration of a particular trust which does not exhaust the whole of the property thus given, will be treated as creating a primary general trust of the whole of such property, so that there be will a resulting trust of the unexhausted residue in favour of the testator's heir and next-of-kin. The insertion of a trustee's indemnity and reimbursement clause will further strengthen the conclusion thus drawn from the presence of the trust for sale.—WEST, RE, GEORGE v. GROSE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 138; [1900] 1 Ch. 84; 69 L. J. Ch. 71; 81 L. T. 720.

8. Construction — Vesting — Remoteness — Maintenance.—A testator bequeathed £12,000, to be invested within ten years after his decease, upon trust for his daughter for life, then, as to £1,000, part thereof, for her husband for life, and subject thereto for all the children of the daughter, when they should attain twenty-five, but not before, in equal shares; and until the £12,000 should be invested, the testator directed the trustees to pay to his said daughter, or, in the event of her decease, to her said husband and children, interest on "their respective portions." In default of children the fund to form part of the residue. He bequeathed another sum of £12,000 upon similar trusts for another daughter, her husband, and children. The residue he devised and bequeathed to his two sons absolutely in equal shares. The testator empowered his trustees to raise any part (not exceeding one moiety) of the expectant share of any grandchild of his under his will, and apply it for the advancement of such grandchild. He also empowered them to apply all or any part of the income arising from the expectant share of such grandchild, after the death of the tenant for life, for the maintenance and education of such grandchild.

By a codicil the testator revoked the gift of one moiety of his residuary estate to one of his sons, and directed that such moiety should be held on trust for his said son during his life, and after his death for the child or children of his said son absolutely on attaining twenty-five. In the event of a child dying before attaining twenty-five, such child's share was to go to the testator's other son absolutely.

Held, that the children of the son and of the two daughters took under the will vested interests in their shares, and that, therefore, the gifts to them were not void for remoteness.

Fox v. Fox, 23 W. R. 314, L. R. 19 Eq. 286, approved. — TURNEY, RE, TURNEY v. TURNEY, C.A., 97; [1899] 2 Ch. 739; 69 L. J. Ch. 1; 81 L. T. 548.

9. Conversion—Bequest to trustees for the benefit of certain persons and their children—Direction to carry on testator's business—"Household furniture and effects"—Whether including jewellery, horses, and carriages.—A testator gave all his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust as to one-fourth part for the children of A. E. L., as to another fourth for A. B. F., as to another fourth the income thereof to P. H., and as to the remaining fourth for W. H., in each case for their lives, and he declared that if any of them died without issue their share should form part of his residuary estate. And he gave his household furniture, books, pictures, painting, engravings, plate, linen, china, and other effects to the said A. B. F. and P. H. in equal shares. On an originating summons asking (1) what estates and interests in the estate were taken by the above-mentioned persons, and (2) whether the testator's jewellery and horses were included in the above-mentioned gift of furniture and other effects, Held, (1) that the rule in Howe v. Lord Dartmouth, 7 Ves. 137, was not applicable to any share except that given upon trust for P. H., and that the testator having directed his trustees to carry on his business the beneficiaries other than P. H. were entitled to the profits thereof as they arose; (2) that following the rule in Parker v. Marchant, 1 Y. & C. Ch. 290, the word "effects" must be limited to things of the same kind as previously enumerated. That the jewellery therefore did not, but that the carriages and horses did, fall under that description. —HAMMERSLEY, RE, HEASMAN v. HAMMERSLEY, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; 81 L. T. 150.

10. Devise of real estate—Subsequent conveyance to testator—Revocation of devise by operation of law.—A testator, by his will made in 1832, devised certain freehold property which he had contracted to purchase, but the purchase of which had not been completed at the date of the will, and all other his real estate wheresoever and whatsoever, to his three sons in manner therein mentioned. In 1834 the property which the testator had contracted to purchase was conveyed to him in fee to uses to bar dower. In 1835 the testator died.

Held, that the conveyance of 1834 operated as a revocation of the devise in the will of the freehold property so conveyed.—JACOB v. JACOB, H.L.; 82 L. T. 270.

11. Evidence—Ambiguity—Admission of extrinsic evidence.—In endeavouring to construe a will, extrinsic evidence is admissible in order explain an ambiguity in the words of the will themselves, but not in order to explain the intention of the testator.

A testator, after giving the usual direction as to the payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and after bequeathing a number of general pecuniary legacies, gave and bequeathed "all the residue and remainder" of two specific mortgage funds, after payment of his just debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, to certain persons therein mentioned. There was no general residuary bequest. Extrinsic evidence was offered to show that the testator possessed at the time of his making his will no residuary property out of which to provide for the general pecuniary legacies already referred to. It appeared, however, that at the date of his death the testator possessed residuary property sufficient for the purpose in question.

Held (Rigby, L.J., dissenting), that, as a matter of fact, the words of the will, "all the residue and remainder" were themselves ambiguous; that extrinsic evidence was accordingly admissible to show the state of the testator's property at the time of his making his will; that the general pecuniary legacies were payable out of the mortgage funds; and that there was an intestacy with respect to the residuary property which the testator had at the date of his death.

Per Rigby, L.J.—The words of a will are not themselves ambiguous unless, after full consideration, it is determined judicially that no interpretation whatever can be given them.—GRAINGER, RE, DAWSON v. HIGGINS, C.A., 673.

12. Estate tail—Fee expectant in remainder on termination of estate tail—Direction to trustees to convey—Construction—Intestacy—Heir by purchase or by descent.—A testator who died in 1815 by his will gave an equitable estate tail in certain lands to his daughter, and after her death directed his trustees (in whom was the legal estate) to legally convey the said lands unto such heirs of his daughter as should attain twenty-one, and to their several and respective heirs. The testator's daughter died without having barred her estate tail, leaving a son who attained twenty-one. He died in 1894 intestate and unmarried.

Held, that this grandson of the testator took an estate in fee simple under the will, and therefore his heir-at-law was entitled to the property.—FOXWELL v. VAN GRUTTEN, H.L., 653; 82 L. T. 272.

13. Estate tail — Intention — Revocation — Construction of will—Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 28.—A testator by his will devised his fee simple estates to trustees to give the rents to S. M.; but in case S. M. encumbered the lands or rents at any time the testator revoked the gifts of the rents "from S. M. and from his heirs male," or should S. M. not forfeit the same and should "die without male issue him surviving," he bequeathed the rents and estates to R. M. and his issue male in tail male,

Held, that upon the true construction of the whole will the testator's intention was clear that S. M. should take an estate tail.

Decision of Irish Court of Appeal, [1899] 1 I. R. 359, affirmed.—CRUMPE v. CRUMPE, H.L.; [1900] A. C. 127; 69 L. J. P. C. 7; 82 L. T. 130.

14. International law—Conflict of laws—Unattested will—Valid according to French law—Bequest of leaseholds in England—Lex rei sitæ—Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26).—The will of a foreigner domiciled abroad, though valid according to the lex domicilii, and though admitted to probate in England, will not pass leaseholds in England unless executed in accordance with the formalities required by the Wills Act.—PÉPIN v. BRUYÈRE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 671.

15. International law—Foreign domicil of testatrix—Capacity to dispose of property—Power of appointment—Exercise by will.—A domiciled Frenchwoman having, under an English settlement, a special power of appointment by will over funds in England, can exercise the power in such a way as to dispose of the property in a manner inconsistent with her position under the law of France. The exercise of such a power is not a disposition of property belonging to the testatrix.—POUEY v. HORDERN, Ch D. Farwell, J.; [1900] 1 Ch. 492; 69 L. J. Ch. 231; 82 L. T. 51.

16. International law—Power of appointment in English will—Execution of power by will of French domiciled alien—Domicil—Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), ss. 9 10, 27—Lord Kingsdown's Act (Domicil) (24 & 25 Vict. c. 114)—Naturalization Act, 1870 (33 Vict. c. 14).—M. F., the wife of a French subject domiciled in France, was the donee under an English will of a power of appointment of a fund of £2,000. By her holograph French will she declared that she bequeathed to her husband everything which she possessed or might possess, and declared that the will should be considered in England the same as in France. She had no other property but the fund in question. The will had been admitted to probate and letters of administration had been granted with the will annexed.

Held, that it was competent for her to exercise the power of appointment by such a will as was recognized by the Probate Division; that, as the law of France did not recognize the mode of disposition by appointment, and a French court would consider and apply the English rules of law applicable to the construction of such a will for the purpose of carrying out the intention of the testatrix, such rules were to be applied here, with the result that there was a valid execution of the power.

D'Huart v. Harkness, 13 W. R. 513, 34 Beav. 324, followed.

In re Kirwan's Trusts, 32 W. R. 581, 25 Ch. D. 373, and Hummel v. Hummel, 46 W. R. 507, [1898] 1 Ch. 642, considered.—PRICE, RE. TOMLIN v. LATTER, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 373; [1900] 1 Ch. 442; 69 L. J. Ch. 225; 82 L. T. 79.

17. International law—Pre-nuptial will—Subsequent marriage of testator—Revocation—Domicil—Adoption of foreign matrimonial régime by express or inferred agreement—Wills Act, 1837, s. 18.—The validity of a pre-nuptial will, so far as it affects movable property, depends not only on the law of the domicil of the testator at the time of his death, but also on the law of his domicil at the time of his making his will and at the time of his subsequent marriage; but the domicil of the testator on each of these occasions must be determined by the English Court of Probate in the English sense —i.e., according to those legal principles which are recognised in this country and are part of its law.

To acquire an English domicil in the English sense, not only is a change of residence and place of business required, but there must be an intention to adopt the new residence permanently or for an indefinite period.

According to international law as understood and administered in England, the effect of marriage on the movable property of spouses depends primâ facie on the domicil of the husband in the English sense at the time of the marriage; and, even assuming that it is possible for the parties to accept in this respect by express agreement (e.g., by marriage settlement) a matrimonial régime different from that of the country of the husband's domicil at the time of the marriage, yet no such intention ought to be circumstantially inferred in the absence of such express agreement.

Per Vaughan Williams, L.J.—The rule that a pre-nuptial will is revoked by the subsequent marriage of the testator is part of the matrimonial régime of England.

Decision of Jeune, P. (68 L. J. P. 106), reversed. —MARTIN, RE, LOUSTALAN v. LOUSTALAN, C.A., 509; [1900] P. 211; 69 L. J. P. 75; 82 L. T. 806.

18. "Issue"—"Children"—Construction of will. —Where in a deed, will, or other document a word has a clear and definite meaning when used in one part, but has not when used in another, the presumption is that the word is intended to bear the same meaning in the latter case as in the former.

Twelve distinct legacies contained gifts over to the "issue" of legatees dying in the testator's lifetime. Except in the case of the eleventh legacy, the gift over in each contained words clearly restricting "issue" to "children." In the eleventh case the gift over to "issue" contained no words of restriction whatever.

Held (reversing Kekewich, J., 47 W. R. 374, [1899] 1 Ch. 703), that the restriction of "issue" to "children" applied to the gift over in the eleventh legacy as well as to the gifts over in the other legacies.—BIRKS, RE. KENYON v. BIRKS, C.A.; [1900] 1 Ch. 417; 69 L. J. Ch. 124; 81 L. T. 741.

19. Mortgage—Mortgagee in possession—Devise by mortgagee of mortgaged property.—Where a mortgagee in possession devises the mortgaged estate as if he were absolute owner thereof, the mortgage debt passes to the devisee unless, on the facts, a contrary intention can be gathered.

In re Clowes, 41 W. R. 69, [1893] 1 Ch. 214, distinguished.—CARTER, RE. DODDS v. PEARSON, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 555; [1900] 1 Ch. 801; 69 L. J. Ch. 426; 82 L. T. 526.

20. Name and arms clause—Use of surname.—A devisee was directed to assume and use a prescribed surname "alone or together with" his own family name.

Held, that the use by the devisee of the prescribed surname before his own family name was a sufficient compliance with the direction.—EVERSLEY (LORD), RE, MILDMAY v. MILDMAY, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 249; [1900] Ch. 96; 69 L. J. Ch. 14; 81 L. T. 600.

21. Residuary devise—Gift of "all other my freehold" property—Restriction as to tenure—Wills Act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 25.—A testator devised all other his freehold messuages and tenements at W. and elsewhere.

Held (following the decision in Springett v. Jenings, 19 W. R. 575, L. R. 6 Ch. 333), that this was not a residuary devise, there being no gift of copyholds.

A gift restricted as to tenure is not, any more than a gift restricted as to locality, a residuary gift. — MASON, RE, OGDEN v MASON, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 493; [1900] 2 Ch. 196; 69 L. J. Ch. 475; 82 L. T. 554.

22. Residuary devise and bequest—Settlement—Power of revocation and new appointment—Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 27.—The principle that a general devise and bequest does not operate under section 27 of the Wills Act, 1887, as an exercise of a power of revocation and new appointment applies to the case where the power of revocation and new appointment is that contained in the instrument originally creating it, as well as to the case where the power is that reserved by an appointment made in exercise of the original power.—GOULDING'S SETTLEMENT, RE, DOBELL v. DUTTON, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 183.

23. Reversionary interest—Gift to persons in succession—Absolute gift subject to executory limitation—Enjoyment in specie.—Testator gave by his will all his property to his wife; by a codicil, which recited that M. was the adopted daughter of himself and his wife, and that he was desirous of providing for her in the event of his wife dying without issue leaving her surviving, be directed that in such event the gift in his will in favour of his wife should take effect as if the name of M. had been substituted therein for that of his wife. Part of the testator's estate consisted of a reversionary interest in a trust fund.

Held, that the testator intended the property to be enjoyed in specie and that the reversionary interest ought not to be sold.

Howe v. Lord Dartmouth, White & Tudor L. C. 68, distinguished.—BLAND, RE, MILLER v. BLAND, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; [1899] 2 Ch. 336.

24. Secret trust—Joint tenants—Notice to one only. —A secret trust of property bequeathed absolutely to two persons as joint tenants communicated only to one of them is not binding upon the other, unless it is made upon the faith of an antecedent promise by the one to whom the communication is made.—STEAD, RE, WHITHAM v. ANDREW, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 221; [1900] 1 Ch. 237; 69 L. J. Ch. 49; 81 L. T. 751.

25. Tenant for life—Full and absolute control—

Waste—Timber—Proceeds of sale.—By his will G. P., who died in 1884, devised an estate to his wife M. E. P. for life with remainder to his brother F. P. in fee. M. E. P. was appointed sole executrix with full and absolute control over all the testator's property during her life. F. P. died in 1892, having by his will settled the estate subject to the life interest on the plaintiff in tail male with remainder over. M. E. P. having cut and sold timber, including oak, ash, and elm of twenty years of age and upwards, this action was brought claiming a declaration that this constituted waste and for an injunction.

Held, that on the true construction of the will the words "with full and absolute power over all my property" did not render the defendant dispunishable for waste, but merely conferred large powers of management. That the defendant had committed waste which did not fall within the exceptions in Honywood v. Honywood, 30 L. T. Rep. 671, and Dashwood v. Magniac, [1891] 3 Ch. 306, and was not justified by such powers of management. That the defendant was only entitled to cut timber in a due course of management for the benefit and preservation of the estate, and must account for the proceeds of sale that had taken place.—PARDOE v. PARDOE, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; 82 L. T. 547.

26. Tenant for life and remainderman—Leaseholds—Permissive waste—Liability of tenant for life.—Where a claim was made by a legal remainderman against the estate of a deceased legal tenant for life on account of dilapidations on a freehold and leasehold estate,

Held, that in spite of covenants to repair, the estate of the tenant for life was not liable.—PARRY AND HOPKIN'S ARBITRATION, RE, Ch.D. North, J., 345; [1900] 1 Ch. 160; 69 L. J. Ch. 190; 81 L. T. 807.

27, Tenant for life and remainderman—Power for trustees to postpone conversion—Power of management—Direction as to income of unconverted property—Property not yielding income.—If a discretionary power to trustees to postpone conversion is coupled with a direction that the tenant for life is to have the income of unconverted property, the rule in Howe v. Lord Dartmouth, 7 Ves. 137, is excluded by virtue of such direction, and the trustees can, in exercise of their discretion, postpone the conversion even of property that does not yield any income, so that the remaindermen are benefited at the expense of the tenant for life.

The discretionary power of the trustees is, however, only a power of management, and cannot be exercised so as to affect the rights of beneficiaries, except in the course of the management of the estate as a whole.

Where, therefore, the only item of outstanding estate consisted of a reversion to a sum of Consols set apart under a previous will to answer an annuity to the tenant for life,

Held, that the representatives of the tenant for life were entitled to be recouped the income which the tenant for life would have enjoyed if such reversion had been sold in her lifetime, inasmuch as the trustees had not in fact exercised their discretion, and could not properly—having regard to the state of the testator's property—have exercised their discretion, by postponing the conversion if their attention had been directed to the matter.—ROWLLS v. BEBB, C.A., 562; [1900] 1 Ch. 107; 69 L. J. Ch. 562; 82 L. T. 633.

See also Administration, 1, 2, 4, 6, 7; Charity, 3; Inland Revenue, 7, 8; Limitation Statutes, 1, 5; Power, 1, 4, 5; Probate, 11-17; Settled Land, 8; Trustee, 3, 7.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.—See Master and Servant, 1-28.

[THE END.]

Stanford Law Library
3 6105 063 511 633